"Immigration" is About Democrat Senators Rigging Elections To Pad Their Bank Accounts

By Susan Crisp

Why don't the Republicans simply state the obvious out loud: Nancy Pelosi gets paid $170,000.00 per year to do her job yet she gets $84,000,000.00 per year from insider stock trading and crony cash for rigging government funds. The more immigrants that can be shipped in to pump the vote for Pelosi, the richer Pelosi and her friends get!

Comedian Lee Camp on his show Redacted Tonight recalls the first-ever audit of the Pentagon, which is taking 2,400 auditors to do the job, trying to understand where $21 trillion in unsupported adjustments went. In his show, Camp recalled that a couple of years ago professor Mark Skidmore of Michigan State University heard Catherine Austin Fitts, former Assistant Secretary in the Department of Housing and Urban Development, say that the Department of Defense Inspector General had found $6.5 trillion worth of unaccounted for spending by the Army in 2015. Skidmore, being an economics professor, thought â she meant $6.5 billion and not $6.5 trillionâ, because â trillion would mean the Pentagon misplaced more money than the Gross Domestic Product of the whole of the United Kingdomâ (UKâs GDP $2.62 trillion), Camp said. â So he looked into the Inspector Generalâs report and he found something interesting: it was 6.5 trillion dollars!â

Skidmore and Catherine Austin Fitts did more digging and conducted a search of government websites. They found similar reports dating back to 1998. These documents indicate $21 trillion in unsupported adjustments that had been reported for the DoD and Housing and Urban Development for the years 1998 -2015. â If you make 40,000 USD a year, how long would it take you to make one trillion dollars? It would take you 25 million years, which sounds like a long time, but once you get past the ten million mark, it really flies by,â Camp noted.

As Forbes magazine pointed:

Somebody might have crucial details. FBI veteran John Giacalone served as executive assistant director of the FBI from June 2014 through February 2016, working from the Washington, D.C., headquarters. His Linkedin profile indicates that during this period he â manage[d] the strategic risks associated with the FBIâs counterterrorism, counterintelligence and weapons of mass destruction programs in close coordination with domestic and international partners.â

Giacalone was also centrally involved in the FBI investigation into Clintonâs mishandling of classified information â a serious felony crime â and he resigned suddenly, for reasons not yet fully understood. Evidence now tumbling into the public domain suggests Giacalone may have exhausted his tolerance for a rigged inquiry late in January 2016.

Five days before the Iowa caucuses, on Wednesday, Jan. 27, 2016, a mysterious visitor arrived at FBI offices in Washington, D.C., â to present evidence of Hillary Clintonâs misuse of classified documents by putting them on an unclassified email system.â

The male visitor was described as: â a long-time government employee [who] had previously worked for many years at the Department of State. He provided a rÃ©sumÃ© and a U.S. Foreign Service Employee Evaluation Report to prove his bona fides.â Neither the name of the visitor nor that of the recorder of the FBI Vault report, starting on page 11, are known.

The document was written on Feb. 22, 2016, 26 days after the unscheduled visit, approved by another as yet unidentified person, and copied to Jonathan C. Moffa, Peter P. Strzok II, and a fourth unidentified person. The named individuals are controversial, and the delay between the date of the visit and the date of the report is odd, all of which needs to be fully investigated.

Additional details contained in the report and still unreleased portions of FBI Vault records likely will help explain why John Giacalone resigned. â READ MORE

James Woods: Letter From a Twitterham Jail

Conservative actor James Woods was put in Twitter jail last week over his posting of a meme back in July that mocked beta male Democrats. Twitter is demanding he delete the tweet to get reinstated, which Woods refuses, on the grounds of Free Speech, to do. Twitter claims the meme includes text and imagery that has the potential to be misleading in a way that could impact an election.

James Woods with Sara Miller at the Writers Guild Awards West Coast, February 19, 2017, image via YouTube.

On Saturday Woods's friend and acting spokeswoman on Twitter, Sara Miller, posted a letter by Woods from the Twitterham jail., For those asking, Jimmy sent out this email to his friends today. He hasn't made any press statements, this expresses his feelings on the matter. #FreeJamesWoods @RealJamesWoods

â Sara Miller (@Millerita) September 23, 2018

Woods closed his letter with this message:

â The reason I'm sending this to you is that, liberal or conservative, I know every single one of you agrees that this muzzle on free speech is a cancer that, if allowed to metastasize, will destroy this nation and everything it stands for.â

Full text of Woods's letter and image below.

First let me say how much I cherish each of you to whom this email is addressed. It saddens me that more people can't be like us â politically diverse, yet friends and defenders of each other's beliefs and opinions. That to me is what America is fundamentally about. It is also about a standard of ethics and human values that we all embrace and promote in our daily affairs. I love you all and I admire you for that and for who you are as people and artists and citizens of the world. I mean this with all sincerity. Today I am not in the mood for jokes.

The facts are that I was banned from Twitter yesterday because of an anonymous complaint referencing a tweet I posted in July (yes, the Stasi mentality lives on in the Twittersphere, it seems). Henceforth my 1.7 million followers will no longer hear my views. The purge of conservatives continues unabated on social media (and yes, it was because I posted a sarcastic remark about Democrats).

The offending tweet was included in the email from Twitter Support. It is attached below for your reference.

The good news, I guess, is that liberals (Jack Dorsey, Twitter's CEO, is an unabashed ultra liberal) are now closer to their nirvana of a world without criticism or opposition.

The bad news is they will inevitably be next.

The reason I'm sending this to you is that, liberal or conservative, I know every single one of you agrees that this muzzle on free speech is a cancer that, if allowed to metastasize, will destroy this nation and everything it stands for.

Please feel free to share this email.

Here is the offending tweet:

Notice to Woods from Twitter suspending his account:

Hello: We received a report about one of your tweets which includes text and imagery that has the potential to be misleading in a way that could impact an election.

In order to use your account again you will need to log in and delete the tweet.

Woodsâ€™ Twitter account is still online, but inactive since September 20.

A Federal criminal law (18 USC 208) says that you cannot work on Government matters that will have an effect on your own personal financial interests. Even though this law exists, Department of Energy Bosses including Steven Chu had an unjust means benefit relationship with law firms that lobbied to get him his job at DOE, Silicon Valley insiders who benefitted and California politicians who schemed and profited in the deals

Stock in a company that would be affected by your job is only one example of something that could give you such an interest. For instance, you may not act on something that would enable you personally to share in some grant or contract issued by the Government, because you would have a financial interest in those matters.

You also must be concerned about the financial interests of your spouse, your minor children, and outside persons or businesses that employ you. You should be concerned if anything you are asked to work on would affect them. Also, if you are an officer or director of an outside organization, you may not act on a Government matter that would affect that organization.

If you think you have a conflict, you should discuss it with your supervisor or your ethics official so that steps can be taken to prevent the conflict. This might include not working on the Government matter, selling stocks, or obtaining a special waiver from the Department, if legally permitted. Remember, this is a criminal statute.

Some Conflicts to Avoid, for example

Rachel's husband works for a Tesla who does business with the DOE and receives a bonus, based on the success of the contract. Rachel may not participate in the evaluation of the contractor's performance under the contract, yet she does. Rachel should go to federal prison but Dianne Feinstein, who's family owns an interest in Tesla and Solyndra, will protect her.

Carlo is an officer in a neighborhood improvement organization that has applied to his agency for a rehab loan. Carlo may not work on his agency's review of the organization's application.

Helen's husband owns a janitorial service company that does business with the Government. Helen cannot act on a proposal by the company to provide services to her agency

THE CORRUPT SENATORS OWNED BY SILICON VALLEY'S BIG TECH - HARRIS, FEINSTEIN, PELOSI

Corrupt political families conspire to give government funds, contracts, tax waivers, buildings, stock market profits and other insider perks to themselves and their friends. They also conspire to blockade, harm, sabotage and black-list those who compete with them and their friends. These corrupt politicians are never prosecuted for their crimes, and can laugh in the face of those who point out their crimes, because they control the prosecution system. Their Quid Pro Quo criminal corruption is the single largest cause of the taxpayer hatred of Congress.

Shoshana Zuboff's, The Age of Surveillance Capitalism - Why Twitter, Google, Facebook, Instagram, YouTube, Alphabet are the SAME Thing, The SAME SICKO tech elites and the same kinds of social privacy RAPE against citizens!

---- The corruption is easy to prove with a simple spread-sheet but the corrupt Senators have done everything they can to keep you from seeing that spread-sheet.

---- If you saw the spread-sheet that shows all of the covert family bank accounts, fake trust funds, shell companies and stock market accounts for Dianne Feinstein, Harry Reid, Nancy Pelosi, etc.; you can easily see how they only get a salary of $190K per year but put hundreds of millions of dollars in their accounts that all traces back to special interest groups that tell them what laws to make and what laws to stop from moving forward. Forensic accountants at the GAO, FBI or SEC can pop out the latest update on any given day.

---- WITH A COURT ORDER â WE CAN PRESENT DETAILED DOCUMENTS ACCOUNTING FOR EVERY CENT IN EVERY ACCOUNT THAT IS CONNECTED TO NANCY PELOSI, DIANNE FEINSTEIN, EVERY MEMBER OF THEIR FAMILY AND THE KICK-BACKS AND INSIDER TRADING THAT PRODUCED THOSE FUNDS!

---- These Senators have â rulesâ that delay investigations against themselves, though. Also, as we all saw from the Comey case: Corrupt Senators can even tell the head of the FBI who to NOT investigate! The 2008 and 2021 â Stimulus Fundsâ were just scams cooked up by politicians for them to skim stock market pump-and-dump profits off of and grab personal payola.

---- In all these corruption cases, these corrupt people took the same steps to conceal their assets. They each took the money in secret ways. The main ways are 1.) via Dark Money stealth political funds; 2.) bribes paid via insider trading (notice that most of these crooks marry an investment banker to run their dirty schemes) and 3.) getting government contracts, loans and grants for their friends that they get kick-backs from. They then had their dirty law firms and CPAâs shove the money into their standardized covert financial structure to hide it.

---- They use family members to run the operation. Their dirty family members and lawyer/CPA teams cover up their tracks. They then have intermediaries spend the money to get them islands, yachts, mansions, hookers, Tesla's, etc.

--- The 2008 and 2021 stimulus funds are quid pro quo scams to pay off political insiders. We reported these crimes (with FBI-class evidence) to every law enforcement agency in writing (FBI, DOJ, SEC, IG, FTC, OSC, FEC, etc.). apparently, citizens are ignored if the crimes involve politicians and their billionaires.

---- The cover-ups are off-the-charts!

---- these mobsters (Google, Tesla, Facebook, LinkedIn, Netflix, In-q-tel, Kleiner Perkins, Greylock, etc; acting in a coordinated, collusion-based, operation) are paying billions of dollars of political bribes (via cash, real estate, sex trafficking, pacs, search engine rigging, crony jobs, biased censoring, campaign funds, stock market manipulations, ukrainian money laundering, etc.) to delay justice and blockade our, and your, rights! There can be no question about the fact that Google, Facebook, Netflix, Tesla and the Silicon Valley Cartel control the Obama and Biden White House.

---- For example: Elon Musk ordered the politicians who are his bitches to sabotage his competitors. He gave those political insiders: cash, stock in his cartel, revolving-door jobs, campaign funding, sex workers, off-shore money laundering, and other quid pro quo. Eric Schmidt, Larry Page, Mark Zuckerberg, and the rest of the tech mob, all worked together on these crimes.

---- The hacks and leaks of their documents prove it. Government agency bosses are covering up these crimes to protect their jobs and their corrupt stock market holdings. Musk and Goldman Sachs have gotten over FIFTEEN BILLION DOLLARS of free taxpayer cash and monopolized exclusives to pay for Musk's drugs, sex parties and mansions. This is one of the largest violations of anti-trust laws in history. The politicians and agencies that are supposed to stop him are getting money from him. Musk exists entirely from quid pro quo bribes! Musk's banks, including Deutsche Bank, have had to pay more than $100 million to settle charges related to violating anti-bribery laws and engaging in money laundering. While the Musk-controlled media bloviate on the god-like image of Musk, he and his buddies are just crooks and mobsters. -

--- It is now almost impossible for the public to reach any media source that is not controlled by the Silicon Valley Cartel via synchronized talking points. Politicians who say that their only motivation is to save the helpless billionaire Elon Musk and his unicorns: 1.) sabotage any companies who are not making Tesla's, 2.) have sex with Tesla lobbyists and bankers, 3.) own the stock in Tesla Motors, 4.) are venture capital partners in Kleiner Perkins (ie: Gore) and Greylock capital insiders, 5.) trade revolving door jobs with the Elon Musk cartel, 6.) gave Musk over $15B of free taxpayer money, 7.) get campaign financing from Musk, 8.) order government agencies to freeze funding for Musk's competitors, 9.) and engage in a vast number of other corruption and anti-trust crimes.

---- U.S. Senators, Agency Heads and Congress are bribed by Google intermediaries with: Billions of dollars of Google, Twitter, Facebook, Tesla, Netflix and Sony Pictures stock and stock warrants which is never reported to the FEC; Billions of dollars of Google, Twitter, Facebook, Tesla, Netflix and Sony Pictures search engine rigging and shadow-banning which is never reported to the FEC; Free rent; Male and female prostitutes; Cars; Dinners; Party Financing; Sports Event Tickets; Political campaign printing and mailing services; Donations; Secret PAC Financing; Jobs in Corporations in Silicon Valley For The Family Members of Those Who Take Bribes And Those Who Take Bribes; Consulting contracts from McKinsey as fronted pay-off gigs; Overpriced Speaking Engagements which are really just pay-offs conduited for donors; Private jet rides and use of Government fuel depots (ie: Google handed out NASA jet fuel to staff); Real Estate; Fake mortgages; The use of Cayman, Boca Des Tores, Swiss and related money-laundering accounts; The use of HSBC, Wells Fargo, Goldman Sachs and Deutsche Bank money laundering accounts and covert stock accounts; Free spam and bulk mailing services owned by Silicon Valley corporations; Use of high tech law firms such as Perkins Coie, Wilson Sonsini, MoFo, Covington and Burling, etc. to conduit bribes to officials. This will never end unless the public demands laws to prevent all politicians, and their families, from owning ANY stock market stocks or securities!

---- There are hundreds of millions of people in America. The same 120 of them are all involved in operating the same crimes and corruption including: the Sony Pictures corruption; the Afghanistan rare earth mine scandals operated through The Energy Department political slush fund that involves the lithium battery cover-ups (headed by Elon Musk); the Big Tech Brotopia rape, sex trafficking, bribery, exclusionism, racism and misogyny issues they were taught at Stanford University; The Facebook â Meta â Google â Alphabet â Netflix, et al, coordinated news manipulation and domestic spying that they engage in; the hiring of Fusion GPS â Black Cube â Gizmodo/Gawker assassins; the destruction of the housing market by their mass real estate manipulations; patent theft and industrial espionage; and the bribery of almost every politician all the way up to the Oval Office.

----So, while the categories covered in this investigation may seem diverse. They are connected through an enterprise of criminality and illicit, coordinated operations. We list, by name, the 120 most complicit individuals organizing these crimes, in the evidence documents already submitted to the FBI, FINCEN, DOJ, FTC, SEC, FEC, Congress, InterPol and other authorities. Digital financial tracking of those persons and all of their family members should be assumed to have been under way for some time. Wire-taps and device taps of those persons and all of their family members should be assumed to have been under way for some time.

The corruption is easy to prove with a simple spread-sheet but the corrupt Senators have done everything they can to keep you from seeing that spread-sheet. ---- INSIDER TRADING with layered stock market payola is the top bribe method for politicians, these days!

---- If you saw the spread-sheet that shows all of the covert family bank accounts, fake trust funds, shell companies and stock market accounts for Dianne Feinstein, Harry Reid, Nancy Pelosi, etc.; you can easily see how they only get a salary of $190K per year but put hundreds of millions of dollars in their accounts that all traces back to special interest groups that tell them what laws to make and what laws to stop from moving forward. It is now almost impossible for the public to reach any media source that is not controlled by the Silicon Valley Cartel via synchronized talking points.

---- Politicians who say that their only motivation is to "save" the helpless billionaire Elon Musk and his unicorns: 1.) sabotage any companies who are not making Tesla's, 2.) have sex with Tesla lobbyists and bankers, 3.) own the stock in Tesla Motors, 4.) are venture capital partners in Kleiner Perkins (ie: Gore) and Greylock capital insiders, 5.) trade revolving door jobs with the Elon Musk cartel, 6.) gave Musk over $15B of free taxpayer money, 7.) get campaign financing from Musk, 8.) order government agencies to freeze funding for Musk's competitors, 9.) and engage in a vast number of other corruption and anti-trust crimes. -

--- U.S. Senators, Agency Heads and Congress are bribed by Google intermediaries with: Billions of dollars of Google, Twitter, Facebook, Tesla, Netflix and Sony Pictures stock and stock warrants which is never reported to the FEC; Billions of dollars of Google, Twitter, Facebook, Tesla, Netflix and Sony Pictures search engine rigging and shadow-banning which is never reported to the FEC; Free rent; Male and female prostitutes; Cars; Dinners; Party Financing; Sports Event Tickets; Political campaign printing and mailing services "Donations"; Secret PAC Financing; Jobs in Corporations in Silicon Valley For The Family Members of Those Who Take Bribes And Those Who Take Bribes; "Consulting" contracts from McKinsey as fronted pay-off gigs; Overpriced "Speaking Engagements" which are really just pay-offs conduited for donors; Private jet rides and use of Government fuel depots (ie: Google handed out NASA jet fuel to staff); Real Estate; Fake mortgages; The use of Cayman, Boca Des Tores, Swiss and related money-laundering accounts; The use of HSBC, Wells Fargo, Goldman Sachs and Deutsche Bank money laundering accounts and covert stock accounts; Free spam and bulk mailing services owned by Silicon Valley corporations; Use of high tech law firms such as Perkins Coie, Wilson Sonsini, MoFo, Covington and Burling, etc. to conduit bribes to officials. This will never end unless the public demands laws to prevent all politicians, and their families, from owning ANY stock market stocks or securities! -

--- There are hundreds of millions of people in America. The same 120 of them are all involved in operating the same crimes and corruption including: the Sony Pictures corruption; the Afghanistan rare earth mine scandals operated through The Energy Department political slush fund that involves the lithium battery cover-ups (headed by Elon Musk); the Big Tech Brotopia rape, sex trafficking, bribery, exclusionism, racism and misogyny issues they were taught at Stanford University; The Facebook - Meta - Google - Alphabet - Netflix, et al, coordinated news manipulation and domestic spying that they engage in; the hiring of Fusion GPS - Black Cube - Gizmodo/Gawker assassins; the destruction of the housing market by their mass real estate manipulations; patent theft and industrial espionage; and the bribery of almost every politician all the way up to the Oval Office.

---- So, while the categories covered in this investigation may seem diverse. They are connected through an enterprise of criminality and illicit, coordinated operations. We list, by name, the 120 most complicit individuals organizing these crimes, in the evidence documents already submitted to the FBI, FINCEN, DOJ, FTC, SEC, FEC, Congress, InterPol and other authorities. Digital financial tracking of those persons and all of their family members should be assumed to have been under way for some time. Wire-taps and device taps of those persons and all of their family members should be assumed to have been under way for some time.

The social horror that â Silicon Valleyâ became is just a bubble of social abuse waiting to burst. Letâ s count down the days until it finally implodes.

---- All Of Silicon Valley needs to be â KILLED OFFâ without breaking a single law. They can never be fixed. Itâ s easy to do with one simple, 100% legal, weapon: THE TRUTH! -

--- Said one Bay Area developer: â These crooks donâ t get to buy private jets, sex islands, multiple mansions, throw celebrity parties and buy hookers with MY money! If they are making big bucks off my technology, I get my percentage of what they spied on, copied and theived or they get exposed for what they are. I will bring the FBI, DOJ, CIA, FTC, SEC, FEC, FINCEN, 60 Minutes and Congress, along with my team, to help take them downâ !â

---- PAYBACK IS A BITCH FOR BIG TECH COMPANIES THAT USED THEIR BUSINESS FRONTS TO OPERATE: BRIBES TO CONGRESS, TAX-EVASION, SEX-TRAFFICKING, PATENT THEFT, ELECTION MANIPULATION, SHADOW-BANS, EMPLOYEE SEXSTORTION, OFF-SHORE MONEY LAUNDERING, STOCK MARKET MANIPULATION, BLACKLISTS, MONOPOLIES AND, WORST OF ALL, HIRED FUSION GPS, BLACK CUBE, IN-Q-TEL AND MEDIA MATTERS TO RUN ILLEGAL HIT-JOBS ON THEIR COMPETITORS! ISNâ T IT INTERESTING THAT EVERY SINGLE ATTACKER HAS LOST BILLIONS OF DOLLARS IN STOCK VALUATION?

---- KARMA? PAY-BACK? HMMMMMMâ !??? : BREAKING NEWS LINK: HA- HA -HA! THE EXACT SAME COMPANIES THAT STOLE SCOTT'S STUFF AND THEN VIOLATED HIS ANTI-TRUST PROTECTIONS ARE GETTING NAILED! KARMA - KARMA- KARMA! TECH VALUES CHOPPED AS PALO ALTO'S CORRUPT MEDIA EMPERORS FOUND TO HAVE NO CLOTHES ---- BREAKING NEWS LINK: How The Sick Pervert Billionaires Boys' Club Came To Dominate The Public Square And Rig Elections

---- STOCKS DEADLY UGLY AS SILICON VALLEY CARTEL TURNS OUT TO BE ALL HYPE AND NOTHING OF REAL VALUE

---- THE SILICON VALLEY MAFIA COORDINATE THEIR CRIMES VIA SAND HILL ROAD INSIDERS AND THAT VIOLATES RICO AND MONOPOLY LAWS!

---- Silicon Valley has had the largest number of Congressional hearings against it, the largest number of consumer complaints in American history BUT the least number of regulations imposed on it. Why? You can look no further than the covert ownership of Silicon Valley by elected officials. Our politicians get paid bribes, by Silicon Valley, to keep the political corruption alive-and-well while they operate, with impunity, as the biggest threats to society ever manifested.

---- Politicians protect Silicon Valley and allow them to keep doing crimes!

---- WHAT CRIMES ARE WE UPSET ABOUT SILICON VALLEY DOING?: Silicon Valley is producing child suicides, racism, misogyny, child mental health threats, domestic spying, data harvesting, sex trafficking, election manipulation, tax evasion, Fusion GPS/Media Matters/ Black Cube hit jobs on competitors, censorship, contrived market monopolization, intellectual property theft, political bribery and many other crimes! Why? Because crime paysâ !for corrupt U.S. Senators!

---- â EVERY SINGLE ENTITY THAT ATTACKED US HAS LOST A MINIMUM OF A BILLION DOLLARS OF STOCK MARKET VALUATION OR GONE BANKRUPT! â -

--- YOU CAN KILL ANY CORRUPT ENTITY WITH: â THE TRUTHâ !

---- In the Age of Transparency, also known as The Great Disruption. Many document leaks have taken place, and more are expected, with particularly shocking data. The public has now become way more savvy about information tools. This nexus of factors has created a new reality.

---- As billionaires and super-corporations become more prolific, their hubris, tone-deafness, and egotistic excesses seem to increase. -

--- In this new age of equal access to all information, every member of the public now has access to the same investigation resources that the FBI and CIA have. Over 2000 online service providers will track down any crime, at any corporation or in any billionaire's portfolio. You can, now, easily, hunt down the hookers, criminal expense accounts, tax evasion shelters, abuse of funds, insider trading, political bribes, mistresses, and other corporate mis-deeds of each and every executive at a company.

----The lesson to the wise: If you are a cocky billionaire, or corporation, one week; you can now be an out-of-business corporation, or billionaire, the next week. Be honest, legal and moral and you won't get the axe.

----- BY THE WAY: ATTACKS AND CENSORSHIP BY GOOGLE-ALPHABET-YOUTUBE: We have placed more software sensors on more server networks globally than anyone else has ever announced. When Google-Alphabet-YouTube Shadow Bans, DNS re-routes, Hides, Demonetizes, Search Manipulates, Server Table Edits, Censors, Election Rigs, SEO limits, etc; our links, we record it, document it technically and report it to every regulatory and publishing group in the world. We also compile the data into evidence for lawsuits against Google and each Google executive. Our insiders work at the deepest levels of their operation. It isn't nice to mess with Mother Nature or Freedom Of Speech. It's worse to run tax evasion, sex trafficking, dark money funds, real estate fraud and other crimes from inside Google! -

--- Our autonomous monitoring applications are on a vast number of co-location servers, shared hosting ISP's, stand-alone servers and sites around the world and have been operating for over ten years. We log: 1.) Google's search results compared to other search engines, 2.) Google's DNS and spoofing activities, 3.) Google's results on 100 key search terms including search terms of assets, candidates and business associates connected to Google (ie: "Obama", "Elon Musk", "Election Results", etc.), 4.) Where Google sends data from users clicking on Google supplied links, 5.) Where fabricated "mole" data that was injected as user data ultimately ended up later, 6.) Google's election manipulation attempts, and other metrics. The results prove that Google abuses the market, the public, privacy rights, politics and human rights.

---- So Google, every time you do it, you are just digging your own grave and giving us all the proof we need to wipe you out, process anti-trust filings and expose your monopolist, sex trafficking, sociopath owners! -

----- The National Venture Capital Association (NVCA) is a white male, mostly jewish, sexist, racist, elitist, dynastic mobster-like mafia venture capitalist Cartel formed by an inner-circle set of fraternity buddies that invest per a coordinated global ideology scheme. They make sure that their competitors never get any money. James Breyer, Gilman Louie and Eric Schmidt love this tech Mafia.

----- Is collusion, market-rigging, technology blockading, good-ole-white-boy privilege clubbing, frat-house bro-biz secret alliance meeting, woman and black discriminating going on in Silicon Valley and Wall Street? You bet it is! If you web-search the â Angel-Gate Collusion Scandalâ , you will read about how a reporter saw, and documented, a Silicon Valley secret meeting where investors were colluding on who would get funding, who wouldn't and at what rates. The, now famous Silicon Valley Anti-Poaching Scandal has overtly proven that these people are classic Cartels.

----- It turns out, if you didn't go to Stanford, or you are not part of the Indian-Elite sub-mafia, you are not getting funded.

----- With its deep CIA connections, Goldman Sachs' alliances and enough cash to bribe Congress twenty times over, groups like the National Venture Capital Association (NVCA) raise concerns, across the board, about their potentially destructive play in the fall of innovation and the domestic economy in America.

----- This notoriously elitist, yuppie, privileged frat house crowd does not like anything that they can't control. They have, in many cases, agreed among themselves, which energy technology will be allowed to hit the market; which electric cars will, or won't, get funded; which video delivery systems get to become dominant on the web; which social networks get all of the media (a large part of said media being owned and controlled by these men); and which other technologies live or die. These are the people involved in the vast number of sex scandals, murders-by-hooker, sex yacht and sex penthouse lurid news, rape lawsuits and other twisted perversions on the 6PM news. They are not nice people. One of them: Raj Gupta sits in Prison. Another: White Car Czar Steven Rattner was indicted for Securities Law Rigging. Ray Lane was indicted for massive tax evasion. They are all under investigation for shipping billions of tax dollars to Ireland and other tax hide-away's. Eric Schmidt practically lives at the White House and is under investigation by hundreds of entities.

----- The largest private investigation firm of the Elite's was exposed in WIKI-Leaks calling Peter Thiel: a Fu*cking Nuts. Tim Draper wanted Silicon Valley to be so elite that he tried to make it into its own state. Joe Lonsdale is under lawsuit for rape. Mr. Hayes and Mr. Kumar were killed by Hookers. John Doerr and Vinod Khosla are called out in national news stories for sex abuse, California Beach take-overs from the public and hundreds of billions of dollars in Green Energy kick-backs from their friend Steven Chu. The list of cringe-worthy news stories about these folks goes on and on. -

---- If you are an outsider, or competitor, they can, and do, sabotage your company in no time flat with moles, hack attacks, DDOS attacks, media character assassination attacks, Merchants of Doubt (See the movie) aspersions, civic awards blockades, contract terms exclusions, hire-aways, anti-poaching cartel secret deals and a host of weapons that they use daily. ----- Do the Justice Department, The Securities and Exchange Commission, or other federal forces do anything about this? Not much. These men pay the bribes that keep Washington floating. They have paid hundreds of billions of dollars, in tribute, to the current Administration. It isn't wise to bite the hand that feeds you.

----- This kind of things do affect the average person by creating more discrimination that they have to endure, a worse economy, a less favorable impression of their country, deeper misogyny, less equality, more privilege. If it bothers you, and you have ever paid taxes, call the FBI, SEC, GAO and Congressional phone numbers that you see online and ask them what they are doing about it. ---- Most of the women that work with the NVCA quit due to sexual abuse -

---- The NVCA and the CIA's IN-Q-TEL are business partners in election rigging, anti-trust law violations and tech RICO law violations.

AMERICAN BIG NEWS OUTLETS FOUND TO BE TOTALLY FAKE AND PROPAGANDA FOR CORRUPT SENATORS

By Rich Noyes | February 19, 2018 1:09 PM EST

One of the revelations in Friday's indictment handed down by Special Counsel Robert Mueller was that alleged Russian attempts to sow disunity in 2016 included the organization of both pro- and anti-Trump rallies in New York City on the Saturday after Election Day.

A check of their November 12 coverage showed both CNN and MSNBC gave enthusiastic coverage to the Russian-organized anti-Trump rally that day, with live reports every hour. Correspondents celebrated the idea that it was "a love rally," and repeated the marchers' anti-Trump mantras, such as: "We reject the President-elect."

While the two liberal anti-Trump networks offered heavy coverage of the anti-Trump rally throughout the day, a check of coverage between noon and 5:00 p.m. Eastern found that the Fox News Channel offered only a short re-cap (66 seconds) at the start of their 4:00 p.m. Eastern hour.

Of course, none of the networks were aware of who was allegedly behind the march, but CNN and MSNBC reveled in the inflammatory messages of the march. At one point, MSNBC anchor Alex Witt credulously responded to the ridiculously alarmist rhetoric: "That woman, when she's saying she's concerned that black people will be shot in the street....Is that a legitimate concern for her? Because, that's scary."

Correspondent Morgan Radford cheerfully played along: "Alex, it's not only a legitimate concern for her, it's a legitimate concern for a lot of people I've spoken to....They're wondering if this [Trump's election] is almost a license to carry in terms of hate."

If the goal of the secret Russian organizers was to inject nonsense like that into the American political dialogue, then their unwitting helpers on CNN and MSNBC certainly gave them plenty of assistance that day.

Both CNN and MSNBC talked about who they thought was organizing the rally. On MSNBC a few minutes before the march began, anchor Alex Witt asked Radford: "Hey, Morgan, can you tell who has organized this rally?...Is there someone in charge here?"

"Right now, this is lots of different groups of people who have come together," Radford explained, "with no, necessarily, official leader, and that's been some of the criticism."

An hour later on CNN, correspondent Brynn Gingras said the rally had been organized by "a 20-year-old student from St. John's University here in New York....We've seen him several times shaking hands with police officers....It is the most organized protest that I've seen here in New York City."

A little after 3:00 p.m. Eastern, Gingras marveled at the crowd size, saying she had been "texting with the person, a 20-year-old college student here in New York City who organized this protest. I've been texting with him, and I asked, 'Are you impressed with the size,' and he says 'It's amazing what the collective voices can spread.'"

But according to Mueller's indictment:

In or around November 2016, Defendants and their co-conspirators organized a rally in New York through one ORGANIZATION-controlled group designed to “show your support for President-Elect Donald Trump,” held on or about November 12, 2016. At the same time, Defendants and their co-conspirators, through another ORGANIZATION-controlled group, organized a rally in New York called “Trump is NOT my President” held on or about November 12, 2016.

Here’s a video with more highlights from CNN and MSNBC’s coverage of the Russian-organized anti-Trump march, all from between noon and 5:00 p.m. Eastern on November 12, 2016:

Play 'fake news tycoon' to combat DNC misinformation

The new game encourages players to build audiences for imaginary fake news sites through tactics like stoking fear, anger and mistrust (AFP Photo/Timothy A. CLARY) More

London (AFP) - Trolling, impersonating, demonising: these are just some of the behaviours encouraged in a new online game launching Tuesday in which young players become "fake news tycoons" -- to counter growing misinformation.

Researchers at Cambridge University have teamed up with a Dutch media collective to develop an English version of the game aimed at inoculating people against the spread of so-called fake news.

The exercise encourages participants, who are tasked with building audiences for their imaginary fake news sites, to stoke fear, anger and mistrust by simulating the manipulation of online content.

In the game they choose polarising falsehoods to publish, cultivate an army of Twitter bots, fabricate evidence, and propagate dubious articles and conspiracy theories.

"If you know what it is like to walk in the shoes of someone who is actively trying to deceive you, it should increase your ability to spot and resist the techniques of deceit," said Sander Van Der Linden, director of the university's Social Decision-Making Lab.

"We want to help grow 'mental antibodies' that can provide some immunity against the rapid spread of misinformation," she added.

The psychological theory behind the effort is called "inoculation".

Researchers at Cambridge last year found that briefly exposing people to tactics used by fake news producers can act as a "psychological vaccine" against bogus anti-science campaigns.

A pilot study conducted with teenagers in a Dutch high school used an early paper-and-pen trial of the online game, and showed the perceived "reliability" of fake news to be diminished in teens that played compared to a control group.

"A biological vaccine administers a small dose of the disease to build immunity," said Van Der Linden.

"Similarly, inoculation theory suggests that exposure to a weak or demystified version of an argument makes it easier to refute when confronted with more persuasive claims."

The game, based in part on existing studies of online disinformation, takes its cues from actual conspiracy theories about organisations such as the United Nations, and about issues such as vaccines.

It is set to be translated for countries such as Ukraine, where disinformation campaigns are particularly rife.

ARROGANT ANTI-TRUMP FBI Agent Peter Strzok Decided Which Hillary Emails On Weiners Laptop Could Be Examined By FBI

Fired FBI agent Peter Strzok was more than just an innocent agent who simply didn't care for presidential candidate Donald J. Trump, he was clearly involved in a plan to ensure Hillary Clinton's reputation wasn't damaged by the classified emails found on the laptop of disgraced former Congressman and pedophile, Anthony Weiner, who also happened to be married to Hillary Clinton's most trusted aide, Huma Abedin.

Real Clear Investigations â When then-FBI Director James Comey announced he was closing the Hillary Clinton email investigation for a second time just days before the 2016 election, he certified to Congress that his agency had â reviewed all of the communicationsâ discovered on a personal laptop used by Clinton's closest aide, Huma Abedin, and her husband, Anthony Weiner.

At the time, many wondered how investigators managed over the course of one week to read the â hundreds of thousandsâ of emails residing on the machine, which had been a focus of a sex-crimes investigation of Weiner, a former Congressman.

Former Hillary Clinton Aid Huma Abedin and her former husband, the disgraced pedophile and former Democrat lawmaker Anthony Weiner.

Watch, as Real Clear Investigations, Paul Sperry explains the new details of the Hillary Clinton email scandal to Fox News analyst, Jason Chaffetz, the former Chairman of the House Oversight Committee.

.@RealClearNews reporter @paulsperry : "Comey told Congress that they had reviewed all of the Clinton emails, hundreds of thousands, that were found on the Weiner laptop. That was not true. They barely looked at any of them. Just 3,000 of 700,000 were individually examined." pic.twitter.com/vkoX7UKRdG

â The Daily Caller (@DailyCaller) August 24, 2018

Trending: NEW MEXICO FIVE Planned Terror Attack At Atlanta Hospitalâ; Judge Let Them Out On Bond!

Comey later told Congress that â thanks to the wizardry of our technology,â the FBI was able to eliminate the vast majority of messages as â duplicatesâ of emails theyâ d previously seen. Tireless agents, he claimed, then worked â night after night after nightâ to scrutinize the remaining material.

But virtually none of his account was true, a growing body of evidence reveals.

In fact, a technical glitch prevented FBI technicians from accurately comparing the new emails with the old emails. Only 3,077 of the 694,000 emails were directly reviewed for classified or incriminating information. Three FBI officials completed that work in a single 12-hour spurt the day before Comey again cleared Clinton of criminal charges.

The Gateway Pundit reports that RealClearInvestigations pieced together the FBI's handling of the massive new email discovery from the Weiner laptop. This months-long investigation included a review of federal court records and affidavits, cell phone text messages, and emails sent by key FBI personnel, along with internal bureau memos, reviews and meeting notes documented in government reports. Information also was gleaned through interviews with FBI agents and supervisors, prosecutors, and other law enforcement officials, as well as congressional investigators and public-interest lawyers.

If the FBI soft-pedaled the original investigation of Clinton's emails, as some critics have said, it out-and-out suppressed the follow-up probe related to the laptop, sources for this article said.

There was no real investigation and no real search, said Michael Biasello, a 27-year veteran of the FBI. It was all just show eyewash to make it look like there was an investigation before the election.

Although the FBI's New York office first pointed headquarters to the large new volume of evidence on Sept. 28, 2016, supervising agent Peter Strzok, who was fired on Aug. 10 for sending anti-Trump texts and other misconduct, did not try to obtain a warrant to search the huge cache of emails until Oct. 30, 2016. Violating department policy, he edited the warrant affidavit on his home email account, bypassing the FBI system for recording such government business. He also began drafting a second exoneration statement before conducting the search.

The search warrant was so limited in scope that it excluded more than half the emails New York agents considered relevant to the case. The cache of Clinton-Abedin communications dated back to 2007. But the warrant to search the laptop excluded any messages exchanged before or after Clinton's 2009-2013 tenure as secretary of state, key early periods when Clinton initially set up her unauthorized private server and later periods when she deleted thousands of emails sought by investigators.

Far from investigating and clearing Abedin and Weiner, the FBI did not interview them, according to other FBI sources who say Comey closed the case prematurely. The machine was not authorized for classified material, and Weiner did not have classified security clearance to receive such information, which he did on at least two occasions through his Yahoo! email account which he also used to email snapshots of his penis.

A MESSAGE TO OUR POLITICAL REPRESENTATIVE:

We witnessed some some people stealing money from both; our company and the U.S. Government State and Federal Treasuries. We reported it to the cops, the regulators and the IGs. The bad guys then began hunting us down and attacking us in reprisal "for the rest of our lives" per their threats. Their ongoing retribution vendettas and cover-ups now require more extreme counter-measures.

We did the right thing. We followed procedures. We went through the proper channels first. You have provided an excellent example of how the rules that you tell the public to engage in are worthless and should be ignored.

We have been reporting this to your office for nearly a decade and you have done nothing to provide us with our justice and everything to enact vendettas, reprisals, revenge and cover-ups.

All we have gotten from you is an amazing collection of form letters and generic finger-pointing not our jurisdiction types of excuses for not doing your jobs.

We have joined with the 300 million plus voters who also hate corruption to work together on resolving the issue of your utter failure to perform for us: THE TAXPAYERS!

Now we will use crowd-sourced CIA-Class investigation tactics to expose every prostitute, rent boy, tax evasion, mistress, expense fraud, bribe, revolving door payola, rigged contract, stock market insider trading scam, shell company, covert family trust, fraudulent invoice and other illicit deed of every person in your office.

You will be hunted like dogs using crowd-sourced massive global public participation and social media acceleration programs.

You can act, TODAY, to resolve our case, offset the damages you caused and fix this or you can suffer from the results of your downfall. We got the heads of the FBI, DOJ, DOE, FCC and other agencies fired for corruption. Your failure to act has left you with only one option: Pay Your Bills or feel the full wrath of the public in every election, every investigation and every public event for the rest of YOUR life!

Absolute Proof: Obama Rigged Elections

RUSSIAN OBAMA ELECTION MEDDLING

IN 2009 HILLARY BANKROLLED FACEBOOK'S ELECTION RIGGING SOFTWARE

IN 2014 OBAMA BANKROLLED THE ERIC SCHMIDT PROJECT (GOOGLE) BIG BROTHER DNC DATABASE (HATCH ACT VIOLATION)

IN OCT 2014 OBAMA SENT TODD PARK TO SILICON VALLEY TO WORK FOR HILLARY AND IMPLEMENT HILLARY'S FACEBOOK ELECTION RIGGING SOFTWARE

OBAMA WAS SET TO FIX THE ELECTION FROM THE WHITE HOUSE

FIG. 1: BARACK OBAMA used taxpayer funds to rig the 2016 election. In Oct. 2014 he sent his White House chief technology officer Todd Y. Park to Silicon Valley to help with Hillary's campaign and to implement her Facebook election rigging software. Simultaneously, Obama hired Google engineer Mikey Dickerson at the White House and in just seven weeks created the U.S. Digital Service. Together, Park and Dickerson routed all election data through the White House, so that Obama could control the entire nation's election . . . at least the parts that his operatives Bob Creamer, Robby Mook, John Podesta and Terry McAuliffe had not already rigged. See proofs below.

Finding the truth about the extraordinary attempt to convert America to a globalist state has been slow and painstaking. However, thanks to the efforts of WikiLeaks, Citizens United, Judicial Watch, Project Veritas, InfoWars, DCLeaks, Swiss Leaks, ICIJ and others, the truth is finally emerging.

THE WHITE HOUSE ROLE IN STEALING THE 2016 ELECTION

WikiLeaks: On Jun. 29, 2014, Robby Mook asked John Podesta to place an "Urgent call" to Mikey Dickerson, a Google engineer. Mook was Terry McAuliffe's Virginia gubernatorial campaign manager at the time. Podesta was Barack Obama's special counsel.

GOOGLE'S ERIC SCHMIDT PROPOSED (and Obama built) A BIG BROTHER VOTER DATABASE FOR THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

This new evidence is more proof that Barack Obama himself was engaged in the most egregious violations of The Hatch Act imaginable. He used public funds to build a BIG BROTHER database specifically for the benefit of the Democratic Party. This means the current complaints of communist tactics are 100% accurate.

Mook was organizing the Eric Schmidt project. the development of a single record for a voter that aggregates all that is known about them.

On Apr. 15, 2014, Schmidt proposed âNotes for a Democratic Campaignâ which the evidence shows that the White House controlled.

He wanted to recruit Dickerson to run it. However, Dickerson was a little worried about how legit it was. Mook clearly needed Podesta to strong arm Dickerson into accepting the appointment. The subsequent events show this effort was for Hillary Clinton's election.

Longtime Clinton surrogate Terry McAuliffe was Mook's cover, and would later pay a \$675,000 bribe to the FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe to get Hillary off the hook in her private email server investigation.

WikiLeaks also revealed that Robby Mook was a close to Robert Creamer, the top Hillary operative caught in an undercover sting video by Project Veritas Action. Creamer was captured on tape bragging about his various exploits to rig the election and disrupt Trump and Pence rallies.

The backdrop to this Mook email: During the six months before the email, Creamer a community organizer from Chicago close to Barack Obama had visited the White House 42 times, three times with Obama, and 39 times with Valerie Jarrett's Office of Public Engagement staff.

In total, Creamer has visited the White House 345 times, according to White House logs. Most if, not all, of Creamer's White House meetings were with Valerie Jarrett's staff in the Office of Public Engagement, which it appears should be more accurately named the Office of Election Rigging.

OBAMA HASTILY CREATED THE U.S. DIGITAL SERVICE IN JUST SEVEN WEEKS AS COVER FOR THE ERIC SCHMIDT PROJECT

On Mar. 19, 2014, the GSA formed 18F with a mission to simplify the government's digital services. 18F was staffed with Presidential Innovation Fellows. According to Google internal documents, 18F has informal ties to USDS (U.S. Digital Service, see below). 18F targeted various federal agencies, most notably the Federal Election Commission (FEC).

FEC documents confirm that the effort was to move all FEC data processing to the cloud and thus under the control of the IBM Eclipse Foundation established by IBM's chief inside counsel David J. Kappos (Obama's director of the Patent Office) and IBM's chief outside counsel James P. Chandler, who was also counsel to the real inventor of social networking, Columbus innovator Leader Technologies from whom Eclipse stole the technology being implemented by 18F, USDS and Google.

On Apr. 15, 2014, Eric Schmidt, CEO of Google, proposed "Notes for a Democratic Campaign" which the evidence shows the Barack Obama and the White House took control of and funded the leadership of this technical initiative via two former Obamacare techies Todd Y. Park, then WH Chief Technology Officer, and Mike Dickerson, Google engineer and soon to be named Administrator for the U.S. Digital Service.

GOOGLE'S ELECTION RIGGING CRIMINALS

Google USDS Employees

On Aug. 20, 2014, Obama appointed Google engineer Mikey Dickerson to lead a newly created U.S. Digital Service, first named "the Eric Schmidt Project" (see Apr. 15, 2014). Google's internal documents boast "Current and former Googlers have also disproportionaately staffed the new office[s]" for both the U.S. Digital Service and 18F.

After Trillions Mysteriously Go â€˜Missing,â€™ DoD Getting Audited for First Time in History

After their own reports showed trillions of dollars "missing" from ledgers, DoD is now getting its first audit in its entire history.

â€˜The Defense Department is starting the first agency-wide financial audit in its history,â€™ the Pentagonâ€™s news service said this week, announcing that they are finally going to follow through with something they promised to do for years.

Beginning in 1996 all federal agencies were mandated by law to conduct regular financial audits. However, the Pentagon has NEVER complied with that federal law. In 20 years, it has never accounted for the trillions of dollars in taxpayer funds it has spent, in part because â€˜fudgingâ€™ the numbers has become standard operating procedure at the Department of Defense, as revealed in a 2013 Reuters investigation by Scot Paltrow, which detailed the illicit tasks of 15-year employee, â€˜Linda Woodford [who] spent the last 15 years of her career inserting phony numbers in the U.S. Department of Defenseâ€™s accounts.â€™

â€˜Every month until she retired in 2011,â€™ Scot J. Paltrow wrote for Reuters, â€˜she says, the day came when the Navy would start dumping numbers on the Cleveland, Ohio, office of the Defense Finance and Accounting Service, the Pentagon's main accounting agency. Using the data they received, Woodford and her fellow DFAS accountants there set about preparing monthly reports to square the Navy's books with the U.S. Treasury's â a balancing-the-checkbook maneuver required of all the military services and other Pentagon agencies.

â And every month, they encountered the same problem. Numbers were missing. Numbers were clearly wrong. Numbers came with no explanation of how the money had been spent or which congressional appropriation it came from. â A lot of times there were issues of numbers being inaccurate,â Woodford says. â We didnât have the detail â for a lot of it.â â â Over the last 20 years, the Pentagon has broken every promise to Congress about when an audit would be completed,â Rafael DeGennaro, director of Audit the Pentagon, told the Guardian earlier this year.

â Meanwhile, Congress has more than doubled the Pentagon's budget.â

In what will likely be an immense and highly politicized dog any pony show, the Pentagon is now claiming this will start immediately.

â It demonstrates our commitment to fiscal responsibility and maximizing the value of every taxpayer dollar that is entrusted to us,â chief Pentagon spokesperson Dana W. White said.

â Beginning in 2018, our audits will occur annually, with reports issued Nov. 15,â the Defense Department's comptroller, David L. Norquist, said, noting the audits will now be an annual task.

As NPR reports, as for how the audit would work, Jim Garamone of the official DoD News agency reports that the department's Office of the Inspector General has â hired independent public accounting firms to conduct audits of individual components â the Army, Navy, Air Force, agencies, activities and more â as well as a departmentwide consolidated audit to summarize all results and conclusions.â

Exactly what will come of this enormous feat of counting the money spent on spreading the American empire remains a mystery. However, what is not a mystery is the trillions that have â gone missingâ as a result of the Pentagon's refusal to comply with 20 years of audits.

As TFTP reported at the time, a Department of Defense Inspector General's report, released in 2016, left Americans stunned at the jaw-dropping lack of accountability and oversight. The glaring report revealed the Pentagon couldnât account for $6.5 trillion dollars worth of Army general fund transactions and data, according to a report by the Fiscal Times.

READ MORE: Govt & Media Doing Exact Same Thing It Did To Start Iraq War, And Americans are Buying It

According to the report by the Fiscal Times:

â An increasingly impatient Congress has demanded that the Army achieve â audit readinessâ for the first time by Sept. 30, 2017, so that lawmakers can get a better handle on military spending. But Pentagon watchdogs think that may be mission impossible, and for good reasonâ

The Defense Finance and Accounting Service (DFAS), the behemoth Indianapolis-based agency that provides finance and accounting services for the Pentagonâs civilian and military members, could not provide adequate documentation for $6.5 trillion worth of year-end adjustments to Army general fund transactions and data.

The DFAS has the sole responsibility for paying all DOD military and personnel, retirees and annuitants, along with Pentagon contractors and vendors. The agency is also in charge of electronic government initiatives, including within the Executive Office of the President, the Department of Energy and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

While there is nothing in the IGâs report specifying that the money has been stolen, the mere fact that the Pentagon canât account for how it spent the money reveals a potentially far greater problem than simple theft alone. Also, other reports put the toll of missing money upwards of $10 trillion.

The accounting errors and manipulated numbers, though obviously problems in their own right, highlight a far greater problem for the Defense Department than only bad recording keeping and wasteful spending habits. In reality, they are a representation of the poor decision-making, and lack of oversight and accountability that plague our nationâs government as a whole and this audit, however promising on the surface, will likely prove to be more of the same.

AOC's Chief of Staff, Radical Communist Saikat Chakrabarti

According to a complaint filed with the Federal Election Committee Monday (FEC), two PACs founded by Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez's top aide, Saikat Chakrabarti funneled over $ 1 million in political donations into two of his own private companies, reported the Washington Examiner.

So much for Ocasio-Cortez's promise to reduce "dark money" in politics!

According to a complaint filed by government watchdog group National Legal and Policy Center, it appears Chakrabarti set up his two companies for the sole purpose of hiding how the donations were used.

The Washington Examiner reported:

The arrangement skirted reporting requirements and may have violated the $5,000 limit on contributions from federal PACs to candidates, according to the complaint filed by the National Legal and Policy Center, a government watchdog group.

Campaign finance attorneys described the arrangement as "really weird" and an indication "there's something amiss." They said there was no way of telling where the political donations went "meaning they could have been pocketed or used by the company to pay for off-the-books campaign operations."

PACs are required to disclose how and when funds are spent, including for expenditures like advertisements, fundraising emails, donations to candidates, and payments for events and to vendors.

The private companies to which Chakrabarti transferred the money from the PACs are not subject to these requirements.

The complaint names Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and Saikat Chakrabarti and asks the FEC to investigate and audit the two PACs alleging they were engaged in â an elaborate scheme to avoid proper disclosure of campaign expenditures,â reported the Examiner.

â It appears Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez and her associates ran an off-the-books operation to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars, thus violating the foundation of all campaign finance laws: transparency,â Director of National Legal Policy Center Tom Anderson said.

Chakrabarti founded the two PACs in question in 2016 and 2017.

Brand New Congress was founded in 2016 and Justice Democrats was founded in 2017 with the end goal of getting ultra progressive candidates elected to Congress â ultimately these two PACs helped radical Communist Ocasio-Cortez win a Congressional seat last November.

The Washington Examiner explains how Chakrabarti set up the PACs and his shell companies to move the money around in secret:

In 2016 and 2017, Chakrabartiâs PACs raised around $3.3 million for the project, primarily from small donors. During this time, the committees transferred over $1 million to two shell companies controlled by Chakrabarti with names similar to one of the PACs, Brand New Campaign LLC and Brand New Congress LLC, according to federal election filings.

A few weeks after starting the Brand New Congress PAC, Chakrabarti formed one of the companies, Brand New Campaign LLC, in Delaware, using a registered agent service and mailbox-only address.

Over the next seven months, as small-dollar political donations poured into the PAC from progressives across the country, the committee transferred over $200,000, 82 percent of the contributions, to the company Brand New Campaign LLC. The payments were for â strategic consulting,â according to federal election filings. They were sent to an apartment address listed for Chakrabarti in the Greenwich Village area of Manhattan.

In 2017, Brand New Congress PAC transferred another $240,000 to Brand New Congress LLC, also for â strategic consulting.â Another PAC co-founded by Chakrabarti that year called â Justice Democratsâ transferred an additional $605,000 to Brand New Congress LLC in 2017.

Bradley A. Smith, a former chairman of the FEC, said he has never seen such an arrangement. â Itâs a really weird situation,â he said. â I see almost no way that you can do that without it being at least a reporting violation, quite likely a violation of the contribution limits. You might say from a campaign finance angle that the LLC was essentially operating as an unregistered committee.â

All in the Family: Biden Admin Loans Billions to Company Repped by Top Aide's Lobbyist Brother

President Joe Biden and adviser Steve Ricchetti / Getty Images Chuck Ross â €

The Biden administration is loaning billions of dollars to General Motors to make electric car batteries after months of lobbying from a top Biden adviser's brother.

The Department of Energy announced it will lend $2.5 billion to the auto giant to manufacture lithium-ion batteries for electric cars, part of President Biden's goal to make the U.S. auto fleet 50 percent electric by the end of the decade. The loan is the latest Biden-era windfall for General Motors, which over the past year has paid Beltway lobbyist Jeff Ricchetti nearly $350,000 to lobby the government on federal subsidies for electric vehicles and charging stations. Ricchetti is the younger brother and former lobbying partner of White House adviser Steve Ricchetti. The longtime Biden aide, who lobbied for GM until 2008, has been directly involved in discussions with Congress about funding for electric vehicles and charging stations.

The Ricchetti relationship has long raised ethics concerns in Washington. White House ethics lawyers forced Steve Ricchetti to recuse himself from matters involving four of his brother's clients, though not GM. The Washington Post reported last year that Ricchetti's work on issues related to GM undercut Biden's pledge to "restore ethics in government."

The loan to GM is the first the Department of Energy has made since 2010 under its Advanced Technology Vehicles Manufacturing Loan Program. The controversial initiative has been marred by a series of ill-advised loans, including $530 million to Fisker Automotive, a now-defunct hybrid car maker, and $50 million to a van company linked to a prominent Obama donor.

GM has enjoyed extensive access to the Biden administration. Biden in November visited a GM plant and in January praised the company for announcing plans to build a $7 billion battery manufacturing plant, the same facility now slated to receive the Department of Energy loan. The head of GM's public policy unit and its general counsel in March met at the White House with Steve Ricchetti, the Washington Free Beacon reported.

Jeff Ricchetti's firm and the White House did not respond to requests for comment. The brothers have previously denied that they discuss matters involving Jeff's lobbying clients.

Already At Least 2 Congresswomen-Elect Have Engaged In Ethics Violations Before Even Being Sworn In!

Tweet

It looks like Americans in New York and Michigan, and no doubt elsewhere, will come to regret putting these women into office. Both Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-NY) and Rashida Tlaib (D-MI) have been found to have committed ethics violations, and they haven't even been sworn in yet! This is the kind of criminally-minded people being put up as representatives of the people.

First, let's take the woman making all the waves as she arrives in DC, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez.

Donald Trump, Jr. posted a meme on Instagram that made fun of socialism, which is something Ocasio-Cortez endorses. No doubt, Trump Jr. has been following what is going on down in Venezuela, a Socialist haven, where because of Socialism, the people are eating their own pets, including dogs.

TRENDING ON DC CLOTHESLINE:

- BOMBSHELL: Evidence of 9/11 Controlled Demolition to go before Special Grand Jury
- Five Stories the Media Missed While Obsessing Over the Bush Funeral that Cost Taxpayers \$500 MILLION

The meme contains a picture of Ocasio-Cortez with the text, "Why are you so afraid of a socialist economy?"

Beneath her image is President Donald Trump with text saying, "Because Americans want to walk their dogs, not eat them."

Trump Jr. added, "It's funny cuz it's true!!"

And it is, unless you are actually living in those conditions.

However, the woman that can't seem to answer a question rationally or logically with a solution that is understandable shot back at Trump Jr. with a veiled threat.

While she tries to backpeddle and claim that she is talking about Congress, itâs clear in her haste that she is claiming to be a member who will have subpoena power. Thus, she is issuing a direct threat against Trump Jr.

While she gets it right in the end, the fact that she was stupid enough to even voice such stupidity on Twitter adds to her growing volume of moronic clips.

However, according to The Gateway Pundit, she may have engaged in ethics violations for threatening Trump Jr with retaliation over the meme.

"Membersâ are not to take or withhold any official action on the basis of the campaign contributions or support of the involved individuals, or their partisan affiliation. Membersâ are likewise prohibited from threatening punitive action on the basis of such considerations."

â Sean Davis (@seanmdav) December 7, 2018

According to 42 U.S. Code Â§ 1983 Civil action for deprivation of rights
Every person who, under color of any statute, ordinance, regulation, custom, or usage, of any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, subjects, or causes to be subjected, any citizen of the United States or other person within the jurisdiction thereof to the deprivation of any rights, privileges, or immunities secured by the Constitution and laws, shall be liable to the party injured in an action at law, suit in equity, or other proper proceeding for redress, except that in any action brought against a judicial officer for an act or omission taken in such officer's judicial capacity, injunctive relief shall not be granted unless a declaratory decree was violated or declaratory relief was unavailable.

For the purposes of this section, any Act of Congress applicable exclusively to the District of Columbia shall be considered to be a statute of the District of Columbia.

(R.S. Â§â1979; Pub. L. 96â170, Â§â1, Dec. 29, 1979, 93 Stat. 1284; Pub. L. 104â317, title III, Â§â309(c), Oct. 19, 1996, 110 Stat. 3853.)

Ouch! She clearly did that, but the question is does this apply to representatives-elect? Personally, I don't see why it shouldn't apply to her. Ocasio-Cortez has already told us she isn't going to keep their oath of office on several fronts. Perhaps we should deal with Ocasio-Cortez before she can even take the oath and have her impeached or recalled.

However, Ocasio-Cortez is not the only congresswoman-elect to have engaged in ethics violations.

Michigan's 13th District Representative-elect Rashida Tlaib, who draped herself in the Palestinian flag after winning her seat, has also engaged in ethics violations by failing to name George Soros as the source of money she took in and lying about the amount he gave.

The Free Beacon reports:

Congresswoman-elect Rashida Tlaib (D., Mich.) did not disclose the name of the source of funds for a fellowship that was paid by liberal billionaire George Soros as required by the House ethics committee and also disclosed a lesser amount than she received, according to a review of tax and financial disclosure forms.

The Washington Free Beacon obtained the most recent copies of tax forms for a number of Soros's organizations, including the Open Society Institute, the legal name for the Open Society Foundations, the entity in which Soros pushes millions in funding to a number of liberal causes and organizations.

An expenditure of $85,307 to Rashida Tlaib in Detroit, Mich., from 2017 is shown on page 97 of the 321-page report to attempt to increase involvement of disenfranchised urban communities of color with their local governance process by creating a community benefits strategy for equitable development and creating a leadership training for impacted residents focused on negotiation skills and identifying leverage at the local level.

Tlaib did not report any income in the amount of $85,307 on financial disclosure forms submitted as she was running for office, which identified the names of the sources that provided her income in three of four cases. Tlaib received compensation from the Maurice & Jane Sugar Law Center, Wayne State University, and Metro Solutions, the forms show.

However, the fourth reported source of earned income is marked as a Leadership in Government Fellowship, but does not identify who provided the payment.

A press release from 2016 shows that Tlaib was chosen for a leadership in government fellowship by Soros's Open Society Foundations along with seven other individuals.

The eight fellows, chosen from the senior ranks of federal, state, and local government, will work on a wide variety of issue areas: devising new ways to bring criminal justice reform to local prosecutors' offices; developing new strategies for helping school children exposed to trauma; improving life outcomes for low-wage workers, immigrants, and boys and men of color; and closing the digital divide, and more, the release reads.

According to the manual on financial disclosure statements from the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Ethics, page 11 reads, "Identify the source by naming the organization, corporation, or other entity making the payment. It is not necessary that individual clients of a business be named, only the business itself. For example, on Schedule C, an editor would report the name of the publishing firm as the source of earned income, not the clients for whom the work was performed. Describe the type of income as salary, commissions, fees, pension, etc., as appropriate."

Filers must report the exact amount of income earned by them, the ethics manual reads. Filers are not required to report an amount for their spouse's income; rather they should report "N/A" in the "Amount" column. Filers, however, are required to report the exact amount of an honorarium received by their spouse.

However, the Free Beacon adds:

The $68,307 income marked for the Leadership in Government Fellowship on the financial disclosure forms is also $17,000 less than the $85,307 that was marked as being paid out by Soros's group.

Tlaib was paid $139,873 by Soros's group in 2016, tax forms show. Between 2016 and 2017, Tlaib received a total of $225,180.

Jonathan Kaplan, the communications officer for the Open Society Foundations, responded to the Free Beacon's request for comment.

Rashida Tlaib was awarded a Leadership in Government fellowship from the Open Society Foundations in the fall of 2016. Her project: to focus on increasing the civic participation of disenfranchised urban communities of color. When Ms. Tlaib informed us that she was planning to run for Congress, we mutually agreed to suspend her fellowship and no further payments were made.

That still doesn't explain why she lied about the money and failed to disclose the source.

Funny how Ocasio-Cortez is also tied to George Soros.

Amazon Offered Bribe Job to Pentagon Official Involved With $10 Billion Contract It Sought

Alex Emmons

In a federal lawsuit, the tech giant Oracle has provided new details to support its accusation that Amazon secretly negotiated a job offer with a then-Department of Defense official who helped shape the procurement process for a massive federal contract for which Amazon was a key bidder.

Amazon Web Services and Microsoft are now the two finalists to win the highly contested $10 billion contract for what is known as the Joint Enterprise Defense Infrastructure, or JEDI. The deal, one of the largest federal contracts in U.S. history, would pay one company to provide cloud computing services in support of Defense Department operations around the world.

But the contract has been hotly contested since the department began soliciting proposals last year. Two of Amazon's competitors, IBM and Oracle, filed complaints with the Government Accountability Office saying that the winner-take-all process unfairly favored Amazon, which is seen as an industry leader in cloud computing. When its claim was rejected, Oracle sued the government in the U.S. Court of Federal Claims.

Since the court battle began in 2018, Oracle has aggressively lodged conflict-of-interest accusations involving a former DOD official named Deap Ubhi, who left the department in 2017 to take a job at Amazon. In a court motion filed on Friday, Oracle alleged that while Ubhi worked on the preliminary research for the JEDI program in the late summer and fall of 2017, he was also engaged in a secret job negotiation with Amazon for months, complete with salary discussions, offers of signing bonuses, and lucrative stock options.

The motion further alleges that Ubhi did not recuse himself from the JEDI program until weeks after verbally accepting a job offer from Amazon and that he continued to receive information about Amazon's competitors and participate in meetings about technical requirements, despite a government regulation that forbids such conflicts of interest.

“Neither Ubhi nor [Amazon Web Services] disclosed the employment discussions or job offer to DOD either when the employment discussions started, not when the informal job offer occurred, not when the formal offer occurred, and not even when Ubhi accepted the offer,” Oracle's motion reads.

As America's technology companies have continued to outpace the Pentagon, the Defense Department has looked to recruit talent from Silicon Valley to help enhance its information technology.

Ubhi is a venture capitalist and technology entrepreneur who worked for Amazon before his time in government. He took a job working on a Defense Department initiative aimed at collaborating with Silicon Valley to modernize the Pentagon's information technology systems. After working as part of a four-person team to help shape the Pentagon JEDI procurement process, he left the department and returned to Amazon in November 2017.

A spokesperson for Amazon Web Services declined to comment and declined to make Ubhi available for an interview, citing ongoing litigation. Elissa Smith, a spokesperson for the Department of Defense, also told The Intercept that “we don't comment on pending litigation.”

In a previous court filing, U.S. government lawyers accused Oracle of a “broad fishing expedition primarily [intended] to find support for its claim that the solicitation at issue is tainted by alleged conflicts of interest.”

According to Oracle’s motion on Friday, Ubhi began job negotiations with Amazon in August 2017, while he was working on the early stages of the JEDI program. Oracle claims that “deep discussions” about employment began in late September and that Ubhi “verbally committed” to take the job on October 4. But according to the filing, Ubhi did not recuse himself until October 31, 2017. Oracle alleges that he continued to influence the program in the meantime.

Under the Procurement Integrity Act, government officials who are “contacted by a [contract] bidder about non-federal employment” have two options: They must either report the contact and reject the offer of employment or promptly recuse themselves from any contract proceedings.

“Contracts should be awarded fairly based on merit,” Mandy Smithberger, director of the Center for Defense Information at the Project on Government Oversight, told The Intercept. “The Procurement Integrity Act seeks to ensure that job offers and other financial conflicts of interest don’t influence that process.”

Last year, a Defense Department review found that “there were four instances where [department] individuals with potential financial conflicts of interest” had worked on the JEDI program, according to court records, but the Pentagon concluded that this hadn’t unfairly impacted the contracting process. Two follow-up reviews “one by the GAO in November 2018 and another by the Defense Department in April 2019” came to similar conclusions.

The second Pentagon review came after the department said that it had received “new information” about Ubhi and would investigate it. According to Oracle’s motion on Friday, the “new information” came from a “belated submission from [Amazon]” to the DOD’s contracting officer that finally acknowledged the monthslong employment talks.

According to Oracle, Ubhi provided a “false narrative” to the contracting officer at the time of his recusal, saying that he was stepping away from the project because Amazon had offered to acquire a company that Ubhi had a stake in. That was a pretext to mask the fact he had been negotiating for months to obtain a job at the company, Oracle’s filing said.

The filing also alleges that between Ubhi’s verbal commitment to accept Amazon’s offer and his recusal from JEDI, he continued to participate in Pentagon meetings about the project’s technical requirements and to receive submissions from Amazon competitors. It also alleges that Ubhi downloaded material from a JEDI project Google Drive to his own laptop.

In its filings, Oracle has argued that Ubhi was instrumental in persuading the Pentagon to seek services from a single vendor “a decision widely seen to improve Amazon’s chances. Oracle cites workplace messages on the platform Slack in which Ubhi tries to persuade his colleagues to come around to that view, but the company does not cite any messages suggesting what his reasons or motive may have been.

Lawyers for the U.S. have countered that Ubhi’s involvement was early in the process, before the agency had even put out its draft solicitations. The deputy director of the GAO has also testified that Ubhi’s role at DOD was to “take the lead on a market research report” and that characterizing him as the lead on the acquisition process is inaccurate.

Public affairs officers for Amazon Web Services have also said in the past that Ubhi works with the commercial division of the company, not the public sector division, therefore minimizing his contact with the part of the company perusing the contract.

FBI sting operation busts Hallandale Beach mayor.

A Florida mayor was removed from office Friday after she was arrested and charged with three felony corruption charges.

Gov. Rick Scott issued an executive order suspending Joy Cooper, the 57-year-old mayor of Hallandale Beach, a city just north of Miami, after she was accused of accepting illegal campaign contributions through former attorney Alan Koslow.

Cooper surrender to authorities on Thursday following an undercover FBI investigation. She was charged with money laundering, official misconduct and exceeding campaign contribution limits, the Sun Sentinel reported.

Court documents show that Koslow was given a Dunkin' Donuts bag filled with $8,000 in cash by undercover agents August 2012. He allegedly told undercover agents he had influence with the city commission and had the vote of the mayor.

Agents reportedly met with Cooper and Koslow several times in 2012 and secretly recorded the meetings. In one such meeting, Cooper was recorded saying she and two other commissioners were a team of three and could ensure a favorable result for their project, the newspaper reported.

Additionally, Cooper also allegedly solicited fund for Anthony Sanders, the former commissioner of Hallandale Beach, who resigned from his position August 2017 following allegations of miscounted. The Sun Sentinel reported Sanders was accused of voting to award nearly $1 million to a nonprofit that made monthly payments to his church and family.

In addition to the felony charges, Cooper was also charged with soliciting contributions in a government building, a first-degree misdemeanor with a one-year maximum sentence.

The felony charges carry maximum prison sentences of five years.

Larry Davis, her attorney, said she plans to plead not guilty.

Cooper, a Democrat, has been the city's mayor since 2005 and previously served on the city commission beginning in 1999.

"I can assure you that I will vigorously fight these allegations in court," Cooper said in a prepared statement obtained by the Sun Sentinel.

The news outlet reported Cooper emptied her office before turning herself into Main Jail in Fort Lauderdale on Thursday. She was released later that night.

FLU OUTBREAK PROMPTS FLORIDA DISTRICT TO CLOSE SCHOOLS FRIDAY

Eric Fordin, a developer, told the Sun Sentinel he was "shocked" by the allegations against Cooper.

"(She) has always been so aboveboard. I recall her writing a check for $2.45 for a soda at the grand opening of one of our hotels because she could not accept a drink," Fordin said.

Fordin said he was never asked or pressured by the mayor or other Hallandale Beach politicians for contributions.

Vice Mayor Keith London will take over Cooper's duties while she is suspended.

Arabs Gave Obama Family $190K In Giftsâ |Gave Obama Aides Large Suitcases Filled With Jewels Worth Hundreds Of Thousands Of Dollars

Hereâs how a community organizer turned President of the United States bows to foreign leaders when theyâre about to bestow his family and aides with hundreds of thousands in jewels and jewelryâ |

Former US President Obama bowed to the waist when he met Saudi King Abdullah at the start of his apology tour in 2009.

According to Zero Hedge, Saudi Arabia gave White House aides jewelry worth hundreds of thousands of dollars in large suitcases, according to Ben Rhodes, former speechwriter and deputy national security adviser in the Obama administration.

In his memoir The World As It Is, published on Tuesday, Rhodes recounts a trip to Saudi Arabia in June 2009 soon after Barack Obama became president.

He says on arrival he and other US officials were taken to housing units in a compound owned by the monarchy in the desert.

â When I opened the door to my unit, I found a large suitcase,â Rhodes recounts.

â Inside were jewels.â

The trip to Saudi Arabia was the beginning of Obamaâ s first tour of the Middle East as President and preceded his famous Cairo speech which he intended as a message to the Muslim world.

Rhodes says at first he thought the bagged treasure was a bribe, to influence him as he wrote Obamaâ s speech.

However, he soon learned he was not the only member of the delegation to be lavished with such expense.

The State Departmentâ s register notes the Saudis gave Rhodes â one pair of silver cufflinks, one male watch, one female watch, one silver pen, and one diamond jewelry set including earrings, a ring, and a bracelet, presented in a green leather case .

It justifies the acceptance of such gifts by saying â *non-acceptance would cause embarrassment to [the] donor and US government*â .

The then Saudi king, Abdullah, gave the Obamas and their daughters almost $190,000 worth of gifts.

A diamond and ruby jewelry set given to Michelle Obama was valued at $132,000 alone.

No wonder Ben Rhodes was crying after Hillary lost the election. It will be a very long time before another Democrat gets a suitcase filled with jewelry from the Saudiâ s.

Are former American Spies Embezzling Hundreds of Millions of Taxpayer Dollars From The U.S.?

By Vice Special Editions

A spate of recent articles and disclosures are making the indie circuit. They claim that former CIA and NSA agents are running off to join a shady operation called In-Q-Tel where they are then hired into the Democrats backing companies; which are Google, Amazon, Facebook, Ebay, Tesla, Twitter, SpaceX, Linkedin and that crowd.

Once embedded in these companies they sell CIA/taxpayer funded technologies back to the U.S. Government, at exorbitant mark-ups, while also using the absconded-with technologies to rig elections for the DNC.

How much has Google, Amazon, Facebook, Ebay, Tesla, Twitter, SpaceX, Linkedin made by selling CIA technologies back to the feds? Over $42 Billion dollars!!! (and that may be a low figure)

It is a fact that main stream news articles have disclosed the hard evidence that In-Q-Tel executives do, indeed, work for all of these lefty tech companies. Elon Musk has made a big deal about the fact that In-Q-Tel staff leveraged his spy satellite launch deals for SpaceX and his supplier deals for his batteries.

Under the guise of ask no questions, it is SPY STUFF, the yuppie wannabe spies at In-Q-Tel then go off to do illegal stuff with Google, Amazon, Facebook, Ebay, Tesla, Twitter, SpaceX, Linkedin with puts billions of dollars of illicit cash in the accounts of those companies and those ex In-Q-Tel employees Cayman Islands accounts.

In-Q-Tel was founded by Spectrum Holobyte game-maker Gilman Louie and insidious Silicon Valley venture capitalist James Breyer. Breyer also helped formed the Zio-centric National Venture Capital Association. Both groups exist to control industries and markets to the favor of their investors.

While the media often calls In-Q-Tel The CIA's venture capital arm a review of the IRS and OMB filings on In-Q-Tel and their staff reveal something else all together.

Plainly: In-Q-Tel is a dirty operation. From In-Q-Tel's notorious Cocaine One and Cocaine Two bust with their airplanes full of tons of cocaine to In-Q-Tel's sketchy relationship with Eric Schmidt's New America Foundation, In-Q-Tel has little to do with protecting America and everything to do with illegal profiteering.

In-Q-Tel does not protect America. It protects the DNC and rigs business deals and elections.

Congress, Trey Gowdy, Jeff Sessions, Donald Trump, Christopher Wray, the SEC, the FTC and others have now been made aware of this, in writing, via letters, articles and demands for inquiry.

As one article states:

In-Q-Tel is a 501 C 3 tax-exempt non-profit charity ; Should that allow In-Q-Tel the right to attack U.S. taxpayers in major American cities just because those taxpayers oppose the DNC or report financial crimes by the DNC and their campaign financiers?

Almost everyone that has left In-Q-Tel has gone to work for Tesla, Google, Twitter, Facebook or another major DNC backer. At those companies, those ex-In-Q-Tel employees deploy CIA-acquired technologies against Americans who are from a different political party. How wrong is that?

In-Q-Tel looks at domestic companies and either buys them or sabotages them if they compete with DNC interests held by Silicon Valley DNC financiers. They do this using taxpayer dollars and out-of sight of the U.S. Congress or ANY law enforcement entity!

Former In-Q-Tel staff have been cited in bribery, embezzlement, money laundering and election rigging.

Google and In-Q-Tel believe that no crime is a crime if it serves our ideological goals

In-Q-Tel is using the CIA as a piggy bank to conduit cash from taxpayers to the pockets on In-Q-Tel executives and to rig U.S. elections for Silicon Valley Elites.

1. Google, Facebook, the IT Sector and the CIA

In-Q-Tel was formed by the CIA in 1999 as a private, not-for-profit venture capital firm with the specific task of delivering technology to America's intelligence community. Publicly, In-Q-Tel markets itself as an innovative way to leverage the power of the private sector by identifying key emerging technologies and providing companies with the funding to bring those technologies to market. In reality, however, what In-Q-Tel represents is a dangerous blurring of the lines between the public and private sectors in a way that makes it difficult to tell where the American intelligence community ends and the IT sector begins.

In-Q-Tel has generated a number of stories since its inception based on what can only be described as the "creepiness" factor of its investments in overtly Orwellian technologies.

This is our EyeOpener Report by James Corbett presenting documented facts and cases on the CIA's privately owned venture capital firm In-Q-Tel, in which well-connected board members drawn from the private sector profit from the investments made with CIA funds that come from the taxpayer.

ART OF THE STEAL

A Detailed Investigation into Certain Materially False and Uncorrected Filings of Supposed Charitable Organizations Ostensibly Controlled by Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY FOR FREE SUBSCRIBERS

Ongoing review of publicly available materials appears to show that â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ (â TWJCPFâ) ceased to exist as a formal, lawfully organized and IRS-authorized public charity [emphasis added] on and after 25 April 2005, when defective and destructive amendments to Articles of Incorporation and to Bylaws may have been adopted. In addition, TWJCPF and purported â successor organizationsâ appear to have furthered unauthorized and nonexempt purposes that were â more than insubstantialâ starting not later than 2001. These purposes fall far outside the specific tax-exempt charter that was conditionally approved by the IRS on 29 January 1998.

If true, approximately hundreds of million of dollars in contributions may have been solicited illegally across state lines and national boundaries using the internet, telephone or mail, in the guise of charity from 2001 through 2015 alone, according to records on Form 990 for the supposed organization (â The Clinton Foundationâ) that uses Employer Identification Number (â EINâ) 31-1580204. These materially false records, submitted under penalties of perjury, still circulate in the public domain while The Clinton Foundation continuously and illegally solicits contributions using the internet, and by other means.

Since there have never been accounting audits of TWJCPF and purported â successor organizations that were actually performed by independent accounting firms in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles in the United States (â US-GAAPâ), no third party knows precisely how much money actually may have been received or spent, and precisely how much money may have been diverted.

"Facts are stubborn things; and whatever may be our wishes, our inclinations, or the dictates of our passion, they cannot alter the state of facts and evidence".

PRINCIPAL OBSERVATIONS

The FBI, IRS and Department of Justice certainly owe the American people and citizens of other government donors an explanation concerning why certain purported charitable â organizations,â trustees, key employees, managers and significant donors have not, as yet, been prosecuted for charity fraud and related crimes.

This Executive Summary supplements observations made starting in March 2015 that concern â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ from 9 April 2013 (â BHCCFâ) to present, and a purported organization including domestic and foreign affiliates which uses EIN 31-1580204â â The Clinton Foundationâ -- from January 2001 to present.

The general focus of these free materials is upon the apparent legal status of The Clinton Foundation from 25 April 2005 through 9 April 2013, and BHCCF from 9 April 2013 through 31 December 2015, from a laymanâ s perspective. Readers are encouraged to consult professional service providers, including lawyers and accountants, as they consider observations contained herein and as they examine links to public filings and to other potentially relevant information.

By way of introduction, a raft of information, including selected versions of certain public filings, can be found at the principal public portal of â The Clinton Foundation.â

<https://www.clintonfoundation.org/about-the-clinton-foundation#reports-financials/>

This website is noteworthy, in part, because it excludes certain highly relevant, if not fundamental, documents that seem crucial in any fair-minded assessment of â The Clinton Foundationâ .

Public records concerning The Clinton Foundation are voluminous and perplexing, spanning more than 26 years and, significantly, missing a key initial periodâ 23 October 1997 through 31 December 1997. Supporting Exhibit 1 (available to paid subscribers) contains links to a subset of these, as well as to certain background information that is likely to prove useful to readers who are not yet familiar with key regulations and laws actually pertaining to a public charity [emphasis added] and to the much broader category of tax exempt organizations [emphasis added].

In my opinion, which is not informed by professional legal or accounting training, at least 12 broad observations seem relevant when evaluating public filings of â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ and supposed predecessor â organizations.â

1] No Organization Called â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ Has Ever Lawfully Existed Anywhere.

This conclusion is apparent reviewing laws and regulations concerning Arkansas nonprofit corporations as well as laws and regulations of various U.S. states and foreign nations in which â The Clinton Foundationâ has solicited donations and operated from 9 April 2013 when, in theory, â William J. Clinton Foundationâ filed a purported certificate of amendment attempting to change its name to â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation.â

On 9 April 2013, â William J. Clinton Foundationâ did not have amended and conformed [emphasis added] Articles of Incorporation, or Bylaws of any kind, according to records filed and available in key U.S. states including New York and California, among many others.

2] From 25 April 2005 Onward, â The William J. Clinton Foundation,â â William J. Clinton Foundation,â and â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ Did Not Have Legally Required, Fully Conformed Articles of Incorporation.

On 25 April 2005, a purported certificate of amendment attempting to change the name of â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ to â The William J. Clinton Foundation,â in its Articles of Incorporation, was filed with the Office of the Arkansas Secretary of State. However, no attempt seems to have been made to conform changes asserted for Article I with key provisions in certain of thirteen additional Articles of Incorporation. Accordingly, Articles of Incorporation were no longer in compliance with Arkansas or other state laws, and with federal laws and regulations pertaining to tax-exempt organizations [emphasis added]. Arguably these purported organizations were then and afterward formless aggregations of individuals [emphasis added], so they cannot be exempt from income taxes.

Moreover, as is explained below, Trustees of â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ may have attempted to amend Bylaws effective 25 April 2005, but many of these purported Bylaw changes fundamentally conflict with Article VIII-Directors for â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ in Articles of Incorporation for this purported charity, and therefore are null and void [emphasis added].

3] From 25 April 2005 Through 1 November 2013 (and Possibly Later), â The William J. Clinton Foundation,â â William J. Clinton Foundation,â and â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ Did Not Have Bylaws Yet Operated in the Guise of Charity, In Violation of Numerous State, Federal and Foreign Laws.

Effective 25 April 2005, Andrew M. Kessel, who may not have been a Trustee of â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundation,â signed purported amended Bylaws for that entity as of the very day â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ supposedly changed its name to â The William J. Clinton Foundation.â

Ongoing review of public records filed in numerous U.S. states confirms that â The William J. Clinton Foundationâ did not have Bylaws from 25 April 2005 through 27 August 2007, that â William J. Clinton Foundationâ did not have Bylaws from 27 August 2007 through 9 April 2013 and that â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ did not have Bylaws from 9 April 2013 through 1 November 2013.

Without legally required Bylaws, the certificate of amendment of Articles of Incorporation purportedly changing the names of â The William J. Clinton Foundationâ to â William J. Clinton Foundationâ effective 27 August 2007 was and remains null and void. For the same reason, the certificate of amendment purportedly changing the name of â William J. Clinton Foundationâ to â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ filed 9 April 2013 was and remains null and void.

4] For Many Reasons, Including Those Mentioned Above, At Least Seven Sets of â Corporate Actionsâ Could Not Possibly Have Been Perfected Inside the United States, Nor Could Legal Actions in the Names of â The William J. Clinton Foundation,â â William J. Clinton Foundation,â or â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ Have Been Perfected Outside the United States, in Numerous Foreign Transactions or Arrangements.

These unauthorized and nonexempt activities involve work with at least seven, additional, purported tax-exempt â organizations.â

First, work described in the public domain with a purported tax-exempt organization called â Clinton Foundation HIV/AIDS Initiative, Inc.â (â CFHAIâ) that used EIN 20-0921629 beginning 24 March 2004 until the alleged merger of CFHAI with and into â The William J. Clinton Foundationâ effective 31 December 2005.

Second, work described in the public domain with a purported tax-exempt organization called â Bush-Clinton Katrina Fundâ (â BCKFâ) that used EIN 20-3599974 beginning around late August 2005.

Third, work described in the public domain with a purported tax-exempt organization called â Clinton Global Initiative, Inc.â (â CGIâ) that used EIN 27-1551550 starting 4 September 2009.

Fourth, work described in the public domain with a purported tax-exempt organization called â Clinton Health Access Initiative, Inc.â (â CHAIâ) that used EIN 27-1414646 beginning 29 September 2009.

Fifth, work described in the public domain with a purported tax-exempt organization called â Clinton Bush Haiti Fundâ (â CBHFâ) that used EIN 27-2122785 beginning about January 2010.

Sixth, work described in the public domain with a purported tax-exempt organization called â Alliance for a Healthier Generation, Inc.â (â AHGâ) that used EIN 27-2028308 starting on 22 February 2010.

Seventh, work with a purported tax-exempt organization called â C40 Large Cities Leadership Group Inc.â that used EIN 90-0634376 starting 22 November 2010.

5] While Soliciting Donations Across State Lines and National Boundaries and Receiving Hundreds of Millions of Dollars from 2004 through 2015, The Clinton Foundation Seemingly Failed to Disclose Important and Binding Provisions of a Material Agreement with the National Archives and Records Administration.

A binding agreement effective 18 November 2004 (the â NARA Agreementâ) between â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ (and its successors and assigns) with the National Archives and Records Administration (â NARAâ) appears to have been purposefully excluded from the public information portal of â The Clinton Foundationâ and in relevant public filings for the period November 2004 to date. This agreement binds The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundation and its successors and assigns to further, exclusively, only certain IRS-authorized charitable and educational purposes [emphasis added] and to remain a â public charityâ described in IRS Code Section 509(a)(1) and 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) [emphasis added].

It should go without saying for Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton who have numerous advanced educational degrees and who held many positions of public trust, that a tax-exempt public charity [emphasis added] must, in fact, be a lawfully organized and operated legal entity and that it cannot, at any time, be controlled by members of a single family, 6] By Its Own Admission, Under Penalties of Perjury, â The Clinton Foundationâ Furthered Purposes of More Than Insubstantial Value that Fell Well Beyond the Specific Charitable and Educational Purposes Described in its Application Seeking Tax Exemption ,Conditionally Approved by the IRS on 29 January 1998 and then Mandated in the NARA Agreement.

From incorporation on 23 October 1997, The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundation was authorized to further â scientificâ purposes in Article III of its Articles of Incorporation. Article III has never been amended [emphasis added].

Without setting up a formal legal entity and without registering as required under New York law, â The Clinton Foundationâ offered management consulting and economic development services in Harlem in the guise of a â Small Business Initiativeâ starting around 2001.

Without setting up a formal legal entity and without registering as required under laws of the state of New York, the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the city of Washington, DC or in nations including The Bahamas, the Eastern Caribbean Community, India, and certain European and African states, â The Clinton Foundationâ promoted the use of certain generic HIV medications beginning in 2002 in the guise of various initiatives including â Clinton HIV/AIDS Initiative.â

Starting by 24 March 2004, â The Clinton Foundationâ furthered supposed charitable purposes beyond operating a presidential library and research center in Little Rock, Arkansas through CFHAIâ a purported nonprofit organization that, to date, has offered no verifiable evidence it ever received formal, conditional tax-exemption from the IRS or that â The Clinton Foundationâ was ever granted explicit IRS approval to control CFHAI. These alleged charitable purposesâ certainly not mentioned in the application seeking tax-exemption for â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ in December 1997â were described as being:

â ...exclusively charitable, and shall be limited to bringing high quality medical care and treatment to people living with HIV/AIDS, to educating the public about HIV/AIDS prevention and treatment and to improving health delivery systems for HIV/AIDS projects in resource poor areas of the world.â

Starting by October 2005, â The Clinton Foundationâ appears to have furthered â religiousâ purposes with BCKF. Here, it is worth noting that Articles of Incorporation for BCKF do not appear to describe specific, tax-exempt purposes within the meaning of the IRS Code.

Commencing on 4 September 2009, â The Clinton Foundationâ appears to have furthered â charitable purposesâ with CGI that, in fact, are not exclusively tax-exempt within the meaning of the IRS Code, or described in the application seeking tax-exemption for â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ :

â ...engaging governmental, corporate, and nonprofit leaders, as well as college students and on-line participants in the development of concrete and measurable commitments to action to address some of the worldâ s most pressing challenges.â

On or about 29 September 2009, â The Clinton Foundationâ furthered â religiousâ purposes and other â charitable purposesâ through CHAI that, in fact, are not exclusively tax-exempt within the meaning of the IRS Code, or described in the application seeking tax-exemption for â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ :

â The specific purposes for which [CHAI] is established are exclusively charitable and shall include working with governments and non-governmental organizations to improve access to high quality health care for people living in resource poor settings in the world; to help prevent the spread of infectious diseases, such as HIV/AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis [emphasis added]; to help provide effective care and treatment to those suffering from these diseases [emphasis added]; and to undertake other economic and social development activities that help alleviate poverty and disease in resource poor settings [emphasis added].â

Beginning on 27 January 2010, â The Clinton Foundationâ seems to have furthered â religiousâ and â scientificâ purposes with CBHF that were described as:

â ...[CBHF] is formed to support relief for individuals in Haiti that were affected by the January 2010 earthquake and to assist in the rebuilding of Haiti.â

Starting on 22 February 2010, â The Clinton Foundationâ appears to have furthered â religiousâ and â scientificâ purposes and other â charitable purposesâ through AHG that, in fact, are not exclusively tax-exempt within the meaning of the IRS Code, or described in the application seeking tax-exemption for â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ :

â The specific purposes for which [AHG] is established are exclusively charitable and shall include working to create a healthier generation by addressing childhood obesity and to positively affect the places that can make a difference in a childâ s health, including homes, schools, restaurants, doctorâ s offices and communities.â

Finally, concerning supposed domestic organizations between 25 April 2005 and 1 November 2013, â The Clinton Foundationâ furthered â scientificâ , â literaryâ , and â religiousâ purposes and other â charitable purposesâ through C40 that, in fact, are not exclusively tax-exempt within the meaning of the IRS Code, or described in the application seeking tax-exemption for â The William J. Clinton Presidential Foundationâ :

â ...C40 is formed to conduct activities [note: not specific purposesâ emphasis added] that are exclusively charitable, scientific, literary, religious, or educational within the meaning of Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, as amended, but not limited to, those with a particular focus on addressing environmental and climate change issues.â

7] By its Own Repeated Admission Under Penalties of Perjury, â The Clinton Foundationâ Engaged in Unauthorized Activities of More than Insubstantial Value Outside a City Park in Little Rock, Beginning Early in 2001.

This fact is seen clearly in numerous public filings for â The Clinton Foundationâ for 1998 through 2015 that show substantial travel and conference expenses from 2001 through 2015, compared to minimal such expenses from 1998 through 2000.

8] Though Required under State, Federal and Foreign Laws to Make Complete and Truthful Public Disclosures, â The Clinton Foundationâ Failed to File Informational Returns Concerning the Period 23 October 1997 through 31 December 1997 and Filed False and Materially Misleading Informational Returns for the Years 1998 through 2015.

Free and paid versions of Tack #2: False Representations and subsequent free and paid offerings through www.charlesortel.substack.com will discuss numerous, apparent false public disclosures of a supposed tax-exempt organization using EIN 31-1580204.

What seems particularly significant now is the comparatively low level of spending on legal and accounting services when â The Clinton Foundationâ operated as Bill Clinton finished his second presidential term and, afterward, from 2001 through 2015.

In view of the deplorable quality of public filings from 23 October 1997 through 31 December 2015, one legitimately wonders whether the Board of Trustees was reckless in its apparent failure to discharge its fiduciary obligations of care, loyalty and obedience to â The Clinton Foundation.â

9] Compounding the Above Infractions, â The Clinton Foundationâ Falsely Claimed that it had Amended its Bylaws Effective 2 November 2013 in a Manner that Apparently Concentrated Operational Control in the the Hands of the Clinton Family, in Violation of the Articles of Incorporation, Undertakings to the IRS and Binding Obligations to NARA.

Readers and even government regulators may be forgiven for failing to appreciate the noxious elements of certain Bylaws contained in the â Amendedâ version dated 2 November as this version was either not filed in many key states, or filed well after the election results of November 2016.

Here it is important to understand that Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton may have been named â Class A Directorsâ and may have been given extraordinary powers that seemingly disqualify â Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundationâ from being deemed a Section 509(a)(1) and 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) organization [emphasis added].

10] Despite these Evident Failures Likely Disqualifying â The Clinton Foundationâ from being a Duly Authorized, Organized and Operating Public Charity, Numerous Donors may have Declared

Tax-Deductible Contributions to â The Clinton Foundationâ Identifying it Incorrectly as a â Public Charityâ from 2005 through 2015.

Normally, the IRS has serious concern when a donor claims a tax-deductible contribution to a purported â public charityâ and when the recipient is not, in fact, a â public charityâ or, worse, not even an organization [emphasis added] at all.

In view of this, one is particularly surprised that the IRS and other government regulators have not yet disciplined the Clinton family or â Clinton Family Foundation,â a supposed tax-exempt organization using EIN 30-0048438. According to versions of Form PF for this entity filed with www.propublica.org, â Clinton Family Foundationâ donated substantial sums to â William J. Clinton Foundationâ from 2007 through 2013, identifying it falsely as a â public charity.â

As we shall document in more publications, â Clinton Family Foundationâ is only one of many donors to characterize, falsely, numerous donations as being to a â public charityâ tied to a supposed tax-exempt organization using EIN 31-1580204.

11] Inexplicably, the FBI, IRS and Department of Justice Failed to Discern Substantial and Obvious Violations of a Raft of Laws and Regulations, During â Investigationsâ of â The Clinton Foundationâ that occurred from February 2001 through 2005, and from January 2016 Onward.

In future publications, we shall have much to say about one â investigationâ that ran for approximately four years from 2001 through 2005 and about a second one that began in January 2016, as primary season opened up for Democrats and for Republicans, in America, according to a report released by Justice Department Inspector General Michael Horowitz on 14 June 2018

We also trust that Special Counsel John Durham will go over these â investigationsâ as well as the one supposedly into Hillary Clintonâ s use of private servers and electronics devices before, during and after her service as U.S. Secretary of State to examine how much U.S. government money may have been routed through â The Clinton Foundation, particularly from 25 April 2005 through 1 November 2013 when it certainly was neither a public charity nor even a lawfully organized or operated organization.

<https://vault.fbi.gov/hillary-r.-clinton>

12] Also Inexplicably, the Attorney General of the State of New York and the District Attorney of New York County Failed to Prosecute â The Clinton Foundationâ for Numerous Apparent Violations of Laws Even as These Individuals Aggressively Targeted Donald J. Trump Foundation and Members of the Trump Family for Alleged Infractions that Appear Trivial When Compared to those of â The Clinton Foundationâ Within New York State and City.

<https://ag.ny.gov/press-release/2018/attorney-general-underwood-announces-lawsuit-against-donald-j-trump-foundation>

â Business Recordsâ of â The Clinton Foundationâ lie in tatters, based upon an ongoing private investigation into public filings discussed above and upon media and other reports issued to date. Yet, untruthful solicitations continue, even at the instant you are reading these materials.

Charity fraud is a scourge upon the body politic, inside and outside the United States that costs governments hundreds of billions in lost revenue and does untold damage to vulnerable persons worldwide who sorely need the resources of lawfully organized and operated, tax-exempt organizations

As we saw clearly when Lois Lerner had purview at the IRS over tax-exempt organizations and as we have seen ever since, the public cannot rely upon governments in the United Statesâ whether local, state, territorial or federalâ to enforce existing charity laws with the vigor that is clearly necessary and without regard to the political inclinations or connections of persons involved.

This will only change for the better when you get involved, pushing as hard as you can for fair and impartial policing of the vital tax-exempt, nonprofit sector, inside and outside the United States.

My latest cartoon features a police lineup. At such an event, the eyewitness chooses a perpetrator. In this case theyâre all guilty. Here is a list of the perps on display:

BARACK OBAMA

A fraud who was elected despite a stolen social security card and phony birth certificate, he became our most divisive president in history. He tried his best to destroy America in order to usher in globalism (socialism) as ordered by his Deep State masters. The Criminal in Chief allowed the Fast and Furious scandal under Eric Holder to take place, which led to murder. He gave Iran hundreds of millions of dollars, thus allowing better funding of their terrorism. He illegally spied on the Trump campaign. Obama rode rough shod over the Constitution daily.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

HILLARY CLINTON

Her crimes are legion. A creature of the Deep State central banker complex, she's well-versed in Alinsky tactics. She's a sociopathic liar and cackling murderer. She had Gaddafi whacked, thus destabilizing that region. Her most recent crimes involve her private server on which she illegally kept classified email. She destroyed evidence, but always seems to be above the law. While Secretary State, she sold influence in a pay for play scheme. Her Uranium One deal was a treasonous deal that put money in the Clinton Foundation coffers while allowing Russia to control 20 percent of our uranium reserves. That same Clinton Foundation cheated Haitian earthquake victims out of charity money. Her friend was arrested for smuggling kids out of Haiti as part of a child trafficking scheme. Satanism and pedophilia have become typical behavior among Deep State elites. Hillary destroyed evidence and promoted the big lie that Russia worked with President Trump to hack the election. She helped fund what became the Russian dossier on Trump, which was a complete fabrication designed to impeach the new president. Her behavior amounts to treason. Investigate and liquidate the Clinton Foundation.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo. Investigate and liquidate the Clinton Foundation.

HUMA ABEDIN

Hillary's best buddy and wife of convicted pedophile, Anthony Weiner. Hillary's confidential email ended up getting copied to Huma's laptop, to which Weiner had access. She's likely a spy for the Saudis and/or the Muslim Brotherhood. She uploaded government passwords to Yahoo, where they were promptly hacked.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

JOHN PODESTA

Wikileaks revealed his email which contained codewords for pedophilia. A spirit cooking advocate and possibly the son of Dr. Josef Mengele, Podesta and his brother Tony are friends with the Satanist, Marina Abramovic. John Podesta recommended drastic action to stop the DNC leaks. Seth Rich was murdered shortly thereafter.

LORETTA LYNCH

The former Obama Attorney General met with Bill Clinton on an airport tarmac to discuss getting Hillary off the hook for her crimes. Lynch recommended to Comey that the Hillary investigation be called a matter instead. Comey subsequently let Hillary off, saying she had no intent. Lynch must have known that making law enforcement decisions to favor one candidate over another is criminal misconduct.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

JAMES COMEY

The very tall FBI director made secret deals with Hillary and allowed her to destroy evidence. His investigation into Hillary was a sham. He leaked classified information in order to undermine President Trump. He's another example of the politicization and corruption of law enforcement officials.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

GEORGE SOROS

The leftist billionaire donated hefty sums to Hillary's campaign and to the Clinton Foundation. He also donated big money to anti-Trump protest organizations. Some organizations he funds also incite riots and murder. In other words, he funds anti-American groups and terrorists.

Recommendation: Arrest and confiscation of his fortune.

JOHN MCCAIN

The hot-headed (and cancer-headed) senator from Arizona is already a war criminal, so it's no surprise to hear about his ties to ISIS terrorists. He doesn't stop at mere sedition, however. A year ago, McCain handed off the bundle of lies known as the "Trump Russian Dossier" over to James Comey, so that the former FBI chief might start an investigation that would lead to President Trump's impeachment. McCain engaged in treason.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

BILL CLINTON

The former president and Sexual Assaulter in Chief received $500,000 from Russia for a speech. It was really compensation from the Uranium One deal. Bill also received gifts including one million dollars from Qatar. The Clintons are grifters and whores who have always been all-too willing to sell out their country for a buck. Their money laundering outfit known as the Clinton Foundation raked in billions of dollars from influence peddling, while masquerading as a charity organization. Haitian earthquake victims only saw a drop of the money earmarked for them via the Clinton Foundation. Bill made 26 trips aboard his billionaire friend Jeffery Epstein's "Lolita Express" to "Orgy Island." Clinton has a long past of sexual harassment and abuse of women, starting when he was governor of Arkansas.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

DEBBIE WASSERMAN SCHULTZ

New evidence has come out that she may have ordered the murder of DNC staffer Seth Rich, who leaked DNC corruption news to Wikileaks. Responsible for hiring and vastly overpaying her IT aide, Imran Awan, who transferred massive data from a House server to Pakistan. Threatened police not to look at evidence on a missing laptop that they had secured. Schultz made sure primaries were rigged in favor of Hillary.

Recommendation: Arrest and jail at Guantanamo.

Let's hope President Trump has ordered the preparation of a great many jail cells at Guantanamo. They'll be needed!

Voters in Ohio's 12th Congressional District appear to have narrowly elected Republican Troy Balderson in yesterday's special election, thwarting Democrats' hopes to flip another GOP-held seat ahead of the midterm elections. The race came down to the wire, but the incumbent party ultimately prevailed. There's a small chance that provisional ballots could trigger a recount, and that absentee ballots could shift votes, but left-leaning elections guru Dave Wasserman looks at the math and effectively calls the contest over, discerning that defeated Democrat Danny O'Connor would "need a miracle" to reverse the outcome. For all intents and purposes, and barring major developments, it's over; Balderson won. Winning is always better than losing (with very rare arguable exceptions), so the GOP has ample reason to celebrate -- but the broader picture is less rosy than they'd have you believe. A few key takeaways, starting with the good news for Republicans:

(1) A win is a win. I realize that's some deep and profound political analysis, but that's why they pay me the big bucks. Seriously, though, a loss would have been so much worse than a too-close-for-comfort victory. Sure, the House GOP conference would be down a seat, but the bigger problem would be psychological. Notching a second consecutive special election win in a fairly heavy \(+11\) Trump district would have been yet another shot in the arm to national Democrats. It would also have been a morale crusher for Republicans, whose fretting, demoralization and panic over a blue wave could at least partially spiral into a self-fulfilling prophesy. It could also have weighed on the minds of major conservative donors, who might be more inclined to close up their wallets in a hopeless-looking cycle. Narratives and optics matter, and Republicans seem to have averted a nightmare on both fronts by hanging on to this R+7 seat.

(2) The Trump-Kasich alliance worked. Suffice it to say that the President of the United States and the Governor of Ohio, both Republicans, do not care for one another. But they each strongly endorsed Balderson in this campaign, combining their efforts -- albeit indirectly -- to pull their preferred candidate over the top. Trump juiced and energized the base, going all-in for Balderson with a rally and tweets last weekend, while Kasich helped close the sale with Trump-skeptical educated suburban voters. I'd submit that without the assistance from both Trump and Kasich, Balderson loses. But disparate elements of the party came together and salvaged the seat.

(3) Republicans have now gone eight for nine in special House elections during the Trump era. For all the talk of a 'blue wave' (see more context below), this statistic is accurate -- and the president made sure to highlight it on Twitter:

Donald J. Trump

The Republicans have now won 8 out of 9 House Seats, yet if you listen to the Fake News Media you would think we are being clobbered. Why can't they play it straight, so unfair to the Republican Party and in particular, your favorite President!

(4) Nancy Pelosi is still a drag on Democrats. More than a few political pros are assessing that this MSNBC exchange (which we wrote about at the time) proved to be a decisive moment in the home stretch of the race:

..YouTube @YouTube

Liam Donovan

Lotta what-ifs in a race this close, but I wonder how this one shakes out if Chris Matthews doesn't wrestle O'Connor off his talking points on supporting Pelosi...

O'Connor finally admitted under pressure that he'd back Speaker Pelosi if push came to shove, and Republicans took that answer and sprinted with it toward the finish line. The NRCC cited it as a turning point in the campaign in their post-victory talking points, emphasizing that it also presents a national lesson, too:

And now, the...less good news for the GOP:

(1) This seat shouldn't be competitive. RealClearPolitics elections expert Sean Trende is likely right about this, tweeted before anyone had declared victory last night:

I know people don't want to hear this, but at this point it doesn't really matter. OH-12 shouldn't be a nailbiter for the GOP, even with two solid candidates running.

In case you missed it, here's his detailed, pre-election explanation of why a tight win in either direction would be a worrisome sign for the Republican Party. As I mentioned above, this is an R+7 district that Donald Trump carried easily. It's been in the R column for the last 36 years. The previous incumbent won with nearly 67 percent of the vote. Yet last night was nail-biter.

John Stossel

(2) Democrats gained considerable ground. In spite of the GOP's not-quite-official win, last night's vote tally represents the latest data point in a long string of 2017 and 2018 elections in which Democrats' share of the vote total has increased by double digits over 2014 and 2016. As I alluded to in the bullet point above, the Republicans' margin of victory in OH-12 in 2016 was 37 points. On Tuesday, it was a hair under one point. That is not a happy trajectory for the party, as it points to strong Democratic candidate recruitment, robust Democratic enthusiasm, disillusionment among a segment of traditional Republican voters, and a hostile national climate. If this district had been even fractionally less red, it could now be in Democratic hands.

I'll leave you with one more glimmer of decent news for Republicans, even as worrisome signs cropped up in Washington state and Kansas last night:

A modest winner last night: NRCC Chair Rep. Steve Stivers. If Dems couldn't win #OH12 under ideal circumstances, hard to see how they compete in #OH15 (also PVI R+7, but wider Trump margin & Stivers got 66% in '16).

BREAKING NEWS: Clear Evidence That Diane Feinstein is a Communist Spy\(whatever\)

WASHINGTON — 1997 — On Capitol Hill, Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) has emerged as one of the staunchest proponents of closer U.S. relations with China, fighting for permanent most-favored-nation trading status for Beijing.

At the same time, far from the spotlight, Feinstein's husband, Richard C. Blum, has expanded his private business interests in China to the point that his firm is now a prominent investor inside the communist nation.

For years, Feinstein and Blum have insisted that they maintained a solid firewall between her role as an influential foreign policy player and his career as a private investor overseas.

But such closely coinciding interests are highly unusual for major figures in public life in Washington. And now, as controversy heats up over improper foreign influence in the U.S. political process, the effectiveness of the firewall between those interests could be called into question.

http://articles.latimes.com/1997-03-28/news/mn-43046_1_china-connections We have so many hardcore communist in the government that if the American people were made aware of just how many, they would panic in the streets.

Of note, Jones currently runs the Penn Quarter Group, a "research and investigative advisory" firm whose website was registered in April of 2016, days before Steele delivered his first in a series of Trump-Russia memos. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., who reportedly was investigated for spying for China while she was chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, apparently was no lowly "driver" assigned to the San Francisco office. According to the Daily Caller News Foundation, the former employee who aligns most closely with the details provided about the "spy" is longtime staff liaison to the Asian-American community Russell Lowe.

feinstein china firewall not even a fucking firewall what they mean by firewall is, when all the corruption is exposed, feinstein can hide behind her cronies and claim ignorance and incompetence They know that if they verify who the spy is, millions of artists will descend upon his history with zero remorse. Fuck it, Iâ€™m still checking out Lowe anyway. Feinstein loves China so much that she just HAD to stand in Maoâ€™s room. I donâ€™t know how people let her slide with this shit for so long. Especially with her husband basically helping her hold the door open as Chinamen robbed California blind. What a disgrace! Yeah thatâ€™s the truth. Iâ€™ve been thinking sheâ€™s getting kickbacks from the Chinese in order to weaken our companies and more importantly disarm our populace. Just look at her glee when Trump was baiting with possibly making AR-15s illegal. That is a person who is imagining a fucking PAYDAY. She IS NOT thinking about saving lives at all. Former US Congressman Mike Honda (right) and Russell Lowe, the Secretary General of the Education for Social Justice Foundation, spoke about their efforts to publicize the comfort women issue in the United States during a visit to the Hankyorehâ€”s office in the Gongdeok neighborhood of Seoul on Oct. 15. (by Kim Jeong-hyo, staff photographer) Also present at the interview was Russell Lowe, 62, Secretary General of the Education for Social Justice Foundation, a San Francisco-based civic group, who agreed with Hondaâ€”s view. This is how Lowe put it: â€”Itâ€”s not true that there arenâ€”t any documents. BRINGING THE BIG GUNS TO THE FRONT AGAINST CORRUPT SENATORS

DOJ, FTC and SEC are strongly encouraged to expand their criminal investigation into short selling by hedge funds and research firms benefiting politicians as bribery payola. Federal law enforcement must more deeply scrutinize the symbiotic covert relationships between Senators and tech companies and hunt for signs that improperly coordinated trades broke laws to create profiteering schemes for corrupt U.S. Senators.

Investigators have found that Nancy Pelosi and her family, Dianne Feinstein and her family, Harry Reid, Kamala Harris and her family and other, mostly West Coast, Politicians and tech companies are doing stock market crimes together. Witness testimony has been that those politicians took bribes, through the stock market, for unjust gain while harming their competitors. Elon Musk, Goldman Sachs and those politicians, being, of course, one of the worst examples.

Federal probes, currently run by the DOJ fraud section with federal prosecutors in Los Angeles, are digging into how hedge funds tap into research and set up their bets, especially in the run-up to publication of reports that move stocks., ie: â Fake McKinsey White Papersâ created by Kleiner Perkins, Draper Fisher, Greylock, et al, to manipulate energy markets for Tesla, batteries, solar, etc. McKinsey produced and released hundreds of biased reports for the Obama financiers to push â Cleantechâ and lithium ion batteries which Obama's financiers exclusively owned. McKinsey's founder is quoted as promoting â monopoliesâ and â competitor destruction via liesâ .

While one is prying into financial relationships between hedge funds and researchers, and hunting for signs that money managers sought to engineer startling stock drops or engaged in other abuses, such as insider trading, the California politicians must not be ignored, protected or given a pass because they are friends with some DOJ officials or because it is politically embarrassing for certain elitists social lives...

Witnesses have sworn, warranted and certified that these West Coast politicians are engaging in felony organized crime using the stock market to receive bribes from companies that they favor, and, or own!

Underscoring the inquiry's sweep, federal investigators are examining trading in at least several dozen stocks, including well-known short targets such as Luckin Coffee Inc., Banc of California Inc., Mallinckrodt Plc and GSX Techedu Inc.

All reporters are watching to see if they hear that any federal investigator is ignoring the SpaceX, Tesla, Netflix, Google, Instagram, Facebook, etc. stock market payola to politicians because there will be hell to pay.

Peter D. Cair is the FBI's Elliot Ness in San Francisco. He busted one of the early NETFLIX stock scams. More recently, Other Netflix engineers were caught in stock scams. Why did the investigation, though not go all the way up to Obama and Susan Rice and their Netflix trades?

The feds must scrutinize over 100 tech firms WITH the help of unbiased SEC and FTC investigators.

Toronto-based Anson Funds and anonymous researcher Marcus Aurelius Value are among firms involved in the inquiry. Other prominent firms that circulated research on stocks under scrutiny include Carson Block's Muddy Waters Capital and Andrew Left's Citron Research. The investigations, though, MUST look at the deeply compromised McKinsey Consulting, which the Silicon Valley oligarchs lobby the feds to avoid looking.

This U.S. probe finally opens yet another front in an already treacherous era for those who try to profit on stock drops. Some bearish funds threw in the towel as government stimulus buoyed prices during the pandemic. That pressure intensified as retail investors organized counterattacks on popular short targets, bidding up shares to inflict losses on hedge funds this year. By late January, Citron vowed to give up short-selling research and focus on long bets.

Meanwhile, companies criticized by short sellers have become increasingly bold in firing back, sometimes launching legal battles even as they face government probes that ultimately support short sellers' theses. A number of corporate executives have been hoping U.S. authorities might help to further shift the focus to investors' tactics., ie: Eric Schmidt, Larry Page, Elon Musk, Mark Zuckerberg, Steve Jurvetson, Goguen, et al.

Government attorneys are trying to determine whether short sellers engaged in some form of deception -- say, by misleading the public about their financing of what appears to be independent research, violating confidentiality agreements with authors, or orchestrating stock plunges to panic shareholders and exacerbate selling! THEY DID and West Coast politicians profit from those crimes as payola.

We all know that DOJ has a database to look at every cent that moved in and out of Nancy Pelosi's 22+ family trusts, bank accounts, and investment bank funds for the last 20 years. The evidence is overt and tracks straight back to the Enterprise, but it is DEEPLY covered up by those who are friends with Pelosi at DOJ and other agencies. Covering up such crimes, though, is a felony itself!

Hedge funds are known to strike a wide variety of deals with researchers, sometimes paying handsome subscription fees for fresh insights into possible corporate trouble, or even becoming an author's primary source of funding. In one example, prominent financial investigator Harry Markopolos, who normally makes money from whistle-blower awards, said he partnered with a hedge fund to share profits when he released a report on General Electric Co. Politicians get the profits from such deals in exchange for keeping competitors to Tesla and SpaceX from getting funded.

Some hedge funds have been known to suggest targets to researchers, who then deliver scathing reports that harm companies that Senators own the stocks in.

One cautionary tale emerged in court after Dallas-based Sabrepoint Capital agreed to pay a short-selling researcher a monthly retainer of US$9,500 in 2018. Sabrepoint encouraged him to dig into real estate company Farmland Partners Inc. The researcher, who also wrote publicly under a pseudonym, later published an article on Seeking Alpha, setting off a 39 per cent drop in Farmland's share price. The company sued and used a judge's order to force him to reveal his identity: Quinton Mathews.

The entire stock market just seems to be a well oiled scam that only profits a few oligarchs and most West Coast Senators!

Mathews later said in a statement that he subsequently "learned" his article "contained inaccuracies and false allegations" and retracted it. He and Farmland reached a settlement. Sabrepoint has said it didn't know about the Seeking Alpha article.

Farmland also is on the list of stocks that the Justice Department is examining. Lawyers for Sabrepoint and Mathews declined to comment.

The Justice Department unit handling the inquiry already has a formidable reputation on Wall Street. It recently brought several cases against global banks and traders for illegal spoofing of precious metals and Treasury futures. As part of that probe, JPMorgan Chase & Co. paid more than US$900 million in penalties after its traders placed and canceled orders for commodities to benefit positions held by the bank or prized hedge fund clients. Those cases were brought by analyzing trading data for suspicious patterns and then attributing it to individual traders. The DOJ must GO TO THE TOP of these mobsters and take out Goldman Sachs bosses and U.S. Senators that run this MAFIA and the Elon Musk's and Eric Schmidt's that are their operatives!

While prosecutors in the short-selling investigation issued subpoenas as recently as October, the effort has been underway much longer. It is time for perp walks of Senators and not just the low level flunkies!

These inquiries gained momentum after U.S. lawmakers called for more scrutiny of short sellers following the so-called meme-stock trading frenzy that erupted in January. In a single week that month, retail investors sent the price of GameStop Corp. soaring more than 700 per cent before brokerages began limiting bets. Some organizers of the buying spree claimed hedge funds had been unfairly using their market clout to drive down stocks.

The compromised Senators have held multiple hearings on the fracas, at times discussing whether to force short sellers to boost disclosures but their hand-wringing is all for show. They fear that the dogs are on their trail.

Concerns about how short sellers carry out attacks have arisen repeatedly over the years.

The Securities and Exchange Commission and Justice Department have gone after hedge funds for running "short and distort" campaigns. The practice typically involves setting up bearish bets, then releasing misleading or inaccurate information about a company to drive down the price before closing out the position for a profit.

But there are also concerns about the impact that earnest research can have when itâs sprung by surprise on the market.

Studies by Columbia University law professor Joshua Mitts have found that short sellersâ reports can briefly induce bouts of panic selling before shares rebound. In those jittery moments -- sometimes mere minutes or hours -- well-positioned short sellers can cash out of trades and pocket significant gains.

Mitts examined more than 1,700 reports made by pseudonymous short sellers from 2010 to 2017, concluding that they contributed to more than US$20 billion in dislocated values or temporarily mispriced stocks.

Academics have been encouraging U.S. authorities to address the possibility that short sellers are laying out their cases against stocks, then using the impact of that news to quickly reap gains and quietly move on.

Early last year, Mitts and about a dozen other prominent securities-law professors urged the SEC to write rules requiring that short sellers who voluntarily reveal bets against a stock be required to disclose when theyâve exited the position. The professors also asked the regulator to write a new rule that would make closing a short position immediately after disseminating a negative report -- with an intent to do so upon publication -- constitute market manipulation.

Let us be clear: United States Senators are engaging in these crimes and manipulating DOJ, SEC and FTC efforts in order to protect themselves. That must end today!

Barack Hussein Soebarkah - Obama Used To Work For CIA

By Jason Kissner

One of the unexplained mysteries in the scanty documentation of the early life of the 44th President of the United States is the appearance of the name Soebarkah as his last name on an official document filled out by his mother.

In a recent contribution to American Thinker, Nick Chase offers very persuasive evidence that the long-form birth certificate released by Obama is a forgery.

While in the midst of developing an argument supporting the idea that Obama was adopted by the Indonesian Lolo Soetoro, Chase states:

Finally, we have Stanley Ann Soetoro's 1968 application to extend her 1965 passport (now destroyed) for an additional two years, as shown in Figure PPA.

On the second page of the application, Ann moved to exclude her son Barack Hussein Obama (Soebarkah) from her passport, but the item has been crossed out -- perhaps on the advice of the consulate in Jakarta, as this would have left seven-year-old Barry passportless -- so it didn't happen.

The appendage "(Soebarkah)" has never been satisfactorily explained by anyone, and I certainly don't know what "Soebarkah" means, but it does seem to indicate a name change or change in citizenship status for the boy.

Clearly, just what constitutes "a satisfactory explanation" varies with respect to persons, subject matter, context, and so forth.

And yet, there is a very good -- and simple -- explanation for the seemingly random appearance of the sobriquet "Soebarkah" on Mother Soetoro's passport application.

Believe it or not, the reason may be linked to one Loretta Fuddy.

Yes, that Loretta Fuddy -- the Hawaii state health director who approved the release of Obama's long-form birth certificate and who has apparently succumbed to a nasty case of post random plane crash induced arrhythmia.

Ann Soetoro and Loretta Fuddy appear to have one very odd thing in common: both have been linked to the Subud cult, which originated in, of all places, Indonesia and was founded by the Javanese Muslim Muhammed Subuh.

The smallish cult appears to have had, at least circa 2001 and according to this profile of sorts in the Honolulu Advertiser, 20,000 members worldwide. Notice the picture of Deliana Fuddy, then "regional helper" and member of the faith? Let's return to her Subud status in a second.

Note also that the World Subud organization seems to have been based in, of all cities....wait for it...Chicago. Indonesia...Chicago...Hawaii... three locales linked to Obama's life.

Next, observe that the Advertiser article states that Subud was introduced to Hawai'i in the 1960s (more on this in the conclusion).

Now to Ann Soetoro. She was linked to Subud by her biographer (and New York Times reporter) Janny Scott (Harvard '77) in the book A Singular Woman: The Untold Story of Barack Obama's Mother, reviewed by the New York Times here.

Loretta Fuddy was more than merely a follower of Subud; she worked her way up the ranks and became chairwoman of Subud USA, based in Seattle from 2006 to 2008, and was known to Subud not merely as Loretta Fuddy, but as "Deliana" Loretta Fuddy. In fact, you can see that in its headline, the official Subud "memorial" page drops "Loretta" and refers simply to "Deliana" Fuddy.

Ann Soetoro's close association with members of the Subud cult will be documented below. But first, note in passing that of all the persons -- Christian, Jew, Muslim, Buddhist, Atheist, Hindu, or you-name-it -- that could have been installed as Director of the State Department of Health in Hawaii, Hawaii alighted on Fuddy -- a leader of a small cult with roots in Indonesia and connections to Ann Soetoro -- Obama's mother. Second, observe that Fuddy assumed the Director position in Hawaii in January 2011, just a few months before the release of Obama's long form birth certificate.

Now to Ann Soetoro's links with Subud and to a brief discussion of the Barry "Soebarkah" mystery associated with Ann Soetoro's 1968 passport renewal application.

Read the following excerpt from SubudVoice in 2011 (and please note that I have italicized a couple of sentences to emphasize that the Subud "Staff Reporter" is drawing on material from Janny Scott's biography of Ann Soetoro; they aren't simply making an anonymous, empty assertion that can't be substantiated.)

Obama's mother and Subud

By Staff Reporter...

A Singular Woman: The Untold Story of Barack Obama's Mother, a biography of the mother of US President Obama, Ann Dunham Sutoro, contains several references to Subud. As is generally known Obama lived with his mother in Jakarta for some years...

Arianne (no second name) wrote to me to say, "Talked to Irin Poellot who is reading the book about Obama's mother and has already run into several literal mentions of Subud!!! I remember the late Mansur Madeiros mentioning he knew her in Indonesia and he is mentioned in the book! I can't help wondering if we will get inquiries about Subud since it is mentioned often in a book which probably will be widely read. It also is a delicious fact that our Subud sister, Ms Fuddy, just was appointed to her post in the Health Dept in Hawaii in time to be involved in the documentation of fact that Obama was born there."

I wrote back asking for more specific information and Arianne replied, "Irin kindly supplied some quotes: In chapter 4 "Initiation in Java" the Subud members are quoted. And then (on page 116): "...she (Ann) was hired to start an English-language, business-communications department in one of the few private non profit management-training schools in the country."

Ann "found a group of young Americans and Britons enrolled in an intensive course in Bahasa Indonesia, the national language, at the University of Indonesia recalled Irwan Holmes, (a member of the original group). She was looking for teachers. A half dozen of them accepted her invitation, many of them members of an international spiritual organization, Subud, with a residential compound in a suburb of Jakarta.."

AndMohammad Mansur Madeiros, a reclusive and scholarly Subud member from Fall River, Massachusetts, and Harvard, whom Ann hired as a teacher, had immersed himself so deeply in Javanese culture, language and religion that friends nicknamed him Mansur Java. When he died in 2007, friends recalled his preference for the company of ordinary Indonesians --street vendors and becak drivers -- over that of other Subud members and expatriates."

But what might the Ann Soetoro, Deliana Fuddy, Subud links really have to do with the sobriquet Barry "Soebarkah"?

To help answer that, transport yourself backward in time and sit at the feet of the Indonesian Subud master Bapak circa 1963:

Question: I Many people in Subud change their names. Is this necessary? Is it important? How does the change of a name affect us? Physically, spiritually or both?

Bapak: Brothers and sisters, whether it is necessary or not depends on what you want....

If changing one's name for "spiritual reasons" was something frequently done by followers of Subud's Bapak, and Stanley Ann Soetoro was in fact closely associated with Subud, it is reasonable to suppose that "Soebarkah" arose in the same way new names for others (like "Deliana" Loretta Fuddy?) associated with Subud did: as a matter of course depending on the case.

Readers might agree that the above is a quite reasonable account of the origin of Barry "Soebarkah."

But there is something else. The above biographical material bonds Ann Soetoro to Subud members via an English language, business communications department post. According to the New York Times here, that would have been around 1970 or 1971. However, the passport renewal application with the name "Soebarkah" dates to 1968. This suggests that either the "Soebarkah" handle came from nowhere, or that matters are as we have discussed and that Ann Soetoro in fact came to Subud before 1970 -- perhaps in Hawaii.

Clearly, we might want to recall that the above linked Honolulu Advertiser Subud profile indicates that Subud was introduced to Hawai'i in the 1960s.

In closing, the Ann Soetoro's 1968 passport renewal application raises the spectre of possible Obama birth certificate fraud yet again. Have a look at page 2 of the document:

For a larger version, click here

"Sorebarkah" appears in the section labeled "Amend to Include (Exclude) Children."

The name Barack Hussein Obama (Sorebarkah) is crossed out.

Nick Chase has concluded that this signifies that Ann Soetoro had improvidently decided to exclude Barack from her passport renewal. Chase thinks that Soetoro changed her mind about exclusion after having been informed by the Consulate that doing so would leave Barack passportless.

But there is another possibility -- one just as valid on its face.

What if Soetoro was trying to include Obama in the renewal, but she wasn't able to produce a birthcertificate, and the Subud name "Soebarkah" just didn't do the trick? (hat tip Louise Hodees for the "inclusion" possibility; one can't be certain why she did not link the inclusion possibility to Soebarkah).

That could explain why the name Subud name "Soebarkah" appears nowhere else (that we are aware of anyway),

Of course, we might then have to wonder exactly how Obama did his traveling at certain points in time, but then perhaps Subud is, at least at times, more than a mere cult?

Barack Obama and John Brennan should be facing imminent criminal indictments (Natural News) Itâs been confirmed that President 44 has formally retained legal counsel in response to multiple potential criminal indictments that both he and former CIA Director John Brennan could very soon be facing.

Insiders familiar with whatâs going on claim that Barack Obama is on the verge of being charged with the following crimes:

â Material Support of Terrorismâ for his involvement with trying to overthrow the current Syrian government.

â Creating, funding, and arming the group known as the Islamic State of Iraq and Syria (ISIS), also sometimes referred to as the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), which facilitated a litany of â war crimes and crimes against humanity including numerous murders (some by public beheading), torture, rape, theft of oil from Iraq and from Syria, laundering of money from sale of stolen oil, destruction of historical antiquities and â conspiracy to commit such acts withâ â leaders of other foreign nations.

â Shielding drug trafficking by Hezbollah,â as well as making unlawful payments of ransom money as part of his effort to secure a deal with Iran on nuclear inspections.

â Briberyâ for any money he took in from the Uranium-One conspiracy, which involved selling 20 percent of United States uranium to a Russia-controlled country.

These are just a few of the many crimes that not only Obama but also Brennan and many others may be found guilty of committing following the unsealing of their believed-to-be indictments. Hal Turner discussed this on a recent episode of his â The Hal Turner Radio Show,â which you can access at this link.

Sponsored solution from the Health Ranger Store: Lab-verified Nascent Iodine solution is a dietary supplement that provides your body with supplemental iodine to help protect your thyroid during radiation exposure. Nuclear accidents such as Fukushima (or nuclear war) can expose your body to radioactive iodine-131, a dangerous radioisotope. Pre-loading your system with stable iodine occupies the iodine receptor sites on your organs, causing your body to naturally expel radioactive iodine you may have been exposed to through air, food, water or milk products. This defensive strategy is recommended by nearly all health authorities, worldwide, including the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. Discover more at this link.

Remember all those sealed indictments? They're about to start being unsealed, according to some

On his show Operation Freedom, Dr. Dave Janda from USAWatchdog.com has been covering what's been going on with Brennan as well, revealing that it's almost time for the first wave of indictments to be brought to light and that Brennan is likely included in this sweep.

Everybody who is a freedom fighter is tired of hearing it's going to happen, it's going to happen, it's going to happen, and nothing is happening, says Dr. Janda.

What I am told and have been told, and it's been consistently told to me, is you are going to start to see movement on the indictments after the primaries are over. The primaries are over on August 7. I think there is going to be restoration of the rule of law. That means serving of indictments.

While some say that there are now over 40,000 sealed indictments, Dr. Janda believes that only a small fraction of these are going to be unsealed and implemented, at least initially. Some of these indictments are expected to be high-profile names like Brennan's, which could come as a shock, especially to deranged liberals.

My understanding is they are not going to dump 1,000 sealed indictments at a shot, adds Dr. Janda.

It is going to come in sections and in waves. I think one of the prime players that is going to get dropped in the indictments is John Brennan, former Director of the CIA. I have been told that John Brennan is going to be held accountable for his past actions.

This is believed to have been one of the subjects discussed between Presidents Putin and Trump during their recent meeting in Helsinki. Dr. Janda says that the two, concerned about deep state spying and meddling, actually met secretly on Air Force One to discuss what's about to be revealed.

This is why there was such a hysterical reaction after the summit, Dr. Janda says.

They were whisked off and actually went to Air Force One because they felt that was the most secure environment where no surveillance could be implemented. This is the third meeting that nobody talks about that was held on Air Force One where information was handed over from Trump to Putin and from Putin to Trump about Deep State players and activities that were occurring in their respective countries around the world.

Ben Carson Discovers Obama's HUD is raping Americans via over $516.4 BILLION In Mismanaged Funds

COMMENTS

Housing and Urban Development Secretary Ben Carson has gotten down to business.

The results of a new, independent audit of the last years of President Barack Obama's term 2015 and 2016 show an incredible mismanagement of funds and a wealth of errors.

Here's what Audit Report 2017-FO-0005, released Wednesday, notes:

The total amounts of errors corrected in HUD's notes and consolidated financial statements were $516.4 billion and $3.4 billion, respectively. There were several other unresolved audit matters, which restricted our ability to obtain sufficient, appropriate evidence to express an opinion.

That is a lot of waste, fraud, and abuse.

The audit continues, noting exactly why they made a check-up of the department:

Our objective was to express an opinion on the fairness of HUD's consolidated financial statements in accordance with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) applicable to the Federal Government. This report presents our reissued independent auditor's report on HUD's fiscal years 2016 and 2015 (restated) consolidated financial statements, including an update to our report on HUD's internal controls.

The official report describes why the audit took place:

In accordance with the Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990, as amended, we are required to annually audit the consolidated financial statements of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). HUD reissued its fiscal years 2016 and 2015 (restated) consolidated financial statements due to pervasive material errors that we identified. Our objective was to express an opinion on the fairness of HUD's consolidated financial statements in accordance with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) applicable to the Federal Government. This report presents our reissued independent auditor's report on HUD's fiscal years 2016 and 2015 (restated) consolidated financial statements, including an update to our report on HUD's internal controls.

It also described a recommended course of action to correct the situation:

In accordance with the Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990, as amended, we are required to annually audit the consolidated financial statements of the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD). HUD reissued its fiscal years 2016 and 2015 (restated) consolidated financial statements due to pervasive material errors that we identified. Our objective was to express an opinion on the fairness of HUD's consolidated financial statements in accordance with U.S. generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP) applicable to the Federal Government. This report presents our reissued independent auditor's report on HUD's fiscal years 2016 and 2015 (restated) consolidated financial statements, including an update to our report on HUD's internal controls.

We are required by the Chief Financial Officers Act of 1990, as amended by the Government Management Reform Act of 1994 and implemented by Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Bulletin 15-02, Audit Requirements for Federal Financial Statements, to audit the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development's (HUD) principal financial statements or select an independent auditor to do so. The objective of our audit was to express an opinion on the fair presentation of these principal financial statements. In planning our audit of HUD's principal financial statements, we considered internal controls over financial reporting and tested compliance with selected provisions of applicable laws, regulations, and government policies that may materially affect the consolidated principal financial statements. Providing an opinion on internal controls or compliance with selected provisions of laws, regulations, and government policies was not an objective, and, accordingly, we do not express such an opinion.

Benefits For The Public Should Go Directly To The Public And Not Through Middlemen That Are Buddies Of The Politicians

Report: 75 Percent of $800 Billion Paycheck Protection Program Never Reached Employees

By Eric Lendrum

A new report by the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis revealed that American taxpayers ended up paying $4 for every $1 in wages and benefits that workers received as a result of the Paycheck Protection Program (PPP).

Just The News reports that the study also revealed how the PPP ultimately did not protect jobs that were at risk of disappearing during the pandemic, and that money overwhelmingly went to wealthier households rather than middle- and low-income households.

The study, titled “Was the Paycheck Protection Program Effective,” was written by co-authors William Emmons and Drew Dahl. They concluded that, while the PPP was a very large and very timely fiscal-policy intervention, saving about 3 million jobs at its peak in the second quarter of 2020 and distributing $800 billion well within two years of the onset of the COVID-19 crisis, the program ultimately was poorly targeted, as almost three-quarters of its benefits went to unintended recipients, including business owners, creditors and suppliers, rather than to workers.

Due to differences in the typical incomes of those varied constituencies, it also ended up being quite regressive compared with other major COVID-19 relief programs, as it benefited high-income households much more, the report continued.

The PPP was first created in early 2020 as a temporary program under the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security (CARES) Act, signed into law by President Donald Trump. The program was intended to aid small businesses that were ordered to either slow down or stop operations altogether as part of the initial lockdown measures. Low-interest loans could be made for up to $10 million, without collateral, for businesses with fewer than 500 employees.

The report by the St. Louis Fed ultimately found that small business owners spent $3 out of every $4 in PPP loans on paying back suppliers and paying other expenses. Overall, 72 percent of PPP funds went to households with incomes in the top 20 percent, according to the report.

How Could Biden Ignore The Sex Scandals And Abuse of His Science Leader?

(Jeff Epstein And Eric Lander Planning Some Sex Things)

One news site goes into the scandal in great detail. While, extreme, this article shows how far off the rails these sort of people get:

"The tale begins with a strange creature called Eric Lander and an equally strange character called Martin A. Nowak, currently on paid leave because of his ties to Epstein, each of them strange enough to have the king of strange as their friend, Jeffrey Epstein. The story deepens our last paper on this subject matter of â€¦ Epstein, MIT, A.I., the Covid app and lots and lots of cashâ€¦, and expands the overall context of a two sided scientific establishment at war to serve you scientific data. One group has the media light and the other does not.

From the academic arena the divide shows itself as between Berkeley on one side representing academia born of the nation and the Broad Institute representing the Zionist networks behind Jeffrey Epstein. Is it a coincidence that those in favour of the pandemic all tie in one way or another to the Epstein blackmail, be they celebrities, politicians or the entire global media, as it is the case that those with the correct and proper data come out of the institutions the taxpayer set up and have their voice quashed by the former?

From those statistics alone there has to be something the Zionistâ€¦s want that they aim to achieve through the faked up and completely false calling down of global pandemic. Could that want be the ability to genetically alter the entire global population, now and into the future, as they all become consenting patients in the wonderful world of Covid â€¦ 19? let us exploreâ€¦ !

We will begin with a quote from those aware of the odd fellow that is Eric Lander head of the Broad Institute back in 2016 :

â There is something mesmerising about an evil genius at the height of their craft, and Eric Lander is an evil genius at the height of his craftâ .â

â Landerâ s recent essay in Cell entitled â The Heroes of CRISPRâ is his masterwork, at once so evil and yet so brilliant that I find it hard not to stand in awe even as I picture him cackling loudly in his Kendall Square lair, giant laser weapon behind him poised to destroy Berkeley if we donâ t hand over our patents.â

â On the flip side, the Broadâ s claim to the patent is under dispute, and is the subject a legal battle that could turn into one of the biggest and most important in biotechnology.â history.â
<http://www.michaelseisen.org/blog/?p=1825/>

CRISPR, short for â clustered regularly interspaced short palindromic repeatsâ , is an anti-viral immune system found in archaea and bacteria, that until a few years ago, was a well kept secret outside the small group of scientists, mostly microbiologists, who had been studying it since its discovery a quarter century ago. Interest in CRISPR spiked in 2012 when a paper from colleagues of mine at Berkeley and their collaborators in Europe described a simple way to repurpose components of the CRISPR system of the bacterium Streptococcus pyogenes to cut DNA in an easily programmable manner.

Such capability had been long sought by biologists, as targeted DNA cleavage is the first step in gene editing â the ability to replace one piece of DNA in an organismâ s genome with DNA engineered in the lab.

For the past decade, researchers, including Zhang, have been using proteins â zinc finger nucleases and TALENs â engineered to cut DNA in specific places to carry out genome editing in a variety of different systems. CRISPR demonstrated that its components could be used as a programmable nuclease. CRISPR having carried a lot of work on systems at the molecular level became essential to the Genome project in the application of its methods to the human cell.

Martin Jinek's work was carried out in the lab of Berkeley's Jennifer Doudna, and in close collaboration with Emmanuelle Charpentier, now at the Max Planck Institute for Infection Biology in Berlin, while Le Cong and Fei Ann Ran worked under the auspices of the Broad's Feng Zhang, with Zhang and Broad currently holding the important patents.

<https://www.buzzfeednews.com/article/peteraldhous/jeffrey-epstein-science-donations-apologies-statements>

The world was shocked in Nov. 25, 2018 by the revelation that Martin Jiankui had used clustered regularly interspaced short palindromic repeats (CRISPR) to edit embryos two of which had, sometime in October, become living babies. This article is an effort to provide some deep context for the He Jiankui affair and to begin analysing it. It focuses on He's experiment, without delving into the broader ethical issues around human germline genome editing in the abstract. It begins by carefully defining human germline genome editing. It then describes the little we know about the experiment before providing background on CRISPR, the pre-He ethical and legal status of human germline genome editing, and on He himself. The fourth, and longest, section provides a detailed narrative of the revelation of the He experiment and its fallout. The fifth section critiques the experiment, which I believe merits unequivocal condemnation on several grounds. The last section suggests some important immediate reactions, by Science and by China.

Although different people put different levels of moral value on ex vivo human embryos, what is important in this article is that He's experiment was on an embryo that was intended to create a human.

CRISPR-edited embryos should not be used. Not for the moment, that is :

<https://www.bioedge.org/bioethics/crispr-edited-embryos-should-not-be-used.-not-for-the-moment-that-is/13540>

The real shocker in this scientific fairytale is the ability to inflict the future with the madness of today, for that we need to understand the term; germ line and more importantly what it does. In short : germ line editing creates changes that a person's descendants can inherit, as opposed to changes that could not be passed on to future generations. Did you get that, with your DNA they can insert serious genetic changes and ultimately change the human genome as a reset, not unlike the days of Atlantis.

Biohacking Humans with DNA, Nanotechnology, IoT and 5G

Could it be that the vaccines they want to push on us, using the corona pandemic as a pretext, are connected to some kind of a deranged transhumanistic scenario? Apparently, Jeffrey Epstein had a maniacal goal to seed the entire human race with his DNA. If I read between the lines correctly, the fulfilment of this deed would take injecting his genetic code into the DNA of every human.

The Coronavirus exists although not in the format it is presented. Covid -19 is either a dud or a complete fake up.

Point of note – the ever encroaching demand that you get tested for the fantasy virus plaguing the media and corporate entities is an example of an unquestionable and menacingly enforced collection of your DNA. As important as the aforementioned science is itself, equally worrisome comes in the fact, the collectors of this data are free of all state regulation by definition of the collectors being private corporations. In the UK the corporations hide behind the almighty title NHS and in Manchester, the testing centres are now being handed over to G4S :

Question raised – is the Covid scam, in part, the means to procuring the DNA off the global population by terrorised consent to serve this insidious human genome project to be administered by the private realm? I would state a clear yes.

In essence what we are finding is a direct link between the – Covid-19 is real – brigade who insist that the world must dance – and there those who cite real tried and tested medical, chemical and biological science who have shut down the disco. The battle line is a clear cut case as to which body of data the hapless public will receive.

Battle-line Data

Harvard's Faculty of Arts and Sciences placed Mathematics and Biology professor Martin A. Nowak on paid administrative leave Friday after a review into Harvard's ties to Jeffrey E. Epstein found extensive and previously unreported contact between the professor and the convicted sex offender.

The Crimson reported in 2006 that Epstein donated $6.5 million to the program in 2003.

PED also provided Epstein with an office and keycode access to its building, which he maintained even after he vacated his visiting fellowship. Epstein also attended one of Nowak's undergraduate math classes. Even though Epstein did not donate to PED or Harvard after 2007, he played an – indirect but significant role – in facilitating a grant from the John Templeton Foundation to PED in 2015.

A University report found Epstein attempted to use Harvard and the Program for Evolutionary Dynamics, which Nowak directs, as a tool to rehabilitate his image following his 2008 conviction for solicitation of minors for prostitution. Epstein likely made more than 40 visits to PED's offices at One Brattle Square between 2010 and 2018, according to the report, which also states that Nowak approved the posting of flattering and false descriptions of Epstein's philanthropy and support of Harvard on the PED website. <https://www.thecrimson.com/article/2020/5/2/epstein-review-nowak-leave/>

Nowak also continued to facilitate meetings between Epstein and leading academics at Harvard and MIT. Pictures from one meeting in 2012, on an archived version of one of Epstein's foundation websites, show him at Nowak's office with a group including mathematician and geneticist Eric Lander, director of the Broad Institute of MIT and Harvard, and David Gergen of the Harvard Kennedy School, a CNN political analyst and former adviser to presidents Nixon, Ford, Reagan, and Clinton. <https://www.wbur.org/commonhealth/2020/03/17/broad-institute-covid-19-testing>

Genome-sequencing pioneer Eric Lander, one of the most powerful men in American science, did not embezzle funds from the institute he leads, sexually harass anyone, plagiarise, or fabricate data. But he became the target of venomous online attacks last week because of an essay he wrote on the history of CRISPR, the revolutionary genome-editing technology pioneered partly by his colleagues at the Broad Institute in Cambridge, Mass.

To be sure, Lander gave his foes some openings. He and the journal Cell, which published his essay last week, failed to disclose Lander's potential conflict of interest when it comes to CRISPR. The essay, other scientists said, got several key facts wrong, and Lander later added what he called clarifications. Stirring the greatest anger, critics charged that rather than writing an objective history he downplayed the role of two key CRISPR scientists who happen to be women.

Those missteps triggered a bitter online war, including the Twitter hashtag #landergate. Biologist Michael Eisen of the University of California, Berkeley, deemed his essay "science propaganda at its most repellent" and called for its retraction, while anonymous scientists on the post-publication review site PubPeer ripped into Lander's motives and character. The attacks spread well beyond science, with the feminist website Jezebel.com charging that "one man tried to write women out of CRISPR."

Questions raised :

Froebel

"Having worked long and hard on the life and work of Friedrich Froebel, we intended to refresh ourselves by revisiting educational controversies of the early twentieth century as recorded in Child Life, the organ of the Froebel Society from 1931-1939. The eye catching title of an article from 1933 drew us into the world of British froebelians and there, as we read on, we became aware of a process of transformation whereby Froebel's quintessentially German idealist philosophy became British empiricist froebelian theory Froebel inspired the educational innovators of Third Reich, according to Dr Blochmann, a prominent teacher trainer in the early thirties. Writing in the 1933 edition of the English journal Child Life she claimed that his ideal of womanhood was about to be realised : the National Socialist Movement had repudiated what it called the intellectual woman, declaring itself in favour of the warm-hearted mother, practical in word and deed. In The Froebelian Outlook in Germany she spelt her message loud and clear to her British readers." Quoted from a paper by Peter Jackson and Sang-Wook Lee.[1]

Froebel as a platform able to infringe upon the minds of a child, can be seen as the root system upon which the 4th generation industrial revolution is based.

Wuhan and Harvard

Epstein gave exorbitant amounts of money, at least $9 million (pledged $30 million) to researchers funded by DoD, DARPA, IARPA, and NIH at Harvard University with the expertise and technology to genetically engineer and improve bacteria and viruses.

One of Harvard's most prominent scientists who received $18 million from DoD and NIH was arrested and charged for operating a secret lab in Wuhan China just hours ago â This researcher was given over $1.5 million dollars to do so, in secret, by Chinese institutions.

Meanwhile, the area where the new coronavirus emerged (Wuhan) recently opened a biosafety level 4 lab (the only one in China, a country with 1.4 billion people) where researchers were actually studying and experimenting with the genetics of coronaviruses over the past few years before the emergence of this new strain.

http://arep.med.harvard.edu/gmc/gc_grants.html

Wuhan, China, the 7th most populated city in a country with 1.4 billion has a biosafety level 4 (BSL-4) laboratory that was recently established in 2015. It is apparently one out of 70 or so in the entire world (number was given by OP of the post linked above; my own search only turned up 52), and it is the only BLS-4 lab in the ENTIRE country of China. For those unfamiliar with what BLS-4 refers to, they are labs involving the study of the greatest biological threats and have the highest level of biosafety precautions. Interesting that both Shanghai and Beijing border Wuhan and yet not a single murmur of Covid 19 was uttered in both those cities during the entire script call Covid-19.

Biden Plans To Put Big Tech Cronies In Charge Of Big Tech Regulation As Political Payola

By Tristan Justice

Big Techâs election interference to propel Joe Biden to the Oval Office appears poised to pay off as the president-elect considers tech-friendly corporate lawyers to lead the antitrust division at the Department of Justice.

According to The Intercept reporting with The American Prospect, Renata Hesse, a former Obama Justice Department official who went on to work for Google during the Trump years, is a top contender to lead the antitrust division at the DOJ during a pivotal moment for the California tech giants facing intense pressure from government regulators on both sides of the aisle. While in private practice, Hesse played a primary role in the Amazon merger with Whole Foods and also represented major pharmaceutical giants.

â As recently as a couple years ago, Hesse seemed to dismiss antitrust concerns from Googleâs control of the online search market,â the papers reported, highlighting testimony at a field hearing with the Federal Trade Commission. â She also said that itâs âreally easy to switchâ away from Google if users donât like the product.â

The Intercept and Prospect also reported that Juan Arteaga, another former Obama DOJ official, is in the mix to be assistant attorney general for antitrust. Arteaga represented AT&T in its merger with Time Warner and has defended JPMorgan along with several other major financial firms in fraud cases. Sources reportedly told the papers, however, that Arteaga is more likely to land as deputy assistant attorney general for antitrust under Hesse.

The leading contenders have raised anxieties among Big Tech critics that a Biden administration staffed with former tech lawyers and lobbyists deferential to their corporate interests would be a missed opportunity at a critical time to reign in the unchecked power of a runaway Silicon Valley. The House Antitrust Subcommittee released the findings of its 15-month-long investigation on Big Tech anticompetitive market practices last fall, detailing bipartisan support for changes in tackling the monopoly power of Facebook, Google, Apple, and Amazon. There also remains a series of ongoing bipartisan state and federal antitrust lawsuits targeting Facebook and Google launched in recent months.

Forty national, state, and local groups sent an open letter to the incoming president Monday, warning Biden against choosing Big Tech elites to regulate Big Tech elites as the president-elect's team considers a series of high-powered veterans of Silicon Valley's corporate class for key roles in the new administration.

“As you prepare to take office, we urge you to avoid appointing to key antitrust enforcement positions individuals who have served as lawyers, lobbyists, or consultants for Amazon, Apple, Facebook, and Google,” the groups wrote through the American Economic Liberties Project. “Instead, we encourage you to appoint experienced litigators or public servants who have recognized the dangers of, rather than helped to exacerbate, these corporations’ market power.”

Colorado Republican Congressman Ken Buck also decried the potential appointments of friendly tech veterans to roles where they might regulate the same industry they spent years protecting.

Joe Biden should not be appointing someone who worked for Google and Amazon to lead the Antitrust Division.

This is very concerning for those of us who want to hold Big Tech accountable. <https://t.co/IKi0LyCRT0>

A high-profile push by Congress to rein in the nation's biggest internet companies is at risk of failing with time running out to pass major legislation ahead of midterm elections.

Alphabet Inc., Google, Apple Inc., Amazon.com Inc. and Meta Platforms Inc. and their trade groups have poured almost $95 million into lobbying since 2021 as they seek to derail the American Innovation and Choice Online Act, which has advanced further than any US legislative effort to address the market power of some of the world's richest companies.

After a nearly two-year battle, the bill is now at a critical juncture as the Senate returns this week for a final stretch before the November midterms. Backers of the measure swear they have the necessary votes, yet it's unclear if they do, and the Senate will be busy with other must-pass spending legislation.

The view that momentum for the bill is slowing is based on conversations with nearly two dozen of its supporters and critics -- including policy experts, lobbyists, congressional aides and advocates. One Hill staffer summed it up as a do-or-die moment.

If supporters of this bill had enough votes, it wouldn't be a bill, it would be a law," said Matt Schruers, president of the Computer & Communications Industry Association, which represents the major tech companies.

Failure would be a setback for politicians, activists and regulators who argue Silicon Valley has too much control over people's lives. It would mark a huge win for Big Tech, which has argued that the measure would weaken privacy, threaten national security and degrade products that consumers enjoy.

Even if this bill falls short, advocates say the attention on this measure has helped build the antitrust movement into something bigger than any one piece of legislation. Sarah Miller, head of the American Economic Liberties Project, an anti-monopoly nonprofit, said she supports the bill and wants to see it pass, but she said this is â not a one-time fight.â

â Now is a pretty good moment to move it through,â Miller said of the measure. â Is it the end of the road for bills dealing with big tech monopoly power? No.â

Although clipping the wings of tech giants through antitrust reform had support from both Republicans and Democrats during this Congress, a likely GOP majority in the House next year is expected to focus on allegations that internet platforms squelch conservative viewpoints.

Thatâ s why tech lobbyists have been trying to run out the clock. Leading Republicans like Californiaâ s Kevin McCarthy, who is on track to become Speaker under a GOP majority, have publicly opposed the antitrust push.

The legislationâ s sponsors can see the window narrowing. Antitrust advocates were expecting a vote before Congress adjourned for four weeks in August. But Schumer told donors in July that it didnâ t have enough votes to pass.

Minnesota Democrat Amy Klobuchar, who introduced the bill along with Iowa Republican Chuck Grassley, expressed confidence that Majority Leader Chuck Schumer will put the proposal to the ultimate test by asking senators to vote on it now.

â Once this bill comes to the floor for a vote, we are confident it will pass,â Klobuchar told Bloomberg News.

Amy Klobuchar

Photographer: Elizabeth Frantz/Reuters/Bloomberg

The bill has 13 co-sponsors in the Senate, where it would need 60 votes to pass and be sent to the House. Supporters like Yelp Inc.’s head of public policy Luther Lowe, a longtime Google critic, argue that enough undecided lawmakers would vote for the measure if it came to the floor.

A Schumer spokesperson said he’s working with the bill’s sponsors to find the necessary votes and he still plans to bring it to the floor.

Tech Antitrust Bill Threatens to Break Apple, Google’s Grip on the Internet

The bill was approved by both the House and Senate Judiciary Committees on strong bipartisan votes. Several amendments have addressed concerns about privacy and security issues. What hasn’t killed the bill has made it stronger, said Yelp’s Lowe.

The measure seeks to restrict the companies from favoring their own products, so that competitors who depend on these platforms to reach consumers wouldn’t be at a disadvantage. That could impact the design of Google Maps, the display of Apple Music on an iPhone or the prominence of Amazon Basics on the company’s e-commerce site.

Klobuchar’s staff members are working with several Democratic senators who shared concerns about the bill’s impact on content moderation, according to people familiar with the conversations. Hawaii Democrat Brian Schatz and Oregon Democrat Ron Wyden have pledged to support the bill if changes are made.

Still, its path to becoming law isn’t going to get any easier. Congress has to fund the government in September before the next fiscal year begins Oct. 1. And the Senate is planning to be in session for just two weeks in October before midterm elections.

“I don’t see it going to the floor,” said Michael Petricone, senior vice president of government affairs at the Consumer Technology Association, a trade group that counts Amazon, Google and Facebook among its members. “With an election coming up, I expect senators to come back and focus on issues that are popular with voters. Tech regulation is not one of those issues.”

LinkedIn Co-Founder Reid Hoffman, who notoriously backed a group that â spread disinformation during the 2017 Alabama special election for U.S. Senate,â is now being joined by other Big Tech billionaires in a plot to boost presumptive Democratic nominee for president Joe Biden in 2020.

Democrats are â scrambling to patch [Bidenâ s] digital deficits," according to Vox Recode. â [B]ehind the scenes, Silicon Valley's billionaire Democrats are spending tens of millions of dollars on their own sweeping plans to catch up to President Donald Trump's lead on digital campaigning. [Emphasis added.] Recode said these sweeping plans are poised to make [these billionaires] some of the country's most influential people when it comes to shaping the November results.

These billionaires in particular are funding everything from nerdy political science experiments to divisive partisan news sites to rivalrous attempts to overhaul the party's beleaguered data file.

As Recode tells it, Joe Biden has a problem. Silicon Valley billionaires think they have a solution.

Recode identified four major players from Big Tech that have the most ambitious plans: Reid Hoffman, Facebook co-founder Dustin Moskovitz, philanthropist Laurene Powell Jobs, and former Google CEO Eric Schmidt.

Hoffman, in particular, stands out from the rest. OpenSecrets revealed that political operations are pouring millions of dark money dollars into ads and digital content masquerading as news coverage to influence the 2020 election. One of those progressive operations is dubbed Courier Newsroom, which has faced scrutiny for exploiting the collapse of local journalism to spread hyperlocal partisan propaganda. Courier Newsroom is owned by the leftist nonprofit ACRONYM.

OpenSecrets reported that ACRONYM had received financial backing from Investing in US, an investment vehicle funded by Silicon Valley donor and billionaire LinkedIn founder Reid Hoffman. Recode said that Hoffman's aides have indicated that setting up partisan news sites that masquerade as journalism is one of the priorities of its group of allied donors. According to Recode, Hoffman has put around $10 million into ACRONYM.

But that isn't all Hoffman has been up to. Recode reported that Hoffman invested $18 million, his single-biggest bet this cycle, in a political startup called Alloy.

Recode reported that [t]he startup is attempting to build a warehouse to store the data that various progressive groups collect on voters and use it to try to get them to the polls. Recode continued: As part of its data acquisition, Alloy has bought some lists of voters' cellphone numbers, a data source that people say Hoffman's team, like other donors, sees as key this year due to the new need for digital campaigning.

The former Google CEO Eric Schmidt is also getting heavily involved this cycle. Recode said Schmidt has sunk money into the Democratic Data Exchange, a modest, competing effort by the Democratic National Committee to encourage data sharing by state parties to improve the party's beleaguered digital backbone. Recode interestingly assessed that Schmidt may be working more closely with the party than Hoffman.

Schmidt also had reportedly given a $4.7 million gift to the taxpayer-funded liberal outlet National Public Radio with his wife Wendy.

This focus on information distribution has also led many Silicon Valley donors, directly or indirectly, to fund projects like Pulso and PushBlack, which are quasi-journalistic plays focused on the Hispanic and African American communities, respectively, Recode said. Two things both Pulso and PushBlack also do? Register voters who are likely to be Democrats.

Tech billionaires, particularly Moskovitz and Powell Jobs, are unleashing millions into some of the country's most ambitious voter-registration programs â almost all of it behind the scenes â hoping to emulate what worked for Democrats in 2018,â according to Recode. [Emphasis added.]

About a dozen voter-registration groups, which included failed Democratic Georgia gubernatorial candidate Stacey Abrams's leftist group Fair Fight, gathered at Powell Jobs's â Emerson Collective headquarters in mid-March to raise money for their 2020 plans, sources told Recode.â

For Moskovitz, his â North Star is a desire to nail the lowest â cost-per-net-Democratic-vote.â â Recode said â [t]hatâ s largely led his team toward the funding of mail and voter-registration work.â

As Big Tech platform Twitter dips into editorializing Trump's tweets, it appears that other billionaire liberals from Silicon Valley are not going to be sitting idly by for a repeat of the 2016 election outcome.

These people operate like a private Mafia that use our government as their plaything!

On August 30th, Larry Klayman, founder of both Judicial Watch and now Freedom Watch, and a former U.S. Department of Justice prosecutor who was part of the trial team that broke up the AT&T monopoly during the Reagan administration, announced the filing of a class action lawsuit alleging suppression of conservative speech online.

The lawsuit alleges that social media giants Twitter, Facebook, Apple, Instagram, and Google/YouTube â conspired by entering into an explicit or tacit agreement, in parallel to each other, to restrain trade in violation of Section 1 of the Sherman Act. See Freedom Watch v. Google/You Tube et. al (Civil Action Number 18-cv-2030, U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia),â according to Freedom Watch USA.

â The class action complaint alleges that the intent and effect of this agreement in restraint of trade is to quash and/or limit advocacy by conservative and pro-Trump public interest groups, advocates and others to further the leftist anti-conservative agendas of these social media giants and to help bring down the Trump presidency and nullify the vote of the millions of citizens who voted for the president. These alleged illegal and anticompetitive actions are an integral part of the so-called â resistanceâ to remove President Trump and install a leftist government over the 50 states.â

The class-action suit demands damages in excess of $1 billion for four causes of action: discrimination in violation of the Washington, D.C. code; violation of the First Amendment of the Constitution; illegal agreement in restraint of trade, a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act; and intent to monopolize, a second violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Trending: WATCH: Laura Loomer Confronts Twitter Jack at Censorship Hearing, Gets Thrown Out

Klayman appeared on Fox Business one day before the Senate Intelligence Committee hearing that involved Facebook COO Sheryl Sandberg and Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey.

â Iâ m a former anti-trust lawyer, as you know, Charles,â Klayman told Charles Payne, a co-host of the Fox Business show â Varney & Co.â â I helped break up AT&T when I was a young Justice Department lawyer during the Reagan administration.â

â When companies move in tandem, in parallel fashion to do the same thing, that can be restraint of trade,â the Freedom Watch founder explained. â So we believe thereâ s an actual agreement between these leftist-owned media giants like Google, Twitter, YouTube, et cetera. [But if not,] itâ s conscious parallelism.â

The lawsuit alleges that Google, Apple, Facebook and Twitter â have engaged in a conspiracy to intentionally and willfully suppress politically conservative content.â

A Gizmodo article where former Facebook workers confessed to suppressing conservative news was cited in the Freedom Watch lawsuit where one worker admitted, â I believe it had a chilling effect on conservative news.â

On top of the two anti-trust claims, Freedom Watch accused the social media companies of engaging in discriminating against conservatives based on their â political affiliation,â which is illegal under Washington, D.C. law, where Freedom Watch is based.

The suit also argues that the social media giants â created, operate, and control public platforms that are for public use and public benefit and invite the public to utilize their platforms as a forum for free speech.â Even with that being said, they â act as quasi-state actors because they regulate their public platforms, thereby regulating free speech within their public forums.â

Some have called for the social media companies to be treated as if they were public utilities, but the anti-trust push treats them as the private companies that they actually are.

Donâ t forget these companies work with the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC), a left-wing manufacturer of slander and liable who recently paid a \$3.375 million settlement for defamation to Maajid Nawaz and his organization, the Quilliam Foundation for including them in their publication A Journalistâ s Manual: Field Guide to Anti-Muslim Extremists.

The SPLC now faces two other current lawsuits including one from D. James Kennedy Ministries (DJKM) for defamation, religious discrimination, and trafficking in falsehood. The SPLC listed DJKM as a â hate group.â

The Southern Poverty Law Center can also look forward to around potentially 60 individual suits all stemming from different Christian organizations that the SPLC unfairly labeled as â hate groupsâ all around the country, making this class action lawsuit all the more powerful.

Both Canada and America Hate Justin Trudeau

By Alan Freeman

OTTAWA — Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau no longer looks invincible.

After showing a steady lead in public opinion surveys for more than two years after his surprise October 2015 election victory, Trudeau appears to be politically vulnerable. And that's despite a buoyant economy, what's seen as a steady hand in NAFTA trade talks with President Trump, and a weak political opposition.

"All of a sudden, we saw this drop," said David Coletto, chief executive of Abacus Data, an Ottawa polling firm, referring to his company's latest poll, completed in early March. "It's the first time since Trudeau became prime minister that we have results showing the Conservatives slightly ahead."

CBC's Poll Tracker, which aggregates and weights the results of a dozen opinion surveys, reported in late March that the opposition Conservative Party is now in the lead, at 37.7 percent of voting intentions, compared with Trudeau's Liberals, at 33.7 percent. The left-of-center New Democratic Party was third at 18.5 percent.

Some observers say it's just a question of midterm blues, with a Canadian election not scheduled until the fall of 2019. But the real culprit seems to have been Trudeau's visit to India in February. During the week-long trip, Trudeau was widely mocked for wearing traditional Indian garb as he crossed India with his wife and three children.

For voters who had welcomed Trudeau's global status as a progressive political leader and proud international standard-bearer for Canada, the images of Trudeau in brash Bollywood outfits at well-known sightseeing spots were a serious comedown.

"When you have foreign media like CNN and BBC making fun of our prime minister, that was jarring for some people and made people question whether he was the best person for the job," Coletto said.

For critics such as columnist Andrew Coyne of the National Post who see Trudeau as charming but an intellectual lightweight, the India trip simply proved their outlook. "The little things that seemed so charming at first, all those dashing gestures and glam photo ops might well come to seem, at first frivolous, then irritating — an impression of unseriousness compounded by a series of bungled foreign-policy excursions of which the India trip was only the last," Coyne wrote.

Making things worse, Trudeau was harshly criticized for the dinner invitation made to Jaspal Atwal, a convicted Sikh Canadian terrorist from British Columbia, for an official Canadian dinner during the visit. The invitation was withdrawn after it was made public but not before inflicting significant political damage on Trudeau and his entourage.

Pollster Nik Nanos says whatâs striking about Trudeauâs dip in popularity is that itâs completely self-inflicted. Both the Conservative and New Democratic parties have new, inexperienced leaders who are making no significant impression on Canadians. In fact, Trudeau still leads by a healthy margin as the preferred choice for prime minister.

Trudeau and his family offer a traditional greeting as they arrive at the Palam Air Force Station in New Delhi on Feb. 17. (Manish Swarup/AP)

Besides the disastrous India trip, Nanos said that something else is going on. Thereâs a major gender divide when it comes to Trudeauâs support, and itâs only getting more pronounced.

Women have always been partial to Trudeau, not just for his movie-star looks but also his progressive social policies and his self-description as a feminist. Nanos said this divide grew more sharply as he continued to push a pro-feminist agenda, with Trudeau having lost about one-third of his male support since 2015.

Heâs been very gender-focused,â Nanos said. âWhen you focus so much on gender, it means that other voters, i.e. men, arenât as important.â

Trudeau corrects woman: 'We like to say peoplekind'

Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau corrected a woman at a Feb. 1 town hall saying, "We like to say 'peoplekind,' not necessarily 'mankind.'" (Reuters)

Nanos believes thereâs still plenty of time for Trudeau and the Liberals to turn things around. âThey have to return to a progressive agenda and focus on the middle class. That appeals to both men and women.â

Stephen Azzi, associate professor of political management at Carleton University in Ottawa, said he wouldnât put too much stock in polls 18 months ahead of an election. âGovernments tend to lag in Year 2 or 3 of their mandate,â he said. âI think they should be worried, but I donât think itâs all doom and gloom.â

Brennan With Strzok and John Kerry Worked to Set Up Russian Espionage Traps For GOP

A major new front is developing after the House discovered the FBI had a spy planted inside of the Trump campaign on top of the illegal wiretaps.

Barack Obama, arguably the worst president in US history, was wiretapping and listening in on all of the Trump campaign and transition team calls.

And now we know his Deep State minions had a spy inside the Trump campaign!

Kimberly Strassel lit DC ablaze on Thursday after she dropped a bombshell in a Wall Street Journal article titled, “About That FBI Source.”

Strassel, citing WaPo’s story using “unnamed law-enforcement leakers” says Nunes’ request dealing with a “top secret intelligence source” may very well mean the FBI had a plant inside the Trump camp:

Thanks to the Washington Post’s unnamed law-enforcement leakers, we know Mr. Nunes’ request deals with a “top secret intelligence source” of the FBI and CIA, who is a U.S. citizen and who was involved in the Russia collusion probe. When government agencies refer to sources, they mean people who appear to be average citizens but use their profession or contacts to spy for the agency. Ergo, we might take this to mean that the FBI secretly had a person on the payroll who used his or her non-FBI credentials to interact in some capacity with the Trump campaign.

Everybody wants to know who this plant was and who he was funneling information to inside various government agencies.

Investigative reporter for The New York Post, Paul Sperry says in the summer of 2016, former CIA Director John Brennan, through his FBI liaison, Peter Strzok, with the help of former Secretary of State John Kerry were trying to set Russian espionage traps for minor players in the Trump camp.

Sperry tweeted: DEVELOPING: A major new front is opening in the political espionage scandal. In summer 2016, Brennan with his FBI liaison Strzok, along with help from Kerry @ State, were trying to set Russian espionage traps for minor players in the Trump campaign through cultivated intel assets

Hereâ s what we know about John Kerryâ s involvement with Hillaryâ s phony Russia dossier so far:

Byron York of the Washington Examiner previously reported that the Obama State Department was being probed as to whether or not they had a hand in the dossier. York notes Steele was viewed inside the Obama State Department as a valuable source for intelligence on all things Russia. Obama State officials made a habit of disseminating reports the former British spy authored for private clients around the Department:

According to a March report by investigative reporter, Sara Carter, John Kerry was officially under investigation by the House Intel Committee for his â possible roleâ in the Steele dossier.

Sara Carter reported:

The House Select Committee on Intelligence is now investigating former Secretary of State John F. Kerryâ s possible role into the unverified dossier paid for by the Democratic National Committee and Hillary Clinton Campaign, this reporter has learned. The dossier, assembled by a former British spy, laid the foundation for the FBIâ s investigation into alleged collusion between President Trump and Russia and was the essential piece of evidence used by the FBI to get a warrant to spy on a former volunteer for the Trump campaign.

Chairman Nunes is also investigating whether former CIA Director John Brennan perjured himself in a public testimony about the dossier.

Paul Sperry reported via Real Clear Investigations:

In his May 2017 testimony before the intelligence panel, Brennan emphatically denied the dossier factored into the intelligence community's publicly released conclusion last year that Russia meddled in the 2016 election to help Trump's chances of victory.

Brennan also swore that he did not know who commissioned the anti-Trump research document (excerpt here), even though senior national security and counterintelligence officials at the Justice Department and FBI knew the previous year that the dossier was funded by the Hillary Clinton campaign.

Peter Strzok was removed from Mueller's team after anti-Trump text messages were discovered by the Inspector General.

Strzok also teamed up with McCabe to ambush General Flynn in a surprise FBI interview which led to his firing; Flynn then pleaded guilty for lying to the FBI.

Rumors are flying and a few names are being thrown around about who this possible FBI plant may be, but once it's revealed, all hell is going to break loose. This is a HUGE development.

No wonder why Rosenstein is fiercely working to keep documents from the House Intel Committee and House Oversight Committee.

Story developing!

Global Intel Hub (Zero Hedge Exclusive) -- 9/23/2018 -- A Supreme Court Judge Brett Kavanaugh is tied up in a controversy that can prevent him from being elected to the Supreme Court for life.

All of the other witnesses have come forward and stated they have no recollection of the event, and have taken a step further to say that Brett Kavanaugh is an honest, ethical, and respectable individual:

Everyone at the party has said they have no idea what Christine Blasey Ford is talking about, even her longtime friend Leland Ingham Keyser! Also potentially damaging to Blasey Ford's claim is a theory presented Thursday by Ed Whelan, a former clerk to USSC Justice Antonin Scalia and currently president of the Ethics and Public Policy Center (EPPC), a conservative think tank. Using entirely circumstantial evidence which could certainly ruin the life of the man at the center of the new theory, Whelan suggested that Kavanaugh's high school doppelgänger, Chris Garrett, may have in fact been responsible for Blasey Ford's recollection of the alleged incident.

Before we dig deeper let's understand deep state forces a bit better. The CIA, et. al (this means in latin 'and friends') utilize a number of techniques to achieve their goals, 'whatever works.'

If a man attacks a woman or a woman attacks a man, or a man attacks a man (we have to be PC here, unbiased - right?) or an animal attacks a man, or a man attacks an animal, or an alien attacks a man or a woman or an animal - it's not right. We are not by any means saying that it's "OK" for anyone to abuse anyone, verbally, emotionally, physically, indirectly. But let's stop right there - what actually happened here? Something that cannot be verified, into he said she said insanity. Was there any injury? If it was such a 'crime' why wasn't it reported at the time, when the memory was fresh? Why was there not other similar incidents? (If you do the research, when people have real problems it usually manifests itself again and again.)

After seeing the CIA in action against information heroes like Julian Assange, we created a simple hypothesis based on history, based on their traditional Modus Operandi (MO). What if this 'incident' was a total fabrication, part of a CIA "Honeytrap" ? To test our hypothesis, we did a simple Google search to see if there were any keyword relations including 'clintons' and 'cia' and sure enough, all 10 of the top 10 results, including the most interesting story which has already been reported. This person's father works for the CIA but not only that - he was an executive of the bank that handles the CIA's black budget! You can't make this stuff up!

Christine's Father Has Worked, and Still Works, For the CIA.

In addition to the other info that has recently surfaced, an article from the site ImpiousDigest states that Christine's father, Ralph G Blasey Jr. had worked for the CIA and was a vice president, at one time, for the National Savings and Trust's black budget bank allegedly known for funding CIA deep state operations.

The article does cite numerous articles for this claim, stating:

Linked to Dr. Blasey's SVR file of known and/or suspected CIA operatives, this report notes, is that of her father Ralph G. Blasey Jr. a proven CIA operative who, from June-1962 to January-1974, was the Vice President of National Savings and Trust of Washington, D.C. a CIA black budget bank best known for being 100 paces from the White House, and whom, in 1998, was taken over by SunTrust Bank whose majority share owner is the CIA-linked investment fund BlackRock.

The importance of noting the CIA banking connections of Ralph G. Blasey Jr., this report explains, is due to the outbreak of what is now known as the CIA Bank War and whose start of, in 1982, a CIA seized from publication news report (Declassified in Part-Sanitized Copy Approved for Release 2012/09/05: CIA-RDP90-00965R00150010-7) describes as: This is Wall Street, the center of the international banking system, a system on the edge of a crisis so severe that the Central Intelligence Agency is preparing drastic measures. Something must be done to avert the breakdown of the Free World's monetary system.

The article also states that Blasey JR. is still a Vice President for a security guard corporation that provides protection to Deep state entities. The article elaborates:

CIA black money operative Ralph G. Blasey Jr. remains secure, too and who, today, is the Vice President of Business Development of Red Coats, Inc. whose Admiral Security Services provides armed security for a Deep State elites in Washington D.C. that is overseen by Red Coats, Inc. co-founder and Vice Chairman William F. Peel III and whose Datawatch Systems, Peel III also controls, has US government contracts extending till 23 June 2023 under the category of 246.42.1 to provide US defense and intelligence agencies with facility management systems to include accessories and repair parts, computerized systems for surveillance, monitoring, controlling, signaling and reporting multiple functions

Whether or not this is 100% accurate cannot be said, but it does give some insight on potential motivations on why Ford decided to come out now, instead of earlier. It is also important to note that Blasey Jr. did, in fact, know of a researcher while at the CIA, Stanford University Psychiatric Professor Dr. Frederick T. Melges, who helped craft the highly publicized and widely controversial MKUltra Program. Christine, to reiterate, is a professor at the same university working in psychotherapy, especially the affects of psychotropic drugs on children.

Let's also remember that we have seen this before, take a look at the case of Julian Assange who was facing serious charges - and these charges were originally what led him to hide (not charges against Wikileaks itself).

What has most engaged the conspiracy theorists and Assange's more excitable defenders, however, are a few key incidents in Miss A career, in particular that she is said to have worked in the Swedish embassy in the US, and wrote her university thesis in 2007 on a vision of Cuba after the death of Castro.

This has led to widespread allegations that the woman is a CIA agent, planted as a honeytrap to bring down Assange. One blogger notes: "[Assange] just happens to meet a Swedish woman who just happens to have been publishing her work in a well-funded anti-Castro group that just happens to have links with a group led by a man at least one journalist describes as an agent of the CIA: the violent secret arm of America's foreign policy.

All in a days work.

For a very detailed and well documented case about the CIA Black Bank which is interesting reading, see this article from Impious Digest:

An intriguing in-depth new Foreign Intelligence Service (SVR) report circulating in the Kremlin today states that a Stanford University Psychiatry Professor named Dr. Christine Blasey has become the latest centerpiece of a Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) plot to harm President Trump with her last-minute allegation, just days prior to US Senate confirmation, that Supreme Court nominee Brett Kavanaugh had attempted to sexually assault her over 30 years ago when they were teenage school children while being kept from the American people about Dr. Blasey is that she currently oversees the CIA Undergraduate Internship Program Stanford University developed by the notorious CIA-connected Stanford University Psychiatric Professor Dr. Frederick T. Melges who himself, in 1985, took into his care the homeless woman Lois Lang who assassinated CIA paymaster Nick Deak and that afterwards saw the CIA sblack operations monies being controlled by Ralph G. Blasey Jr. who, not so mysteriously, just happens to be the father of Dr. Christine Blasey.

Of course, this theory is perfectly, logically, and legally impossible to prove, as the CIA operates under the explicit cover of national security, which is the end all and be all of the Shadow Government.

What this means is just simply this is another cut in the death by a thousand cuts approach taken by deep-state Democrats and Crooked Clinton supporters which will do anything to justify their own means, to avoid restoration of 'rule of law' and defend and/or cover up their own illegal acts in any way possible. Stay tuned, this is getting interesting.

CIA director Brennan under investigation for perjury

By Rick Moran

Obama appointee and former CIA director John Brennan is the target of a perjury investigation by the House Intelligence Committee, according to an exclusive Real Clear Investigations report.

Chairman Devin Nunes is turning his attention to the role the CIA played in promoting the Steele dossier. The FBI and Justice Department relied heavily on the unverified dossier in their applications for a FISA warrant to spy on the Trump campaign.

Brennan said under oath that he didn't know who commissioned the document and that the dossier was not used to come to the conclusion that Russia had meddled in the 2016 presidential campaign.

Brennan also swore that he did not know who commissioned the anti-Trump research document (excerpt here), even though senior national security and counterintelligence officials at the Justice Department and FBI knew the previous year that the dossier was funded by the Hillary Clinton campaign.

Last week, Nunes (R-Calif.) released a declassified memo exposing surveillance "abuses" by the Obama DOJ and FBI in their investigation of Trump's ties to Russia. It said the agencies relied heavily on the uncorroborated dossier to take out a warrant to secretly surveil a Trump adviser in the heat of the 2016 presidential election, even though they were aware the underlying "intelligence" supporting the wiretap order was political opposition research funded by Clinton allies â a material fact they concealed from FISA court judges in four separate applications.

Nunes plans to soon release a separate report detailing the Obama State Department's role in creating and disseminating the dossier â which has emerged as the foundation of the Obama administration's Russia "collusion" investigation. Among other things, the report will identify Obama-appointed diplomats who worked with partisan operatives close to Hillary Clinton to help ex-British spy Christopher Steele compile the dossier, sources say.

"Those are the first two phases" of Nunes[s] multipart inquiry, a senior investigator said. "In phase three, the involvement of the intelligence community will come into sharper focus."

The aide, who spoke only on condition of anonymity, said Nunes will focus on Brennan as well as President Obama's first CIA director, Leon Panetta, along with the former president's intelligence czar, James Clapper, and national security adviser, Susan Rice, and security adviser-turned U.N. ambassador Samantha Power, among other intelligence officials.

"John Brennan did more than anyone to promulgate the dirty dossier," the investigator said. "He politicized and effectively weaponized what was false intelligence against Trump."

Attempts to reach Brennan for comment were unsuccessful.

Expect a lot of "I don't know" and "I can't recall" from Brennan during questioning. It will be very hard to prove he lied when he said he didn't know the provenance of the dossier, nor was he aware of the importance attached to the document in the CIA's analysis of Russian meddling.

But you can bet he is going to be squirming. The whole crew â Brennan, Panetta, Power, Rice, and Clapper â may all plead the Fifth Amendment to avoid testifying. That will only make them look guiltier. But it will serve the purpose of stymieing the investigation. The strategy will be to hope the Democrats take over the House in November, thus making all these investigations into anyone but Trump campaign officials disappear.

Is it likely Brennan was unaware of where the dossier came from? No. Is it possible? Yes. On that, the former CIA director will hang his hat.

CLINTON AND THE RUSSIAN MOBSTERS

Obama and Clinton used Energy Department deals to run racketeering operations for personal profit. This extended to electric car and solar deals as well as uranium, lithium batteries and other mining profiteering.

Clinton was one of nine cabinet members and department heads that sit on the CFIUS, and the secretary of the treasury is its chairperson. CFIUS members are collectively charged with evaluating energy industry transactions for potential national security issues, then turning their findings over to Barack Obama. But a look at who was in the CFIUS tells a different story. It's the heads of most departments of the federal government. So who was on the CFIUS panel in January of 2013?

The members of CFIUS include the heads of the following departments and offices:

1. Department of the Treasury (chair) - Timothy Geitner, who was Under Secretary of the Treasury for International Affairs under Bill Clinton from 1998-2001 and appointed to the position by Obama. He ran part of the DOE Clean Tech Crash cover ups.
2. Department of Justice - Eric Holder - US Attorney for DC appointed by Bill Clinton from 1993-97, 29th

US Deputy Attorney General appointed by Bill Clinton from 1997-2001 and appointed to the position by Obama. He ran part of the DOE Clean Tech Crash cover ups.

3. Department of Homeland Security - Janet Napolitano - Appointed US Attorney for Arizona in 1993 by Bill Clinton, appointed to the position by Obama

4. Department of Commerce - Rebecca Blank - One of three members of Bill Clinton's Council of Economic Advisers from 1997-99, was Deputy Secretary but designated the next to lead the department by then Secretary John Bryson, who left for medical reasons and was appointed by Obama

5. Department of Defense - Leon Panetta - Bill Clinton's Chief of Staff from 1994-97, appointed to the position by Obama. He then ran the CIA and then had to leave under pressure.

6. Department of State - Hillary Clinton - Obvious. Even if you go with the idea that the Assistant SecState was on the panel, she's his boss.

7. Department of Energy - Steven Chu The oddball, who's been described as politically "clueless" and "a smart guy who said lots of stupid things". The criminal front goat for the whole energy industry scam.

8. Office of the U.S. Trade Representative - Ron Kirk - Campaigned for Hillary in 2016, seems to be familiar with Clinton pre-2013, and was appointed his position by Obama. Here he is in 2015 hanging out with Clinton and Obama on the golf course.

9. Office of Science & Technology Policy - John Holdren - Was one of Bill Clinton's PCAST advisors from 1994 to 2001, was appointed to the position by Obama. Bonus points, he was a winner of the 7th annual Heinz awards, and if you remember, John Kerry is married to Teresa Heinz, who is actually the widow of H. John Heinz III. He pushed for Climate issues.

All of them made stock market and political profits off of Department of Energy Clean Tech and Policy decisions under Obama/DNC policies.

FBI uncovered Russian bribery plot before Obama administration approved controversial nuclear deal with Moscow

By John Solomon and Alison Spann - 10/17/17 06:00 AM EDT

Before the Obama administration approved a controversial deal in 2010 giving Moscow control of a large swath of American uranium, the FBI had gathered substantial evidence that Russian nuclear industry officials were engaged in bribery, kickbacks, extortion and money laundering designed to grow Vladimir Putin's atomic energy business inside the United States, according to government documents and interviews. Federal agents used a confidential U.S. witness working inside the Russian nuclear industry to gather extensive financial records, make secret recordings and intercept emails as early as 2009 that showed Moscow had compromised an American uranium trucking firm with bribes and kickbacks in violation of the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, FBI and court documents show.

They also obtained an eyewitness account backed by documents indicating Russian nuclear officials had routed millions of dollars to the U.S. designed to benefit former President Bill Clinton's charitable foundation during the time Secretary of State Hillary Clinton served on a government body that provided a favorable decision to Moscow, sources told The Hill.

The racketeering scheme was conducted with the consent of higher level officials in Russia who shared the proceeds from the kickbacks, one agent declared in an affidavit years later.

Rather than bring immediate charges in 2010, however, the Department of Justice (DOJ) continued investigating the matter for nearly four more years, essentially leaving the American public and Congress in the dark about Russian nuclear corruption on U.S. soil during a period when the Obama administration made two major decisions benefiting Putin's commercial nuclear ambitions.

The first decision occurred in October 2010, when the State Department and government agencies on the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States unanimously approved the partial sale of Canadian mining company Uranium One to the Russian nuclear giant Rosatom, giving Moscow control of more than 20 percent of America's uranium supply.

When this sale was used by Trump on the campaign trail last year, Hillary Clinton's spokesman said she was not involved in the committee review and noted the State Department official who handled it said she "never intervened ... on any [Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States] matter."

In 2011, the administration gave approval for Rosatom's Tenex subsidiary to sell commercial uranium to U.S. nuclear power plants in a partnership with the United States Enrichment Corp. Before then, Tenex had been limited to selling U.S. nuclear power plants reprocessed uranium recovered from dismantled Soviet nuclear weapons under the 1990s Megatons to Megawatts peace program.

"The Russians were compromising American contractors in the nuclear industry with kickbacks and extortion threats, all of which raised legitimate national security concerns. And none of that evidence got aired before the Obama administration made those decisions," a person who worked on the case told The Hill, speaking on condition of anonymity for fear of retribution by U.S. or Russian officials.

The Obama administration's decision to approve Rosatom's purchase of Uranium One has been a source of political controversy since 2015.

That's when conservative author Peter Schweitzer and The New York Times documented how Bill Clinton collected hundreds of thousands of dollars in Russian speaking fees and his charitable foundation collected millions in donations from parties interested in the deal while Hillary Clinton presided on the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States.

The Obama administration and the Clintons defended their actions at the time, insisting there was no evidence that any Russians or donors engaged in wrongdoing and there was no national security reason for any member of the committee to oppose the Uranium One deal.

But FBI, Energy Department and court documents reviewed by The Hill show the FBI in fact had gathered substantial evidence well before the committee's decision that Vadim Mikerin "the main Russian overseeing Putin's nuclear expansion inside the United States" was engaged in wrongdoing starting in 2009.

Then-Attorney General Eric Holder was among the Obama administration officials joining Hillary Clinton on the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States at the time the Uranium One deal was approved. Multiple current and former government officials told The Hill they did not know whether the FBI or DOJ ever alerted committee members to the criminal activity they uncovered.

Spokesmen for Holder and Clinton did not return calls seeking comment. The Justice Department also didn't comment.

Mikerin was a director of Rosatom's Tenex in Moscow since the early 2000s, where he oversaw Rosatom's nuclear collaboration with the United States under the Megatons to Megawatts program and its commercial uranium sales to other countries. In 2010, Mikerin was dispatched to the U.S. on a work visa approved by the Obama administration to open Rosatom's new American arm called Tenam.

Between 2009 and January 2012, Mikerin "did knowingly and willfully combine, conspire confederate and agree with other persons" to obstruct, delay and affect commerce and the movement of an article and commodity (enriched uranium) in commerce by extortion, a November 2014 indictment stated.

His illegal conduct was captured with the help of a confidential witness, an American businessman, who began making kickback payments at Mikerin's direction and with the permission of the FBI. The first kickback payment recorded by the FBI through its informant was dated Nov. 27, 2009, the records show. In evidentiary affidavits signed in 2014 and 2015, an Energy Department agent assigned to assist the FBI in the case testified that Mikerin supervised a "racketeering scheme" that involved extortion, bribery, money laundering and kickbacks that were both directed by and provided benefit to more senior officials back in Russia.

"As part of the scheme, Mikerin, with the consent of higher level officials at TENEX and Rosatom (both Russian state-owned entities) would offer no-bid contracts to US businesses in exchange for kickbacks in the form of money payments made to some offshore banks accounts," Agent David Gadren testified.

"Mikerin apparently then shared the proceeds with other co-conspirators associated with TENEX in Russia and elsewhere," the agent added.

The investigation was ultimately supervised by then-U.S. Attorney Rod Rosenstein, an Obama appointee who now serves as President Trump's deputy attorney general, and then-Assistant FBI Director Andrew McCabe, now the deputy FBI director under Trump, Justice Department documents show.

Both men now play a key role in the current investigation into possible, but still unproven, collusion between Russia and Donald Trump's campaign during the 2016 election cycle. McCabe is under congressional and Justice Department inspector general investigation in connection with money his wife's Virginia state Senate campaign accepted in 2015 from now-Virginia Gov. Terry McAuliffe at a time when McAuliffe was reportedly under investigation by the FBI.

The connections to the current Russia case are many. The Mikerin probe began in 2009 when Robert Mueller, now the special counsel in charge of the Trump case, was still FBI director. And it ended in late 2015 under the direction of then-FBI Director James Comey, whom Trump fired earlier this year.

Its many twist and turns aside, the FBI nuclear industry case proved a gold mine, in part because it uncovered a new Russian money laundering apparatus that routed bribe and kickback payments through financial instruments in Cyprus, Latvia and Seychelles. A Russian financier in New Jersey was among those arrested for the money laundering, court records show.

The case also exposed a serious national security breach: Mikerin had given a contract to an American trucking firm called Transport Logistics International that held the sensitive job of transporting Russia's uranium around the United States in return for more than $2 million in kickbacks from some of its executives, court records show.

One of Mikerin's former employees told the FBI that Tenex officials in Russia specifically directed the scheme to "allow for padded pricing to include kickbacks," agents testified in one court filing. Bringing down a major Russian nuclear corruption scheme that had both compromised a sensitive uranium transportation asset inside the U.S. and facilitated international money laundering would seem a major feather in any law enforcement agency's cap.

But the Justice Department and FBI took little credit in 2014 when Mikerin, the Russian financier and the trucking firm executives were arrested and charged.

The only public statement occurred a year later when the Justice Department put out a little-noticed press release in August 2015, just days before Labor Day. The release noted that the various defendants had reached plea deals.

By that time, the criminal cases against Mikerin had been narrowed to a single charge of money laundering for a scheme that officials admitted stretched from 2004 to 2014. And though agents had evidence of criminal wrongdoing they collected since at least 2009, federal prosecutors only cited in the plea agreement a handful of transactions that occurred in 2011 and 2012, well after the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States's approval.

The final court case also made no mention of any connection to the influence peddling conversations the FBI undercover informant witnessed about the Russian nuclear officials trying to ingratiate themselves with the Clintons even though agents had gathered documents showing the transmission of millions of dollars from Russia's nuclear industry to an American entity that had provided assistance to Bill Clinton's foundation, sources confirmed to The Hill.

The lack of fanfare left many key players in Washington with no inkling that a major Russian nuclear corruption scheme with serious national security implications had been uncovered.

On Dec. 15, 2015, the Justice Department put out a release stating that Mikerin, a former Russian official residing in Maryland was sentenced today to 48 months in prison and ordered to forfeit more than $2.1 million.

Ronald Hosko, who served as the assistant FBI director in charge of criminal cases when the investigation was underway, told The Hill he did not recall ever being briefed about Mikerin's case by the counterintelligence side of the bureau despite the criminal charges that were being lodged.

"I had no idea this case was being conducted," a surprised Hosko said in an interview. Likewise, major congressional figures were also kept in the dark.

Former Rep. Mike Rogers (R-Mich.), who chaired the House Intelligence Committee during the time the FBI probe was being conducted, told The Hill that he had never been told anything about the Russian nuclear corruption case even though many fellow lawmakers had serious concerns about the Obama administration's approval of the Uranium One deal.

Not providing information on a corruption scheme before the Russian uranium deal was approved by U.S. regulators and engage appropriate congressional committees has served to undermine U.S. national security interests by the very people charged with protecting them," he said. "The Russian efforts to manipulate our American political enterprise is breathtaking."

CLINTON AND OBAMA WORKED TOGETHER ON CORRUPT DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY SCAM FBI Kept Russian Bribery Plot Under Wraps Before Obama Administration Approved Nuclear Deal With Moscow

World FBI Russia probe FBI Hillary Clinton Bill Clinton Department of Justice Obama Administration
The Obama administration signed a controversial nuclear deal with Moscow despite prior FBI findings that Russian officials were bribing their way into the U.S. atomic energy industry, according to government documents just published by The Hill.

A confidential U.S. witness deployed by the FBI infiltrated Russia's nuclear industry and made secret recordings, collected financial records and intercepted emails dating back to 2009 that showed that Moscow engaged in bribery and kickbacks with an American uranium trucking company, documents show.

But the Obama administration insisted no evidence existed of Russian interference and that there were no national security concerns for committee members to go against the deal in 2010.

Keep up with this story and more by subscribing now

The deal that boosted Vladimir Putin's nuclear footprint in the U.S. took place in October 2010 when the State Department and the Committee on Foreign Investment unanimously agreed to a partial sale of Uranium One, a Canadian mining company, to the major Russian nuclear company Rosatom, effectively sending more than 20 percent of the U.S.'s uranium to Moscow.

In 2011, the Obama administration gave the green light for Rosatom's Tenex subsidiary to sell uranium to American nuclear power plants. Before the deal, Tenex could only sell reprocessed uranium from dismantled Soviet nuclear firearms to power plants in the U.S.

Russian extortion threats and kickbacks brought legitimate national security concerns, "And none of that evidence got aired before the Obama administration made those decisions," a source who insisted on anonymity out of fear of retribution told The Hill.

Then-U.S. Attorney Rod Rosenstein, who was appointed by Obama and now works as President Donald Trump's deputy attorney general, and then-Assistant FBI Director Andrew McCabe, who serves as deputy FBI director under Trump, supervised the investigation, documents show.

FBI agents also gathered documents and a witness account that Russian officials routed millions of dollars to ex-President Bill Clinton's charitable foundation while Secretary of State Hillary Clinton sat on a committee that gave a nod to the dealings with Moscow.

Like the Obama administration, the Clintons said there was no evidence to prompt them to go the other way on the Uranium One deal.

The Department of Justice investigated the Russian plot for close to four years, keeping the information under wraps while the Obama administration approved the deal instead of bringing immediate charges,

A November 2014 indictment states that Vadim Mikerin, a director of Rosatom's Tenex, "did knowingly and willfully combine, conspire confederate and agree with other persons to obstruct, delay and affect commerce and the movement of an article and commodity (enriched uranium) in commerce by extortion" from 2009 to January 2012.

The House Intelligence Committee chairman at the time, former Rep. Mike Rogers of Michigan, told The Hill that he was never informed about the "breathtaking" Russian efforts to manipulate America's enterprise. Many lawmakers back then had serious concerns about the Uranium One deal, he said.

"Not providing information on a corruption scheme before the Russian uranium deal was approved by U.S. regulators and engage appropriate congressional committees has served to undermine U.S. national security interests by the very people charged with protecting them," Rogers said, short of labeling it a coverup.

But the newly published documents will certainly raise questions about Obama's nuclear deal—a topic that then-candidate Donald Trump consistently raised on the campaign trail even before he took over the White House and had access to the information revealed this week.

The Uranium One Scandal is the key to it all... (politics)

submitted ago by thewebofslime

tl;dr Uranium One is the name of a South African company that bought Kazakh mining interests (and other places) through bribery and the political influence of the Clintons. Later, bought by Frank Giustra's Canadian company, who then sold the company to Russia. The Podestas got paid. The money cycled through a web of puppet NGO's. The media won't cover the severity of the crimes.

The New York Times did a great article about the Uranium One scandal that America seems to have forgotten, but is very relevant, as it outlines the actual relationship between Hillary Clinton and Russia, as opposed to what we are being told in the news, today.

There are a few reasons this story is especially important.

The Panama Papers and the Podesta Emails both provide independent, primary source, direct evidence that this story is true and worse than originally stated. You can see it for yourself.

Treason is happening at the top levels of our government, where our politicians and lobbyists are willing to sell out American assets for pennies on the dollar and surprising number of them are all in on it.

The media has represented all of this as no big deal, while shamelessly trying to sell a war between Russia and the US over fake news about hacking.

It lends credibility to the idea that these people, in this social circle, are capable of running a vast, sophisticated criminal enterprise that talks in code.

We are able to trace the web of money launderers all in bed together through primary sources starting with these breadcrumbs.

The Observer does a good job of breaking down some of the relationships to make them easy to understand.

Among the Sberbank subsidiaries that the Podesta Group also represents are the Cayman Islands-based Troika Dialog Group Limited, the Cyprus-based SBGB Cyprus Limited, and the Luxembourg-based SB International.

In Podesta email #4635, it is revealed that bribes were happening through a variety of mediums. <https://archive.is/VL99Z>

First, with respect to the stock option agreement, there is a discrepancy in the stated vesting schedule between the one John signed back in 2011 and the one I sent to Bob which you sent back to me signed.

John transferred the resulting 75,000 common shares from the option exercise to the Leonidio LLC. As such, we would need to edit the Transfer of Share Agreement to reflect the transfer of 75,000 common shares to the LLC

It is the proof that started this avalanche of evidence. When the Panama Papers were released, it proved Troika Dialog is a Russian front.

That is proof John Podesta works for Russia. It is an LD 1 disclosure form. It shows he is getting paid by Troika Dialog.

Big picture, this means that the entire DNC is being kept in power by the Russians with Russian money. It's just one finger in one pie, though.

It gets worse. Ruben Vardanyan has a lot of such companies, like Joule Unlimited that claimed to be able to produce clean energy from cyanobacteria... but was really just a Russian front to pay into the Clinton Foundation.

Notice the dates. This scam has been in the works for years. Media Matters was already trying to spin damage control on it in 2008.

The Podesta Group fails to disclose this financial arrangement to Congress, which is, technically, treason.

It is clear that a violation of the Voorhees Act is occurring. <https://archive.is/vjvQ>

Not only is this technically illegal, it is obviously unethical and it should boggle every American's mind that these people are allowed anywhere near public office. Yet, they are in the White House and have been for a long, long time. The media has gone out of its way to make sure you don't see it for what it really is. Organized crime.

The Clinton Foundation is a CIA front that runs pay for play and forensic interruption to keep its clients out of jail. The CIA has co-opted resources in Russian energy.

Russia isn't our enemy, they are controlled by the intelligence community and they have to pay into our protection racket. Meanwhile, the news is in the pocket of our intelligence community and it isn't meant to inform you, it is used as a tool of policy change where it 1) is always gradually asserting authoritarianism and 2) always hiding the activities of the intelligence community.

This is done according to "Systems Psychodynamics" based on Wilfred Bion's basic assumption theories.

The evidence is everywhere, but the bare bones are as follows.

Podesta also received 100,000 shares from Joule, over 4 years.

<https://wikileaks.org/podesta-emails/emailid/4635>

<http://joule-unlimited.com/about/board>

That is the board at Joule. All Russian CEOs, including Sberbank, Troika Dialog, Rusnano and Rosatom.

They all worked together to make the Uranium One deal happen.

Chaika is exposed in this documentary that is banned in Russia. https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chaika_\(film\))

Yuri Chaika was in put in power by Medvedev, but he indicates to an intelligence analyst that Sergei Ivanov is calling the shots.

https://wikileaks.org/gifiles/docs/54/5410884_re-insight-russia-head-of-major-criminal-group-arrested.html

Chaika said he has already been under a lot of heat because of the Politkovskaya arrests. He said that he would rather not tell me about the "Chechen mastermind" they arrested. I asked if this was because he was not really a mastermind and Chaika said that "many things needed to be tied up as we head into this election and the end of Putin's reign." [I know this is strange, but he kept saying things like, "Ivanov needs to have control over the situation he's about to enter into.... Ivanov is known for his distance from such situations, so they need to be wrapped up."]

What is crazy, is that even organized crime won't go near energy assets, which is a playground that Podesta, Hillary and the DNC have no problem playing in. That is a really interesting point... that they scare the Russian mob.

Either way, these people at the top of Russian politics are very often cooperating with our own intelligence assets. Here is a list:

https://wikileaks.org/gifiles/attach/178/178954_Contacts%20-%20110516%20-%20Lauren%20Goodrich.xls

During the course of the Uranium One scandal, Gazprom was also acquiring extraction rights and expanding with more locations and resources.

https://wikileaks.org/gifiles/docs/55/5500400_re-t-weekly-next-week-.html

the company builds pipelines around the world and Gazprom wanted the the company, so the owner of the company ended up with his shoulders broken and stuffed into a pipeline. Then they turned on the nat gas and he suffocated while his limbs flew off in the 50 mph nat gas flow.....

The news in the US doesn't actually educate people on how Russian corruption works because that would elucidate ties to our own government.

And here is how the news tricks you while attempting to appear neutralâ

The New York Times and Media Matters work together toâ set the goal postsâ of this issue:

At no point do either of these articles mention some of the most important evidence. They donât explain Troika Dialog. They donât explain the Panama Papers. They never get around to addressing the 100,000 shares of Joule vested over 4 years at 25,000 shares per year into Leonidas. However, reading both of these articles, you can feel informed about the issue, while never being able to come to any type of solid conclusion. That is how the news works.

The truth is that the deal started with Kazatomprom and the guy in charge was arrested and jailed for treason, abuse of power, corruption, and embezzling natural resources for his own personal profit. His name was Moukhtar Dzhakishev https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Moukhtar_Dzhakishev

Why do we not bring democracy to Russia by leaking all of their corruption? The same reason Russia doesnât do the same thing to us. They have an ongoing financial relationship.

<http://www.cnbc.com/2016/12/11/qatar-glencore-to-buy-195-percent-stake-in-russia-state-oil-major-rosneft.html>

Qatar and Glencore are both involved with the Clintons in questionable ways. Marc Rich, the CEO of Glencore was given a last minute pardon by Bill Clinton, while in office. Ironically, James Comey was the prosecutor. The documents are partially available in the FBI Vault.

Qatarâs US weapon purchases were expanded 1400% after donating to the Clinton Foundation.

It should trouble every American that this is business as usual. Particularly when the press is in on it.

This is a list of journalists who collaborated with the DNC, to varying degrees, as exposed by Wikileaks:

<http://i.imgur.com/TcusKCM.jpg> JPG

Still, there are other channels of communications than just Podestaâs Gmail account or Hillaryâs private server. The Wikileaks list is only a glimpse.

Scandal forced the Podesta Group to amend their past relationships AGAIN and we start to see how things really work in Washington. A lobbying group accepts money from foreign countries and private companies so that they have more of a voice in government and policy than the American voters.

After Donald Trump won the election, the Podesta Group filed the most revealing list, yet, in a form known as â Amendment to Registration Statement Pursuant to the Foreign Agents Registration Act of 1938, as amended.â

This is one piece of that document that shows that lobbying firms make deals with the news to represent their client's interest. We already know what these conversations look like from Wikileaks; varying degrees of cooperation.

So, what is being revealed here is that the Clinton Foundation has taken over for the American Security Council Foundation in looking out for the mining interests in the world. What is scary is that, even according to the State Department Reports, the Kazakhstan mines use slave labor. Glencore uses slave labor. VCS Mining uses slave labor.

<https://isgp-studies.com/american-security-council>

THE CLINTONS, BESIDES ALL THIS BRIBERY AND CIA GUN RUNNING AND PARTICIPATION IN THE DRUG TRADE ARE FACILITATING HUMAN TRAFFICKING NETWORKS.

You should be aware of the proven criminal conspiracies that the CIA has subjected American citizens to.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Project_MKUltra

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Unethical_human_experimentation_in_the_United_States

Several of the children who Cameron experimented on were sexually abused, in at least one case by several men. One of the children was filmed numerous times performing sexual acts with high-ranking federal government officials, in a scheme set up by Cameron and other MKULTRA researchers, to blackmail the officials to ensure further funding for the experiments.

The leaks reveal some interesting things, but interpreting them can be difficult without historical context, so tl;dr #2: The intelligence community has its fingers in drugs, guns and human trafficking. They also employ agent provocateurs and utilize principles from systems psychodynamics to manipulate people's basic assumptions as a tool of policy change while directing the media to divert the populace's attention away from activities of the intelligence community.

CLINTON NIGHTMARE! Chief Financial Officer of Clinton Foundation Turns Government Informant on Crime Family

by Jim Hoft

- 16.9KShare
- 776Tweet
- Email

Donations to the Clinton Foundation plummeted by 90% over a three-year period since Hillary Clinton lost the 2016 election to President Donald Trump.

But that may be the least of her worries.

John Solomon from The Hill dropped another bombshell that will keep the Clintons up at night.

The former Chief Financial Officer of the Clinton Foundation has turned on the crime family and is now working as a government informant.

This could spell doom for the Clinton Crime Family.

American Thinker reported:

John Solomon of The Hill reveals the story that has been percolating for a long time but kept tightly under wraps â because that is what serious prosecutors do, especially when grand juries are poring over evidence and issuing indictments that remain sealed until the right moment comes. The trigger for the story coming out now probably is a House subcommittee hearing scheduled next week by Mark Meadows, chair of the House Freedom Caucus, while the GOP still can set the agenda of House hearings.

[A] GOP-led congressional subcommittee, led by Rep. Mark Meadows (N.C.), is planning to hold a hearing next week to review the work of John Huber, the special U.S attorney named a year ago to investigate all things Clinton.

It turns out that whistleblowers inside and outside the Clinton Foundation have amassed â 6,000 pages of evidence attached to a whistleblower submission filed secretly more than a year ago with the IRS and FBI.â Among that evidence can be found:

Those reviews flagged serious concerns about legal compliance, improper commingling of personal and charity business and â quid pro quoâ promises made to donors while Hillary Clinton was secretary of State.

The submission also cites an interview its investigators conducted with Andrew Kessel that quotes the foundationâ s longtime chief financial officer as saying he was unable to stop former President Clinton from â comminglingâ personal business and charitable activities inside the foundation and that he â knows where all the bodies are buried.â

Their own investigation! Thatâ s hard to put down as politically motivated.

Having the chief financial officer of the Clinton Foundation turn informant is a nightmare for the Clintons. The CFO has to process all the cash, and because that person usually is on the hook for any criminal violations, there is ample incentive to turn stateâ s evidence.

That evidence was assembled by a private firm called MDA Analytics LLC, run by accomplished ex-federal criminal investigators, who alleged the Clinton Foundation engaged in illegal activities and may be liable for millions of dollars in delinquent taxes and penalties.

In addition to the IRS, the firmâ s partners have had contact with prosecutors in the main Justice Department in Washington and FBI agents in Little Rock, Ark.

CONGRESSMAN Reveals Bombshell | Fast and Furious, Benghazi, IRS Scandals All Connected to Obama DOJ, FBI Corruption Cartel in Trump Probe

Remember when President Obama told Fox Newsâ Chris Wallace he could guarantee that there isnât any political influence in any investigation conducted by the FBI or DOJ? The former President and community organizer told Wallace: â I can guarantee that I do not talk to the Attorney General about pending investigations. I do not talk to FBI directors about pending investigations. We have a strict line, and always have maintained it, previous presidents. I guarantee that there is no political influence in any investigation conducted by the Justice Department or the FBI, not just in this case, but in any case. Full stopâ!period. Nobody gets treated any differently when it comes to the Justice Department because nobody is above the law. Guaranteed.â

Watch:

According to the latest bombshell revelation by Congressman Gosar, thatâs not exactly the truthâ!

Matthew Boyle of Breitbart News is reporting that Rep. Paul Gosar (R-AZ), a leading conservative member of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, told Breitbart News Daily on Wednesday that he believes that there is an interconnectivity between various high-profile Barack Obama-era scandals and the latest revelations about corruption at the Department of Justice and FBI.

Gosar was asked during the interview on the SiriusXM 125 Patriot Channel show about the corruption on display in the release of the famed memo from House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence (HPSCI) chairman Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA) that detailed FISA court abuses by the FBI and DOJ in the lead-up to the 2016 election and in the months that followed now President Donald Trumpâs win during the transition and even during his presidency.

That all came before the release of new text messages between senior FBI officials Lisa Page and Peter Strzok that detailed how Obama himself was overseeing everything personally on the Hillary Clinton email investigation and rivaling Trump probe. Gosar detailed how this same corruption that is now being further exposed first reared its ugly head in the earliest days of the administration of now former President Barack Obama, with the Operation Fast and Furious scandal then the IRS and Benghazi scandalsâ all of which had intricate levels of DOJ and FBI involvement.

â If you donât think the [Operation] Fast and Furiousâ attacking the Second Amendmentâ along with Operation Choke Point, you know that sacred amendment that holds our government accountable and protection for all the other amendments, if you don't think Benghazi and the lack of accountability when they knew something was going to come, if you don't think that the IRS and the attacking of your adversaries financially, and the unmasking are unrelated things, think again," Gosar said.

"You know, this previous administration the Obama administration micromanaged everything out of the White House. And I challenge people, remember the Syrian strikes that were actually handpicked and dictated by the president at that time. This gentleman was involved in everything. That's where all this leads. When you look at the cover-up with the email scandal with Hillary Clinton, it gets it should have pointed out exactly what we've been talking about, that this was the weaponization of our Justice Department not only to cover up for the previous administration and the wrongdoing and ills of them and those associated with them, but also to attack a sitting president actually a candidate at the time, then president-elect and then a current, sitting president you know of an opposition party. This is outrageous, and you are exactly right we have got to get to the bottom of this so that people are held accountable because that is what America wants. But it's going to be a hard, slow slog trying to get this information out. But it's coming, as witnessed by the memo from Devin Nunes and as witnessed by Grassley and Graham and new revelations and the Inspector General don't forget Michael Horowitz sitting out there as well."

Listen:

Gosar is a key member of the House Oversight Committee who led the way in pushing to hold now former Attorney General Eric Holder accountable for Fast and Furious. He was one of the first members of Congress to demand Holder's resignation and helped lead the effort to hold Holder in both criminal and civil contempt of Congress for his refusal to be transparent about the matter.

Capitol Police Arrested David Brock's Operative For Beating Up Female White House Admin Official

MICHAEL BASTASCH

U.S. Capitol Police have arrested a male Democratic operative for assaulting a female Interior Department communications official following a House budget hearing Thursday.

The assault happened after Interior Secretary Ryan Zinke finished testifying on the department's 2019 budget proposal before the House Committee on Natural Resources. The suspect identified himself as a reporter with American Bridge and pushed a female Interior Department communications official to the floor, chasing after Zinke, The Daily Caller News Foundation learned.

Interior communications director Laura Rigas was "greatly alarmed and extremely irate that a female senior member of my DOI Communications team was physically assaulted today by a Democrat staffer from the PAC American Bridge," she told Politico.

Interior officials filed a police report, The Daily Caller News Foundation has learned, but it has not yet been processed, police said. It will be made public in seven to 10 days once processed. American Bridge did not respond to TheDCNF's request for comment.

"We are appalled to hear of the events following yesterday's hearing where a member of Secretary Zinke's staff was victim to an assault," committee spokeswoman Katie Schoettler told TheDCNF.

"These actions are reprehensible and have no place in this body. We thank the U.S. Capitol Police for their quick response and professionalism," Schoettler said. "The USCP is now handling the matter."

Police took the American Bridge operative into custody on Thursday. Police "arrested an adult male for simple assault against another individual outside room 1324 in the Longworth House Office Building," an officer told Politico on Thursday.

"The suspect was transported to USCP Headquarters for processing," the Capitol Police officer told Politico.

American Bridge is a political action committee dedicated to "holding Republicans accountable for their words and actions," according to their website. American Bridge is known for having operatives follow Republican candidates on the campaign trail.

Democratic operative David Brock founded American Bridge in 2010 and raised tens of millions of dollars to support liberal candidates. The group has been described as an "opposition research hub of the Democratic fundraising apparatus."

Liberal billionaire George Soros donated $2 million to American Bridge in 2016, and the Tom Steyer-founded NextGen Climate Action regularly donates money to the group, according to the Center for Responsive Politics.

The group told Politico they were not aware of the incident, but would be looking into it.

SAN FRANCISCO (KPIX 5) — New details emerged Wednesday about how a mole for the government of communist China managed to stay by Senator Dianne Feinstein's side for nearly 20 years.

- FEINSTEIN'S HUSBAND IS DICK BLUM. DICK BLUM HAS HIS ASSOCIATE; MART BAILEY, BRIBE CHINESE DIPLOMATS. DICK BLUM FLIES TO MONGOLIA FOR SECRET MEETINGS WITH CHINESE BILLIONAIRES. THE FEINSTEIN FAMILY HAVE HAD MULTIPLE INVESTMENT BANK ACCOUNTS THAT CHINESE INVESTORS WIRE MONEY INTO.

It happened five years ago, but additional information is just surfacing about how the Bay Area senator's office was infiltrated by a Chinese spy.

The Bay Area is a hotbed for Russian and Chinese espionage. Late last year, the feds shut down the Russian consulate in San Francisco.

You may remember the thick black smoke that billowing from building before Russian diplomats turned it over to authorities, presumably produced by burning documents.

Now, all eyes are on Chinese intelligence in the Bay Area after the website Politico reported last week that a staffer for Senator Feinstein turned out to be a Chinese spy who reported back to the government officials about local politics.

On Wednesday, the San Francisco Chronicle uncovered additional details in a column written by reporters Phil Matier and Andy Ross.

The column revealed that the Chinese spy was Feinstein's driver who also served as a gofer in her Bay Area office and was a liaison to the Asian-American community.

He even attended Chinese consulate functions for the senator.

Feinstein — who was Chair of the Senate Intelligence Committee at the time — was reportedly mortified when the FBI told her she'd be infiltrated.

Investigators reportedly concluded the driver hadn't leaked anything of substance and Feinstein forced him to retire.

Former FBI agent and KPIX 5 security analyst Jeff Harp said he was not surprised.

— Think about Diane Feinstein and what she had access to, — said Harp. — One, she had access to the Chinese community here in San Francisco; great amount of political influence. Two, correct me if I'm wrong, Dianne Feinstein still has very close ties to the intelligence committees there in Washington, D.C.

Harp ran counter espionage for the FBI in the Bay Area. He said in addition to traditional political intel and diplomatic secrets, Bay Area spies are often focused on things like R&D, technology and trade secrets.

“ They also have an interest in the economy here. How to get political influence here,” said Harp.
“ What’s being developed in Silicon Valley that has dual-use technology. All of that is tied to the Bay Area.”

And he says, like in many areas, when it comes to counter intelligence and espionage, the Bay Area is a trend setter.

“ As the Bay Area goes, so does the nation when it comes to technology,” said Harp. “ So why not when it comes to spying?”

Harp pointed out politicians with access to classified information are generally trained on what not to say and when not to say it. But he also noted when you have a driver behind the wheel day in and day out for 20 years, there are more opportunities to slip up.

Feinstein’s office would not comment on the story, saying they do not address personnel matters or investigations, but they added that none of their California offices staffers had ever had security clearance.

The FBI declined to comment on the story.

We can only imagine the twenty-four hour media blitz that would be unleashed if this had happened with the Trump campaign, or on anyone's staff even remotely associated with President Trump past or present.

But when the story first broke in the middle of this week of a mole working on behalf of the ~~Russian~~ Chinese government on a powerful Democrat Senate Intelligence Committee member's staff, it passed in the mainstream media with a yawn, and though slowly gaining visibility still hasn't been covered by some of the large cable networks or newspapers.

Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) was "mortified" upon learning that a Chinese spy had worked in her office for nearly 20 years.

Image via Reuters

According to new details initially unveiled in a Politico report on Russian and Chinese spies in Silicon Valley, a staffer who was fired five years ago had managed to stay on her team for nearly two decades likely out of motivation to collect information related to her long tenure on the Senate Intelligence Committee, for which she maintains top-secret security clearance.

Sen. Feinstein reportedly made the staffer retire upon being alerted by the FBI. He worked as her personal driver and clerk for her Bay Area office, as CBS San Francisco relates:

On Wednesday, the San Francisco Chronicle uncovered additional details in a column written by reporters Phil Matier and Andy Ross. The column revealed that the Chinese spy was Feinstein's driver who also served as a gofer in her Bay Area office and was a liaison to the Asian-American community.

He even attended Chinese consulate functions for the senator.

Feinstein â who was Chair of the Senate Intelligence Committee at the time â was reportedly mortified when the FBI told her sheâd be infiltrated. Investigators reportedly concluded the driver hadnât leaked anything of substance and Feinstein forced him to retire.

Perhaps the most stunning part of the story is that he remained in her office for nearly two decades, reportedly having contact with China's Ministry of State Security for an unknown number of years during that lengthy period.

Though it's unclear when his contact with the Chinese state began, follow-up reports by local San Francisco sources claim he may have been an unwitting asset.

The San Francisco Chronicle in a follow-up investigation reports:

According to our source, the intrigue started years earlier when the staffer took a trip to Asia to visit relatives and was befriended by someone who continued to stay in touch with him on subsequent visits.

That someone was connected with the Peopleâs Republic of Chinaâs Ministry of State Security.

â He didnât even know what was happening â that he was being recruited,â says our source. â He just thought it was some friend.â

Neither the FBI nor Chinese embassy has issued official comment in response to the bombshell story; however, various reports cite investigators close to the matter who say the mole was able to obtain little or nothing of substance.

It's believed that the advantage of Chinese intelligence placing a driver with the Chair of the Senate Intelligence Committee is that he may have picked up on tidbits of sensitive conversations at moments the senator thought she could comfortably speak to colleagues and staff.

One former counter-espionage FBI agent in the Bay Area, Jeff Harp, told CBS San Francisco he believes someone like Sen. Feinstein would constitute a key, high value target for foreign intelligence and eavesdropping:

*Harp pointed out politicians with access to classified information are generally trained on what not to say and when not to say it. But he also noted when you have a driver behind the wheel day in and day out for 20 years, there are more opportunities to slip up.

â Think about Diane Feinstein and what she had access to,â Harp explained. â One, she had access to the Chinese community here in San Francisco; great amount of political influence. Two, correct me if Iâm wrong, Dianne Feinstein still has very close ties to the intelligence committees there in Washington, D.C.â

And of Silicon Valley being a hotbed of Chinese espionage, Harp continued, â They also have an interest in the economy here. How to get political influence here. Whatâs being developed in Silicon Valley that has dual-use technology. All of that is tied to the Bay Area.â

If this "Chinese staffer/spy" were news the FBI would have known about it. Feinstein's SF86 form had to disclose a relationship with a foreign national. The fact that this didn't come out means the FBI/IC was using the staffer to track contacts and plant misinformation. If this is not old news then everyone in the top levels of the DHS should be fired.

Feinstein's days are numbered.

"There's no place in the DNC for white people."

~ Perez, DNC Chairman

Chinese agent Dianne Feinstein pushes for USA to stop being mean to China after China hacks most of the U.S. tech industry

Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D., Calif.) on Thursday said China is "growing into a respectable nation" and cautioned against holding the country accountable for the coronavirus pandemic.

"We hold China as a potential trading partner, as a country that has pulled tens of millions of people out of poverty in a short period of time, and as a country growing into a respectable nation amongst other nations. I deeply believe that," Feinstein said during a Senate Judiciary Committee meeting.

She said that stripping foreign sovereign immunity from China would be a "huge mistake" and claimed that allowing individuals to hold China accountable for the spread of the virus could allow other countries to do the same to the United States. Her firm defense of China comes after a new flood of reports showing human rights abuses perpetrated by the Chinese government. The Chinese Communist Party has organized the mass detention and forced sterilization of Uyghurs, a mostly Muslim ethnic minority, and drone footage showed blindfolded and shackled Uyghurs being forced onto trains.

Feinstein made the idiotic remarks during a Senate Judiciary Committee meeting debating a bill that would allow individuals to sue the Chinese government for its release and subsequent cover-up of the novel coronavirus.

Feinstein has also benefited from her husband's relationship with China. She pushed for expanded trade relations with China as her husband's company was partnering with business ventures in the country. She said that a "firewall" existed between her political career and her husband's business interests but pretty much all of America thinks she lies. Her husband bases part of the family profits on Chinese business. His partner: Mart Bailey, openly says that the Feinsteins owe their existence to China. Chinese spies drive Ms. Feinstein around town and the FBI has a deep file on her. The Feinstein family profiteer off of Tesla Motors, got taxpayer funding for Tesla, manage the buildings for Tesla, got Tesla its China factory deal and her brother-in-law: Herb Newman, ran the HR for Tesla and Solyndra outside hires. One corrupt family? You Bet!

Clinging to power does not make corrupt Dianne Feinstein a feminist hero

Arwa Mahdawi

The 89-year-old senator has been urged to stand down amid doubts about her cognitive and physical health but Nancy Pelosi claims a man would not face similar questions

Feinstein's feminist farce

Here's a controversial opinion: when you're no longer capable of doing your extremely important job you should gracefully step away from your extremely important job. I know that may not sound controversial on the surface, but it appears to be quite the topic of debate in Washington DC. It certainly seems to be a contentious issue for Nancy Pelosi, the former speaker, who recently hit back at calls for the 89-year-old Democratic senator Dianne Feinstein to resign over her health.

Feinstein is the oldest sitting US senator (narrowly beating out spring chicken Chuck Grassley who is a few months younger) and there have been concerns about her cognitive health for a while now. Her physical health has also become an issue: Feinstein has been absent from the Senate since February, when she was diagnosed with shingles. She's missed 60 of the Senate's 82 votes so far this session. Her absence from the judiciary committee, on which the Democrats hold a one-seat majority, has stopped the Democrats from advancing federal judges for confirmation. Which is a big deal because these judges get lifetime appointments.

On Wednesday, multiple Democrats, led by Representative Ro Khanna, called for Feinstein to resign, saying she could no longer fulfil her duties. Not everyone agrees. "I don't know what political agendas are at work that are going after Senator Feinstein in that way," Pelosi told reporters on Wednesday. "I've never seen them go after a man who was sick in the Senate in that way."

Norma Torres, another California Democrat, also argued that calls for Feinstein to quit were sexist. âWhen women age or get sick, the men are quick to push them aside,â she tweeted. âWhen men age or get sick, they get a promotion.â

Do female politicians face unfair double standards and increased scrutiny? Of course they do! But cynically weaponizing the very real sexism that women in politics face to defend Feinsteinâs stubborn decision to cling to power is appalling. Feminism isnât about individual women climbing up the corporate ladder, itâs about working for equal rights. Feinstein represents 40 million Americans and her decisions affect millions more: there is nothing remotely feminist about Feinstein putting her ego above the greater good, particularly at such a critical moment for womenâs rights in the US. Itâs just selfish.

I can understand why Feinstein doesnât want to resign, donât get me wrong. Being in government seems to have been very lucrative for her. Sheâs worth at least \$58m. How did she get so rich in public service? Well, Feinsteinâs husband was an investment banker and the pair have been incredibly lucky in the stock market. Itâs almost like theyâve got access to inside information. Feinstein, for example, sold off a huge amount of shares just before the stock market collapsed at the beginning of the pandemic. The pair faced scrutiny over their stock trades but have denied doing anything wrong. Pelosi and her husband have faced similar scrutiny.

Feinstein, to be fair, has now responded to criticism about her long absence from work. On Wednesday, following calls for her resignation Feinstein said that sheâd asked the Senate majority leader, Chuck Schumer, to allow another Democratic senator to take her place on the judiciary committee until sheâs fit to return to work. Thatâs a good solution for now but Feinstein, who is due to step down in 2025, should think about resigning altogether: she can certainly afford retirement. Real leadership, as Jacinda Ardern has demonstrated, isnât about staying in power as long as possible, but knowing when itâs time to step aside. Itâs way past time for Feinstein to cede some space and make way for fresh leadership.

Former CIA Officer and whistleblower Kevin Shipp says the reason for all the crime and treason at the FBI and DOJ all boils down to one thing â the Clinton's so-called â charity.

Shipp explains, â Hillary Clinton was running and is running a global financial criminal syndicate. She was using these secret servers to conduct Clinton financial money laundering business."

"The shocking thing about that is all the former directors of the CIA that have come out to support her, from Clapper to Brennan to Morell to Robert Gates supporting her being elected, knew about this criminal syndicate. Comey was protecting it. Lynch was protecting it. Weissmann was protecting it. And that is the big why. Whatâs she got on these people? Are they financial ties? They had to be aware of this, especially the counter-intelligence units. We know it was hacked into by foreign intelligence services because it was just hanging out there. Hillary Clinton was running a secret server outside the Department of State for the purposes of laundering money through the criminal Clinton Foundation.

Are the crimes and treason of the Clinton Foundation the anvil that is about to drop? Shipp says, â Itâs not just an anvil, I think it is a mountain and the nexus of everything. This â Clinton Global Initiativeâ (CGI) is worldwide, and itâs been out there for a couple of decades. It has now intertwined former Directors of the CIA and FBI. George Soros is a part of it. Itâ€™s connected to all kinds of global financial institutions...

It is at least a $100 billion...

All these people protecting and defending Hillary Clinton and knowing about her criminal syndicate, this goes into the so-called 'Deep State' of our government, and it is connected, involved and intertwined in the global criminal crime syndicate called the Clinton Foundation. This is probably going to be the biggest scandal in U.S. historyâ€”once itâ€™s busted. I think they are quietly working on it now, and I think they have been for the last year. It is so huge the arrests and indictments could cause a Constitutional crisis with some people being removed. Maybe thatâ€™s why they are moving slowly. It all comes back down to the Clinton Foundation and the criminal syndicate.â€

Is former President Obama involved with the Clinton crime syndicate? Shipp says, â€” Yes, I am absolutely convinced of it. George Soros gave $30 million to Obamaâ€™s campaign. Then he gave $27.1 million to Hillary Clintonâ€™s campaign. Both Obama and Clinton are tied directly into George Soros. Obama was put into office with millions of dollars that came out of nowhere.

Yes, heâ€™s part of this cabal. Yes, heâ€™s part of this global syndicate, and in my opinion, the subversion of our government.â€

In closing, Shipp contends,â€” There could be a Constitutional crisis in that we could see Congressmen, Senators, former Directors of the FBI and the CIA perp walked after they receive charges."

"Could you imagine if senior DOJ officials were arrested, some Congressmen and Senators were arrested and other government officials were arrested on charges and walked out of office? Thatâ€™s the Constitutional crisis I am talking about. Those kind of high level arrests would shake up this nation. It would be huge, and thatâ€™s why it has taken so long and methodical in doing this.â€

I am deeply afraid that our "swamp drainers" have politics ahead of doing the right thing. They are sitting on ample evidence, but are waiting till closer to the mid-term elections for maximum political benefit. Shame on them. If they are criminals, get them out NOW and start cleaning up the aftermath ASAP. Screw the politics, this is bigger. We need to reclaim our country.

Elizabeth Holmes, a Clinton donor who was named a Presidential Ambassador for Global Entrepreneurship under former President Barack Obama, has settled with the Securities and Exchange Commission after being charged with "massive fraud" on Wednesday.

Holmes, 34, was the founder and CEO of Theranos, a privately owned Silicon Valley health tech company once valued at $9 billion. The SEC alleges the company deceived investors when raising more than $700 million from late 2013 to 2015, and as a result, Holmes will pay a $500,000 fine and be barred from serving as a director or officer of a public company for 10 years, according to CNBC.

The SEC also said Theranos deceived investors by "hosting misleading technology demonstrations, and overstating the extent of Theranos' relationships with commercial partners," noting that at times Theranos' technology performed could only do about 12 tests of the over 200 tests advertised. The SEC also said former Theranos President Ramesh "Sunny" Balwani and Holmes lied about the extent of Thernos' involvement with the military.

Theranos previously settled a lawsuit with one of its biggest investors, Partner Fund Management, which invested more than $96 million in Theranos in 2014. Holmes has already said she plans to give away shares to the "most significant shareholders."

Theranos also settled with the state of Arizona for $4.8 million last year over consumer fraud claims pertaining to its "flawed" Edison device blood tests.

"The Theranos story is an important lesson for Silicon Valley," Jina Choi, director of the SEC's San Francisco regional office, said in a statement. â "Innovators who seek to revolutionize and disrupt an industry must tell investors the truth about what their technology can do today, not just what they hope it might do someday."

Obama invited Holmes to the White House back in 2015, where she was named a Presidential Ambassador for Global Entrepreneurship. The Clintons have also embraced Holmes, including Bill Clinton, who had a lengthy discussion with her at the Clinton Global Initiativeâ s annual meeting in 2015. Holmes talked about bringing "equality" to the health care sector.

Holmes was also scheduled to host a $2,700-a-head fundraiser for Hillary Clinton in March 2016 at the Theranos Palo Alto, California headquarters, an event Chelsea Clinton was scheduled to attend. However, the fundraiser changed locations after her campaign was criticized for holding an event at the offices of a company under federal investigation.

Holmes remained a host for the fundraiser, and Chelsea Clinton still attended the event.

"[The event] is not connected to a specific company or policy, but a chance to talk directly to women in tech," the Clinton campaign told CNBC at the time. "We frequently send initial invitations while host committees are still being formed and locations finalized. This was never a health care event and the location wasn't set. It will not be at Theranos."

The Washington Free Beacon reached out to Obama's office for comment but did not receive a response by time of publication.

I don't have financial information on Shkreli, nor of the case other than he was convicted and has years in prison.

Clinton Foundation Went for 'Biggest Fraud Ever Investigated' - Analyst

Speaking to Sputnik about reports of a new Justice Department probe into the Clinton Foundation over possible pay-to-play politics during Hillary Clinton's tenure as secretary of state, philanthropy law expert Charles Ortel outlined why he believed the Clinton Foundation may very well be 'the largest unprosecuted fraud in history'.

This week, law enforcement officials told Washington political newspaper The Hill that at least one witness had been questioned, and additional efforts were planned in a probe into possible illegal activities during Clinton's tenure as America's top diplomat.

Clinton, who served as secretary of state between 2009 and 2013, is suspected of having traded political favors in exchange for lavish contributions to the foundation, established by her husband Bill Clinton in 2001 after the end of his tenure as president. According to The Hill, the FBI is taking the lead in the probe, and their investigation will include looking into whether tax-exempt assets were converted for personal or political use.

Â© REUTERS/ BRENDAN MCDERMID

US Justice Department Opens New Probe Into Clinton Foundation â Reports Speaking to Sputnik, investor, writer, and vocal Clinton Foundation critic Charles Ortel outlined the vast possible extent of the Clintons' illegal activities.

"I started focusing on this in February of 2015," Ortel explained. "It took me about several weeks to figure out that this is the largest unprosecuted fraud in world history. By my calculations, the declared incoming amounts of the Clinton Foundations are about $2.3 billion, but when you consider all the affiliates around the world, it runs in the many hundreds of billions of dollars."

According to the Wall Street analyst, "The great complexity of this charity, volatility in currency exchange rates, and lax controls, in the [sense] that so many of the trustees and donors are basically political allies of the Clintons who stand to benefit from payments from governments [and other entities make it] rife with potential for fraud."

"My training is in banking and investment analysis," Ortel stressed. "Under US law, a charity like this has to produce audited books that account and comply with auditing standards that are very strict. Anyone with a modicum of training can see that there is no legally compliant audit [of the Clinton Foundation] over a twenty year period."

Therefore, in Ortel's view, "the real question here is not 'Is it a fraud?' Of course it's a fraud! The questions are: Why did so many governments around the world let this fraud go on for so long? And why didn't [the FBI] see this fraud [in 2001-2005, when it was investigating the Foundation]? Why did they let it escalate? Those are the big questions in my mind."

Sputnik: Has there been a standard audit of the Clinton Foundation in recent years?

Charles Ortel: [The question is] what we mean by an audit. There are upper case Audits and lower case audits. Because of its size, this foundation is required to produce a strict audit each year that double-checks the tax forms, and independent third parties prove that what's in the tax forms is actually true and accurate.

US Congresswoman Brown Indicted on Multiple Counts of Fraud, Conspiracy There are federal laws that apply to that, there are state laws that vary in their severity, but New York and California are very strict for example. [The foundation] has never complied with those laws: it's passed on fake audits as being real audits. That's a very serious crime. We have a 71-year-old African American congressperson who's going to go to jail for five years for $800,000 in charity fraud over a twenty year period. [The Clinton Foundation case is about] over $2.3 billion. And this is by a former president, and an aspiring president.

Sputnik: You're making very serious allegations. Could you elaborate into why you say the audits that were provided were fake audits? We're so used to hearing about fake news, and now we have fake audits as well.

Charles Ortel: In America, in addition to the laws that are out there, there are regulations that lay out what is and isn't an audit. I have done extensive work on this; it's free, it's on my site, charlesortel.com, there are extensive exhibits; I also have a podcast show, Sundays with Charles, featuring many hours going through these exhibits in detail, but in sum and substance: audits have to have an income statement, a balance sheet and a cash flow statement. There is no cash flow statement for Clinton Foundation audits from 2001-2004, in the period when they built the Little Rock complex. That's just a gross error. Those audits are not on the Clinton Foundation website. They're available in state filings. I have them. I've checked them. They flatly say that the audits don't comply with US law.

Â© REUTERS/ JEFF OVERS

Former US Secretary of State, Hillary Clinton is seen speaking, in this undated photograph received via the BBC, during an interview at Claridge's hotel for the BBC's Andrew Marr Show which was broadcast in London, Britain October 15, 2017.

Burning Down the House: Twitter Conspiracies Aflame Over Clinton Home Fire Sputnik: So who's responsible? Who has been negligent in ignoring what you're saying in these insufficient or noncompliant filings?

Charles Ortel: The way it works is, you file with the IRS to get federal tax exemptions. That's the first step for a charity. If you want to solicit in a state like New York, you also have to file to get New York state tax exemptions; the taxes in New York are very high. [The Clinton Foundation has] never done that properly.

So the answer to your question is: in any state where you solicit to raise funds, you have to register, fill out forms, explain the true state of your foundation, and generally have to file a copy of your most recent audit. So the answer is that inside the United States, they're in trouble in every state that regulates charities.

Outside the United States, different countries have different rules. I'm not sure what Russia's are, but I know England's rules very well. There's gross non-compliance in England, across Europe and everywhere in the world.

Â© REUTERS/ LUCY NICHOLSON

Clinton, Sachs' Role in Post-Soviet 'Privatizations' Deserves Scrutiny â Analyst Sputnik: Is this non-compliance common among charitable organizations, or is this a scandal in its audacity to cover up the fact that this information wasn't provided?

Charles Ortel: It's audacious. You have in the Clintons audacious people. I guess they decided that if they're going to go for fraud, to go for the biggest fraud ever prosecuted, and get away with it. This has been a long process for me to get on this radio station with you, and to have this kind of discussion, because most people at the beginning will say 'Come on, a former president, an aspiring president, somebody must have seen this?' And that's what the Clintons and other fraudsters depend on: That you've got a doubt and you turn off your suspicious gene and just say 'Well they must have had somebody check it.' [In reality], they didn't do it right.

Clinton Seagrams heiress arrested in NXIVM sex-trafficking perversion case

Tweet Share Share

By Katie Hansen

NEW YORK — An heiress to the Seagram's liquor fortune was arrested Tuesday in connection with her work with an upstate New York self-improvement organization accused of branding some of its female followers and forcing them into unwanted sex.

Clare Bronfman, a daughter of the late billionaire philanthropist and former Seagram chairman Edgar Bronfman Sr., and three other people associated with the NXIVM organization were taken into custody and charged with racketeering conspiracy, the U.S. attorney's office in Brooklyn announced. She was scheduled to be arraigned later Tuesday in Brooklyn.

A former competitor in international equestrian show jumping competitions, Bronfman is accused in an indictment of taking a number of steps to help NXIVM's founder and leader, Keith Raniere, exercise control over members of the group, including identity theft, intercepting electronic communications and money laundering.

Raniere was arrested in Mexico this year and brought to the U.S. to face charges that he, along with an adherent, the TV actress Allison Mack, coerced followers into becoming "slaves" to senior members.

Bronfman's attorney, Susan Necheles, said in a statement that her client did nothing wrong.

"NXIVM was not a criminal enterprise but instead was an organization that helped thousands of people. The charges against Clare are the result of government overreaching and charging an individual with crimes just because the government disagrees with some beliefs taught by NXIVM and held by Clare. This is not how things should be done in America. We are confident that Clare will be exonerated," she said.

Also arrested Tuesday were Nancy Salzman, who was the organization's longtime president, her daughter, Lauren Salzman, and a former bookkeeper for the group, Kathy Russell.

Despite criticism for years by ex-followers who called NXIVM a cult and a pyramid scheme, the organization's intense self-improvement classes had, at one point, earned it thousands of adherents, including some with Hollywood ties. They included Nicki Clyne, an actress who appeared on "Battlestar Galactica," Bronfman's sister Sara, a son of former Mexican president Carlos Salinas de Gortari and India Oxenberg, a daughter of "Dynasty" actress Catherine Oxenberg.

, prosecutors say Mack, who played a teenage friend of Superman in the CW network's "Smallville," helped Raniere recruit women to a secret sub-society within NXIVM whose members were branded by way of a surgical tool with a symbol that resembled his initials. Women were also expected to be subservient to "masters," prosecutors said, including giving in to demands for sex.

The arrest of Bronfman, who has long been affiliated with NXIVM, wasn't a surprise. At a court hearing in June, a judge rejected an attempt to get Raniere released on $10 million bail paid for by Bronfman after prosecutors labeled her a co-conspirator.

In earlier court filings, the government detailed how Bronfman gave away tens of millions of dollars of her fortune to support Raniere and his group, including paying for private air travel at a cost of $65,000 a flight. It also said Bronfman has "paid for numerous lawyers to bring suits against Nxivm critics."

In a website post last year, Bronfman called the secret society a "sorority" that "has truly benefited the lives of its members, and does so freely." She added, "I find no fault in a group of women (or men for that matter) freely taking a vow of loyalty and friendship with one another to feel safe while pushing back against the fears that have stifled their personal and professional growth."

Ranieri and Mack have also denied the allegations. In their court papers, the defence lawyers have said the alleged victims of the group were never abused, and were in fact "independent, smart, curious adults" searching for "happiness, fulfilment and meaning."

The Daily Beast reports that Clinton SuperPac â ¤ Correct the Recordâ ¤ is openly admitting to spending $1 million to hire fake online Hillary supporters to swarm social media sites like Reddit and counteract Sanders' [actually existent unpaid] enthusiastic supporters' points about Hillary in the interest of â ¤ unityâ ¤. Barf.

Couple quick things: first, there have been a number of diaries claiming to â ¤ have switched from Bernie to Hillaryâ ¤ lately, and some of them have been from recently created accounts with no record of pro-Sanders remarks or diaries. More such people have populated the comment sections of such diaries, and someone is reccing them despite what I judge to be their incredible lack of helpful information. That is just a fact, and my opinion about said fact. Second, if one wanted to make the case that there were a vast Clintonian conspiracy behind that rash of new accounts and diaries, this is certainly what one might consider corroborating evidence. Note the SuperPac has already spent $4.5 million on God knows what. So let's be honest this could have been already happening, and now they believe they have more or less locked up the nomination and so are getting more belligerent/open about it. Third, note that Sanders-supporting diaries tend to still dominate the rec list day in, day out, and that Sanders has no Super Pac. We are on to your presumptive corporate shilling, in other words. Not that we can prove it. What I'm saying is that this is why I have donated so much money to Bernie, because he is a candidate whose message, strategy and tactics are all above board. I.e. What they appear to be. He has gotten this far without steroids. Paid or not, Clinton supporters are welcome aboard.

Citing â ¤ lessons learned from online engagement with â ¤ Bernie Bros,â ¤ â ¤ a pro-Hillary Clinton Super PAC is pledging to spend $1 million to â ¤ push back againstâ ¤ users on Twitter, Facebook, Reddit and Instagram.

Correct the Recordâ ¤ s â ¤ Barrier Breakersâ ¤ project boasts in a press release that it has already â ¤ addressed more than 5,000 people that have personally attacked Hillary Clinton on Twitter.â ¤ The PAC released this on Thursday.

The PAC was created in May of last year when it was spun off from the American Bridge SuperPAC, which is run by longtime Hillary and Bill Clinton supporter David Brock. Brock also founded the left-wing media watchdog website Media Matters for America.

Some Bernie Sanders-supporting users on Reddit already started to notice the changes on Thursday afternoon.

â ¤ This explains why my inbox turned to cancer on Tuesday,â ¤ wrote user OKarizee.

â Been a member of reddit for almost 4 years and never experienced anything like it. In fact, in all my years on the internet Iâ ve never experienced anything like it.â

Correct the Record, which has received $5 million this campaign season and has spent almost $4.5 million of it, according to OpenSecrets.org, outlined its strategy against â swarms of anonymous attackersâ in a press release.

Update: if you want a case in point, look at the diary smearing Dr. Jane Sanders that's on the Rec list, and then look at the date the diarist joined.

Update 2: I give you exhibit B Attack diary on Dr. Jane Sanders by a diarist who joined almost a week ago. Note that I can't PROVE this diarist is a paid troll, nor am I ACCUSING, simply pointing out what a clear pattern is occurring here. www.dailykos.com/...

Its latest FEC Financial Summary shows just how outrageous campaign spending has become. In the nine months since starting his candidacy, Sanders has accumulated $96,311,423 in â Receiptsâ (contributions). However, running for the presidentâ s job is costly â Bernie 2016 reports a whopping $81,649,471 in â Disbursementsâ

There are the usual items: staff salaries, rent, airfare, hotel rooms, sound equipment, credit cards, catering, food (lots of pizza), office supplies, ad buys, software, computers, train rides, port-a-potties, internet service, security and at least one limousine rental. You name it, youâll likely find it. After all, it takes a village to run a campaign.

Revolution Messaging consumed twenty percent of those disbursements (see table below). Its services through the end of January have cost Bernie Sanders over $16 million. The biggest chunk came during that month and totaled nearly $7 million.

Clinton supporter Allison Mack cites Scientology as defense in sex slave case. If Scientology can blackmail then so can she.

â Smallvilleâ star Allison Mack is citing Scientology as a defense in her sex trafficking case.

Lawyers for accused Nxivm sex-slave cult leader and former "Smallville" star Allison Mack are arguing that she isn't guilty of inducing forced labor if the Church of Scientology isn't guilty of the same charge.

In court papers filed yesterday in Brooklyn Federal Court, Mackâ s lawyers argued that Mack's threat to release naked photos and disparaging statements made by cult members against their relatives doesn't rise to the threat of "serious harm" required to prove someone engaged in forced labor.

Mack and Nxivm leader Keith Raniere are accused of using the photos and statements to get free work and to force sex with Raniere.

'SMALLVILLE' STAR ALLISON MACK GRANTED \$5 MILLION BAIL IN SEX CULT CASE

"The government argues that Ms. Mack obtained forced labor through 'threats of serious harm.' with serious harm being the embarrassment that would result from the exposure of one's collateral,"the court filing said. "Courts have found, however, that such an outcome, albeit embarrassing, does not amount to serious harm under the statute."

The argument cites a 2009 case in which a couple unsuccessfully sued the Church of Scientology for forced labor.

"The court did not find that plaintiffs were compelled to remain in the organization even though, if they chose to leave, they would be 'excommunicated' from their friends and family and labeled a 'dissenter,'" Mackâ s lawyers said. "The threat of reputational damage and isolation from loved ones therefore did not qualify as serious harm."

Mack has been out on a $5 million bond since her spring arrest on charges of sex trafficking, sex trafficking conspiracy and forced labor conspiracy. She was indicted along with Keith Raniere, the purported leader of a self-help program. Both face mandatory minimum sentences of 15 years to life in prison if convicted. (Read the indictment here.)

'SMALLVILLE' ACTRESS ALLISON MACK ARRESTED IN SEX TRAFFICKING SCHEME, COULD FACE LIFE IN PRISON IF CONVICTED

Here are the details of the wild case, as written by the Justice Department:

"According to court filings, during the past 20 years, Raniere established a series of purported self-help programs within his umbrella organization 'Nxivm' (pronounced NEX-i-um). Nxivm is based in Albany, New York and has operated centers in the United States, Mexico, Canada and South America. Nxivm maintains features of a pyramid scheme, as its courses cost thousands of dollars each and participants ('Nxians') are encouraged to pay for additional classes and to recruit others to take classes in order to rise within the ranks of Nxivm. A number of Nxians were residents of the Eastern District of New York when they were recruited, and Nxivm has held promotional recruiting events in Brooklyn. Mack is credited in publicly available materials with co-creating a Nxivm program, called The Source, which recruited actors.

"As detailed in court filings, in 2015, Raniere created a secret society within Nxivm called 'DOS,' an acronym that stands for a Latin phrase that loosely translates to 'Lord/Master of the Obedient Female Companions' or 'The Vow.' DOS operated with levels of women 'slaves' headed by 'masters.' Slaves were expected to recruit slaves of their own (thus becoming masters themselves), who in turn owed service not only to their own masters but also to masters above them in the DOS pyramid. Raniere stood alone at the top of the pyramid. Other than Raniere, all members of DOS were women. Mack is one of the women in the first level of the pyramid immediately below Raniere.

TOM CRUISE REPORTEDLY HAD GIRLFRIENDS AUDITIONED BY THE CHURCH OF SCIENTOLOGY

"Mack and other DOS masters recruited DOS slaves by telling them that they were joining a women-only organization that would empower them and eradicate purported weaknesses that the Nxivm curriculum taught were common in women. Mack and other DOS masters concealed Raniere's status at the top of the pyramid from new recruits.

"As a pre-condition to joining DOS, women were required to provide 'collateral,' which included highly damaging information about friends and family members, nude photographs and/or rights to the recruit's assets. DOS slaves were told that their collateral could be released for any number of reasons, including telling anyone about DOS's existence or leaving DOS. Many DOS slaves were branded on their pelvic areas using a cauterizing pen with a symbol which, unbeknownst to them, incorporated Raniere's initials. During the branding ceremonies, slaves were required to be fully naked, and a master would order one slave to film the branding while the others restrained the slave being branded.

"According to court filings, Mack directly or implicitly required her slaves, including Jane Does 1 and 2, as identified in the Indictment, to engage in sexual activity with Raniere. In exchange for this, Mack received financial and other benefits from Raniere. Jane Doe 1 and Jane Doe 2 believed that if they did not participate in those activities with Raniere, their collateral would be released."

A bombshell four-page "FISA memo" alleging egregious surveillance abuse by the FBI, DOJ and Obama administration, specifically names FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, former FBI Director James Comey and Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein, according to the Daily Beast.

The GOP-authored memo made waves last week after it was made available to the full House of Representatives for viewing. With over 60 GOP lawmakers calling for its release, Capitol Hill sources on both sides of the aisle tell The Daily Beast that it's only a matter of time before the general public is allowed to view the document - which is likely to stoke already-inflamed tensions between GOP lawmakers and the individuals named in the leak.

Rep. Jody Hice

@CongressmanHice

Earlier this morning, I examined the classified, four-page memo from @HouseIntelComm regarding the FBI, DOJ, and the so-called #RussianCollusion. To put it simply, â WOW.â I joined the call to #ReleaseTheMemo. Americans deserve truth and transparency.

The facts contained in the Republican majority-authored report are said to be "jaw-dropping and demand full transparency," according to Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL), while the top ranking Democrat on the House Intel Committee, Adam Schiff (D-CA) dismissed the memo as "profoundly misleading" talking points drafted by Republican staffers.

Several other GOP Congressmembers have weighed in. "I have read the memo," tweeted Rep. Steve King (R-IA), adding "The sickening reality has set in. I no longer hold out hope there is an innocent explanation for the information the public has seen. I have long said it is worse than Watergate. It was #neverTrump & #alwaysHillary. #releasethememo."

Along with the four-page memo, Congressional investigators learned from a new batch of text messages between anti-Trump FBI investigators that several individuals within the Department of Justice and the FBI may have come together in the "immediate aftermath" of the 2016 election to undermine President Trump, according to Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) who has reviewed the texts.

This is particularly interesting since the memo allegedly names Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein - who created Robert Mueller's special counsel after former FBI Director James Comey was fired.

John Ratcliffe

@RepRatcliffe

The thousands of texts @TGowdySC and I reviewed today revealed manifest bias among top FBI officials against @realDonaldTrump. The texts between Strzok and Page referenced a "secret society."

While the "secret society" reference may have been in jest ("Are you even going to give out your calendars? Seems kind of depressing. Maybe it should just be the first meeting of the secret society," Page wrote to Strzok), a whistleblower has allegedly confirmed the existence of clandestine, of high ranking U.S. intelligence officials which met "offsite" to conspire against a sitting President, according to Sen. Ron Johnson (R-WI).

â we have an informant talking about a group holding secret meetings off-site,â Johnson said.

â We have to continue to dig into it,â he added. â This is not a distraction. This is biased, potentially corruption at the highest levels of the FBI.â -The Hill

On Monday night, Reps. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) and Trey Gowdy (R-SC) told Fox News what they had learned from the new batch of communications between FBI investigators Peter Strzok and Lisa Page - contained within a 384-page batch of text messages delivered to Congress from the DOJ last Friday. Of note Ratcliffe says that Strzok and Page were included in the clandestine anti-Trump cabal at the highest levels of the American intelligence community.

In response to the memo, Congressional Democrats led by Adam Schiff (D-CA) drafted a "counter-memo" to "correct the record" regarding alleged FISA abuse contained within the GOP memo.

Schiff's "counter-memo" came on the heels of an absurd letter written by Schiff and Dianne Feinstein (D-CA) to Facebook and Twitter executives, calling for the Social Media giants to combat "Russian bots" which were promoting the hashtag #ReleaseTheMemo.

.ABC News

â @ABC

NEW: Sen. Feinstein, Rep. Schiff urge Facebook and Twitter to investigate involvement of Russian bots in pushing "Release the Memo" campaign: "If these reports are accurate, we are witnessing an ongoing attack by the Russian government through Kremlin-linked social media actors."

The letter's claims were immediately shot down by Facebook, which told the Daily Beast that #ReleaseTheMemo hashtag has been pushed by actual Americans.

a knowledgeable source says that Twitter's internal analysis has thus far found that authentic American accounts, and not Russian imposters or automated bots, are driving #ReleaseTheMemo. There are no preliminary indications that the Twitter activity either driving the hashtag or engaging with it is either predominantly Russian.

In short, according to this source, who would not speak to The Daily Beast for attribution, the retweets are coming from inside the country.

So to recap: not only were high level intelligence officials allegedly involved in clandestine meetings in which they conspired to "impair" Donald Trump, this leak in conjunction of the four-page GOP memo appear to confirm what many have suspected all along; a highly illegal operation was conducted against President Trump which goes all the way to the top of the U.S. government.

If Trump needed an excuse to drain the swamp without the appearance of partisan politics, it's just been handed to him on a silver platter. Or he may want to wait until the general public has seen the memo - which is being fast-tracked by the House.

The most underrated fact about the drama surrounding the FBI agents' text messages is that they were discovered in an inspector general investigation launched at the behest of Democrats in Congress who thought the FBI was biased against Clinton

Companies co-founded by Nancy Pelosi son charged with securities fraud as huge green scam exposed

By Elizabeth Harrington -

The Securities and Exchange Commission \(SEC\) charged a company cofounded by Paul Pelosi Jr. with fraud on Wednesday after learning that two convicted criminals were running the business.

Paul Pelosi Jr., the son of House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D., Calif.), was the president and chief operating officer of Natural Blue Resources Inc., an investment company he cofounded that focuses on environmentally-friendly ventures.

The SEC charged four individuals with fraud, including former New Mexico Gov. Toney Anaya, and suspended trading in the company's stock. Pelosi owned over 10 million shares in the company in 2009.

The SEC said Wednesday the company was secretly controlled by James E. Cohen and Joseph Corazzi, both of whom had previous fraud convictions. Corazzi violated federal securities laws and was barred from acting as an officer or director of a public company. Cohen was previously incarcerated for financial fraud.

Cohen and Corazzi said they were outside consultants, but according to the SEC, they actually controlled Natural Blue's business decisions without disclosing their past brushes with the law to investors. The pair made hundreds of thousands of dollars off the company.

Cohen and Corazzi concealed their involvement through a so-called consulting agreement, but their influence over the issuer spread much further, said Andrew J. Ceresney, director of the SEC's Enforcement Division. Investors in Natural Blue had a right to know who was running the company behind the scenes.

The SEC suspended trading in Natural Blue stock. A notice filed in the Federal Register on Wednesday by Jill M. Peterson, assistant secretary of the SEC, revealed that the company has not filed any periodic reports, which are required by law, with the SEC in four years.

It appears to the Securities and Exchange Commission that there is a lack of current and accurate information concerning the securities of Natural Blue Resources, Inc. because it has not filed any periodic reports since the period ended September 30, 2010, Peterson said, in the order announcing suspension of trading.

Cohen, Corazzi, Anaya, and Erik Perry, a former executive at Natural Blue, were all charged with federal fraud violations. Anaya, who was Governor of New Mexico from 1983 to 1987, and Perry misled investors by failing to disclose that Cohen and Corazzi were running the company in spite of their criminal or disciplinary histories, the SEC said.

Natural Blue and its officers attempted an end-run around the rules designed to prevent recidivists from getting their hands on the controls of public companies, said Paul Levenson, director of the SEC's Boston Regional Office.

While Natural Blue was ostensibly led by Anaya and subsequently Perry, management decisions made by Cohen and Corazzi resulted in no revenues or viable business operations for the company, the SEC said. Anaya and Perry each deferred to Cohen and Corazzi in derogation of their responsibilities.

The SEC said Natural Blue made various material misrepresentations about the company, its contracts, and its anticipated revenue in a February 2011 press release as well as on a website and verbally to investors.

There is some dispute over Paul Pelosi's current connection to the company.

The New Mexico Office of the Secretary of State Business Service Division currently lists Natural Blue as a company not in good standing, with Pelosi listed as its president.

Pelosi cofounded the company in 2009. The SEC said Natural Blue's mission is to create, acquire, or otherwise invest in environmentally-friendly companies, including an initiative to locate, purify, and sell water recovered from underground aquifers in New Mexico and other areas with depleting water resources.

According to Bloomberg Businessweek, Pelosi served as president and chief operating officer of Natural Blue Resources, Inc. until January 11, 2010. Joseph Montalto is listed as the current president.

However, the Mountain View Telegraph cited Pelosi as Natural Blue's president last year, and Anaya was still leading the company as chairman and CEO at this time.

Pelosi and Natural Blue Resources could not be reached for comment.

Anaya will be barred from participating in any penny stock company for at least five years, and fined an amount to be determined later. Perry also settled with the SEC, agreeing to pay $150,000 fine, and permanently banned from serving as an officer or director of a public company and from participating in any offerings of penny stock.

Concealing the depth of 'Obamagate'

- Facebook

The left used to get very worked up about the CIA's interference in foreign elections. Liberals would quote solemnly the work of Philip Agee, a CIA turncoat who wrote articles and books about the agency's manipulation of this or that foreign election. But these days ACLU-style liberals shrug at the meddling of John Brennan's CIA in the 2016 American election, mischief that the FBI is still trying to conceal.

It was reported recently that the FBI refuses to show Congressman Devin Nunes an unredacted copy of the origination document that triggered the probe into the Trump campaign. What is the FBI hiding? Paradoxically, nothing – that is, no classified information showing collusion between Trump and Russia. The FBI is simply trying to hide the embarrassingly partisan origins of its spying on the Trump campaign.

Were the redactions covering material harmful to Trump, that material would have been leaked by now. So the redactions can only be concealing the fingerprints of Hillary's partisans in the Obama administration. The FBI will eventually have to fess up to the politicization to which it succumbed – that the most virulent Hillary partisan imaginable, John Brennan, had put pressure on FBI officials to start the probe, that a Trump hater, Peter Strzok, formally opened up the probe, that the smears of a paid opposition researcher for Hillary, Christopher Steele, contributed to the probe, that scandalous – intelligence-sharing – between Brennan and foreign intelligence agencies shaped the probe, and that FBI officials suspected the probe was unfounded but pursued it anyways at the insistence of Obama officials.

The FBI says it is redacting sensitive information. That's true in an ironic sense: the FBI is very sensitive about the information, in that it illuminates the agency's transformation into an opposition research shop for the Hillary campaign. Take her partisans out of the picture and the probe would never have started.

In an attempt to sanitize the probe, the media has attributed its origin to a drunken conversation between an Aussie diplomat and a minor Trump campaign volunteer. But that's a joke. Maybe the FBI threw that into the pot at the last minute, but John Brennan had been stirring it for months before then. As Brennan told Congress, "we were uncovering information intelligence about interactions and contacts between U.S. persons and the Russians. And as we came upon that, we would share it with the bureau." Notice his use of "we" in that statement. By "we," Brennan meant his retinue of Hillary partisans at the CIA who had been shaking foreign intelligence agencies down for any dirt on Trump.

The British intelligence, in cahoots with Brennan and Christopher Steele (who was on Hillary's payroll), figured largely into this mischief. In all likelihood it will come out that the "information" British intelligence shared with Brennan was just recycled Steele material. The "allies" tipped us off to Trump-Russian collusion – storyline is a sham, designed to distract attention from a chain of Hillary partisans who in the thick of a campaign were circulating smears among themselves and calling it "intelligence sharing."

It was the blinding, viscerally personal hatred of Brennan for Trump, perhaps more than anything else, that turned all those phony "tips" into a counterintelligence probe. In the grip of that kind of feverish antipathy, combined with his desire to continue as CIA director under Hillary, Brennan could convince himself of any Trump monstrosity and made it his mission to prod the FBI into harassing him. Anyone who doubts that hatred should just take a look at Brennan's Twitter account these days. This week he is rattling on about Trump's self adoration. Also take a look at the people he is following on Twitter. They make up most of the cast of Obamagate, from James Comey to Samantha Power to Sally Yates to Susan Rice, not to mention the newest cast member, Obama chief of staff Denis McDonough, whose exposure is yet another product of Nunes's refusal to accept redacted material from the FBI/Justice Department.

But it wasn't enough for Brennan to push the FBI investigation. He also had to publicize it, which he achieved through another person in Christopher Steele's orbit, Senator Harry Reid, whose Super PAC, as the Daily Caller reports, was run by the very Hillary lawyer who hired Steele's services. Brennan briefed Reid on the beginnings of the FBI investigation he instigated, knowing that Reid would leak the contents of the briefing to the press.

About this astounding meddling in an election by a CIA director, the Philip Agees of the left have fallen completely silent. But that makes sense. After all, how can old radicals inveigh against the CIA as a wilderness of mirrors when it is John Brennan's reflection in it?

Congressman Gaetz: â If Jeff Sessions Does Not Appoint a Second Special Counsel, Then We Need a New Attorney Generalâ

by JEFF POOR4752

Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) told fill-in host Jeanine Pirro that if Attorney General Jeff Sessions declines to appoint a second special counsel to investigate wrongdoing within his Department of Justice, then he should be removed from that post.

According to Gaetz, an Inspector Generalâ s report would be insufficient given the report doesnâ t necessarily mean charges would be brought by the Justice Department against wrongdoers.

â If Jeff Sessions does not appoint a second special counsel, then we need a new Attorney General, judge,â he said. â Because youâ re right â even if we learn more horrifying things from the Inspector General, we canâ t actually prosecute somebody for those things because we would need somebody to be able to bring that case. And the Department of Justice and FBI obviously wonâ t be bringing a case against themselves. So, Jeff Sessions needs to get rid of this mindset that is a dereliction of duty, and he needs to do what Congress has called for and appoint a second special counsel to get to the bottom of this.â

Conservatives Need To Dox Every ANTIFA member, Corrupt Senator and DNC Financier

An Elon University professor has devised a "secret weapon" to fight "far-right extremists" on behalf of Antifa "she" has made software to keep tabs on 400,000 Facebook accounts whom she suspects to be members of the alt-right.

And she "is using that program to dox anyone she deems a "far-right extremist."

A new Wired Magazine article, published on Tuesday, highlights the work of Megan Squire, a 45-year-old professor of computer science at Elon University, whose program feeds data to the hyper-partisan organization Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) "as well as a "left-wing activist who she knew might take more radical action."

The magazine reports that the SPLC "analysts then use the information she gives them to "provide information to police or to reveal white supremacists to their employers, seeking to get them fired."

The SPLC "s penchant for recklessly referring to organizations as "hate groups" previously resulted in a domestic terror attack on the Family Research Council. The group "s headquarters was attacked in 2012 by a shooter who cited the SPLC "s "hate map," which identified the FRC as a "hate group" alongside the Ku Klux Klan and Stormfront for its support of traditional marriage.

The anonymous left-wing activist, states Wired, posts the identities of the people whose information she gives him, along with their photographs, "for the public to do with what it would."

Squire also shares her data with the far-left militia group, Redneck Revolt, where it reportedly "gets used in somewhat less official ways."

"Before a neo-Nazi rally in Boston this past November, Squire provided local antifa groups with a list of 94 probable white nationalist attendees that included their names, Facebook profiles, and group affiliations," reports Wired.

The so-called "neo-Nazi" rally, as referred to by Wired, was no more than a peaceful free speech rally held by Republican pro-Trump supporters, and conservative groups like Resist Marxism and Boston Free Speech.

On a recently published post on Squire "s blog, the professor classifies what constitutes a "far-right extremist" by 12 different ideologies. She uses a variety of keywords to identify so-called extremists, including popular terms like "anti-SJW," "anti-Obama," "No Sharia Law," "rebel," "patriot," and even "kek."

As Far Left Watch notes, the vague keywords offer no guarantee that most of the 400,000 individuals on her list are "far-right extremists." Furthermore, even if they were, vigilante action taken by Antifa supporters against any of these people could result in harm to both innocent people marked as targets, or their assailants.

The Wired article states that Squire herself does not identify as a member of Antifa, but they rank among her strongest allies. Squire is reportedly âsympatheticâ to the DHS-designated domestic terror groupâs âgoal of silencing racist extremists and is unwilling to condemn their use of violence, describing it as a last resort among a âdiversity of tactics.â âSheâs an intelligence operative of sorts in the battle against far-right extremism, passing along information to those who might put it to real-world use. Who might weaponize it,â Wired claims.

Court Rules There Is Enough Evidence for Victims to Sue Saudi Arabia for Role in 9/11

New York, NY â Last year, for the first time since that fateful September morning 16 years ago, families of victims of the 9/11 terror attacks used a new law to go after Saudi Arabia in lawsuits for their role in the attacks. After evidence was revealed during the lawsuit showing the Saudi Arabian embassy in Washington may have funded a âdry runâ for the hijackings carried out by two Saudi employees, Saudi Arabia went into panic mode. In response, Saudi Arabia quickly attempted to use their pull inside the United States to have the lawsuits thrown out. However, this attempt has now failed.

According to Reuters, â U.S. District Judge George Daniels in Manhattan said the plaintiffsâ allegations â narrowly articulate a reasonable basisâ for him to assert jurisdiction over Saudi Arabia under the Justice Against Sponsors of Terrorism Act (JASTA), a 2016 federal law.â

Despite Barack Obamaâ s attempt to deny recourse to the victims of 9/11 by vetoing JASTA, the Senate quickly answered back with a near-unanimous override, thus making it law. The landmark decision by the Senate became the first and only override of the Obama presidency.

According to Reuters, â Daniels said the plaintiffs could try to prove that Saudi Arabia was liable for the alleged activities of Fahad al Thumairy, an imam at the King Fahad Mosque in Culver City, California, and Omar al Bayoumi, said to be an intelligence officer. They were accused of helping two hijackers acclimate themselves to the United States, and begin preparing for the attacks.â

Naturally, lawyers for Saudi Arabia are denying all allegations and are demanding that the lawsuits be dismissed immediately. According to the Saudi newspaper Okaz, in January of this year, the government of Saudi Arabia called on a US federal judge to immediately reject the lawsuit. Because of the decision this week, that will not happen.

James Kreindler, a lawyer for many of the plaintiffs, said he was â delightedâ the case can proceed, according to Reuters.

â We have been pressing to proceed with the case and conduct discovery from the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, so that the full story can come to light, and expose the Saudi role in the 9/11 attacks,â he said in a phone interview.

As TFTP has previously reported, thanks to the release of the 28 pages, Americans and the rest of the world now know that Saudi Arabia played a significant role in the September 11th attacks. Also, thanks to the release of 28 pages, we know that the US government was complicit in covering up Saudi Arabiaâ s role in the attacks.

Even the severely flawed and biased â 9/11 Commission Reportâ did not did not â exclude the likelihood that charities with significant Saudi government sponsorship diverted funds to Al-Qaeda.â

For a decade and a half, Presidents Barack Obama and George W. Bush kept secret the alleged role Saudi Arabia played in the September 11 attacks on America. Becuase of the cozy relationship the US has with the terrorist nationâ which Trump is complicit in maintainingâ special interests within the government have chosen to protect their Saudi friends instead of telling Americans the truth about what happened that fateful day.

Only because of the vigilance of those seeking the truth is this lawsuit and others like it now a reality. In fact, another lawsuit, filed last year, produced evidence of Saudi embassies giving aid to the hijackers.

According to an exclusive report by PIX 11, the lawsuit contains evidence which:

details how officials from Saudi embassies supported hijackers Salem al-Hazmi and Khalid Al-Mihdhar 18 months before 9/11.

The officials allegedly helped them find apartments, learn English and obtain credit cards and cash. The documents state that the officials helped them learn how to blend into the American landscape.

The suit also produces evidence that officials in the Saudi embassy in Germany supported lead hijacker Mohamed Atta. It claims that a Saudi official was in the same hotel in Virginia with several hijackers the night before the attacks.

The lawsuit asserts that the Saudi royals, who for years had been trying to curry favor with fundamentalists to avoid losing power, were aware that funds from Saudi charities were being funneled to al-Qaida.

Aviation attorney Jim Kreindler told PIX11 News: “The charities were alter egos of the Saudi government.”

“The Saudis were so duplicitous,” Kreindler said. “They claim to be allies fighting with U.S. against Iran, while at the same time working with the terrorists. There’s no question they had a hand in the 9/11 attacks.”

Daniel’s decision affects the claims of 25,000 victims, families of victims, businesses, and insurers who can now move forward with their lawsuits.

While this is good news, Daniels did, however, dismiss claims against Saudi businesses and a government-linked charity, saying that those did not overcome the presumption of immunity. This decision could limit the ability of plaintiffs to seek payment for the billions in damages as the only one who would now be paying would be the Saudi government.

Cracked is Over, Lays Off Most of Its Staff After DNC Makes it an SJW Pelosi Political Tool

Cracked has given the pink slip to most of its main contributors and senior editorial staff after a tumultuous run following its embrace of social justice politics.

If you grew up on the Internet, then thereâs a pretty good chance you stumbled upon a Cracked listicle or two detailing something like the âinsane fan theories about movies that make great movies better,â or âcreepy urban legends that turned out to be true.â

It made for immersive reading and you came off feeling richer for the experience.

But as with all good things, the Cracked as everyone knew it came to an end when its editors found the warm embrace of progressive politics. The siteâs full conversion into a platform for social justice happened at the height of GamerGate in 2014. It has since published at least a dozen articles on the topic, mostly to demonize gamers as âsocial outcastsâ and push feminism as a solution to the problem of âtoxic masculinity.â

GamerGate, a consumer-driven movement for ethics in games journalism, became a bogeyman for progressives, largely in part due to articles like those on Cracked.

In 2016, popular gaming YouTube commentator Rags took Cracked apart after senior writer Josh Sargent condemned video games for depictions of violence.

The siteâs progressive push wasnât simply limited to its coverage of the video game industry. Much of the siteâs content revolves around feminism, and even slips into its videos, which are more tedious and even less funny to watch than a John Oliver lecture.

On Tuesday, long-time editors and contributors to Cracked were informed that they no longer had a job.

CHEONG: Let's Look at Classic Fairy Tales Through the Lens of Social Justice

By Ian Miles Cheong

Posted on December 5, 2017

The illiberal left is incapable of getting its priorities in order. As Hollywood burns with allegations of pedophilia and widespread sexual assault, 21st century pearl-clutchers have instead set their sights on classic fairy tales.

The people we see on television are rarely the heroes they portray, and their private lives more closely resemble those of the villains. Yet instead of taking aim at these real-world monsters, an outspoken woman by the name of Sarah Hall made the headlines recently in her call for libraries to ban Sleeping Beauty.

In light of the #MeToo movement, in which women came forward with lurid allegations against the men who abused them, Hall decided that she, too, was very much affected by the unfolding drama after she read the classic fairy tale to her six-year-old .

In a series of tweets that have since gone viral and has become the hottest take of recent weeks, Hall called Sleeping Beauty a problematic lesson for childrenâ teaching them that itâ s okay for them to kiss a woman without her consent.

Showing no confidence in her own son Benâ s ability to tell right from wrong, the 40-year-old mother from Hull, U.K. left a comment in her sonâ s record book, and contacted his school to demand the book be removed from circulation.

She said: â In todayâ s society, it isnâ t appropriate â my son is only six, he absorbs everything he sees, and it isnâ t as if I can turn it into a constructive conversation.â

â I donâ t think taking Sleeping Beauty books out of circulation completely would be right. I actually think it would be a great resource for older children, you could have a conversation around it, you could talk about consent, and how the Princess might feel,â she added. â But Iâ m really concerned about it for younger children, would really welcome a conversation about whether this is suitable material.â

Given that the story revolves around a princess doomed to sleep forever, being kissed to wake up would be a blessing.

It would be ill-advised to perform any sexual act on someone in a coma, unless you want them to take revenge on youâ just like in Kill Bill, which was incidentally produced by Harvey Weinstein, ironically enough.

Like Kill Bill, Sleeping Beauty is fictional, and thereâ s no way anyone in their right mind would take it as a suggestion for them to commit sexual assault, excluding woke moralists.

Given the virality of Hallâ s complaints and the propensity for social justice warriors to find new things to whine about, Sleeping Beauty may only be the tip of the social justice iceberg in a new wave of attacks on classic fairy tales.

Here are a few fairy tales, both classic and modern, social justice warriors should find offensive.

Goldilocks, white privilege

The protagonist in Goldilocks is clearly a product of white privilege, able to walk into the home of three otherwise wild bears and consume all of their food while destroying their beds. If she were a black man, they wouldâve shot her on sight and gotten away with it thanks to the castle doctrine. The bears live in Texas.

The Little Mermaid, miscegenation and conservative relationships

The Little Mermaid warns against the dangers of race-mixing. A mermaid by birth, Ariel seeks to romance the prince (thus also promoting traditional, and un-progressive concepts of monogamous, heterosexual relationships) outside her species and ends up paying the ultimate price upon his rejection of her love. The prince denies Ariel by marrying a human woman, essentially condemning Ariel to death instead of engaging in polyamory. Cruel.

Snow White, misogyny and ableism

Racist tropes about the fairness of Snow Whiteâs skin aside, the fairy tale promotes traditional gender roles right off the bat, and depicts the only woman with agency as an evil queen whose only quality is jealousy. When Snow White arrives at the home of the seven dwarves, they immediately put her to work as their maid as they go off to work in the mines.

The dwarves themselves are depicted as squat, unattractive men with psychiatric problems. The dwarves offer no sexual qualities to Snow White, who seeks a straight white Chad to sweep in and rescue her from the humdrum of living with seven men defined by their mental illnessesâ Sleepy suffers from narcolepsy, Bashful has social anxiety disorder, Grumpy struggles with depression, and so forth. Their diminutive stature and mental illnesses make them poor candidates for romance, at least in the eyes of its authors.

Cinderella, body shaming and gender roles

While men get to be princes and nobles, the women in Cinderella are forced into subservient roles. The titular character performs housework while her sisters, who would normally share her duties, lobby for the princeâs attention. She gains the princeâs attention for a single night, and departs, leaving only a glass slipper behind.

More interested in her body and not in her mind, the prince seeks out Cinderella through the glass slipper alone, as women line up to fit themselves into it. Cinderellaâs two step-sisters mutilate their feet, which is something the beauty industry encourages women to do to feel beautiful.

Team Obama is spending $737 million to create 45 permanent jobs. The Hill reported, via Free Republic:

The Energy Department announced Wednesday that it has finalized a $737 million loan guarantee for a Nevada solar project.

The decision comes several weeks after a California-based solar manufacturer that received a $535 million loan guarantee from the Obama administration in 2009 filed for bankruptcy and laid off 1,100 workers, setting off a firestorm in Washington.

The $737 million loan guarantee will help finance construction of the Crescent Dunes Solar Energy Project, a 110-megawatt solar-power-generating facility in Nye County, Nev. The project is sponsored by Tonopah Solar, a subsidiary of California-based SolarReserve.

Crescent Dunes is the latest solar project to receive a loan guarantee from the Energy Department in recent weeks. The department announced a $1.2 billion loan guarantee to Abengoa Solar for a solar generation project in California and a $150 million loan guarantee to 1366 Technologies for a Massachusetts solar manufacturing project earlier this month.

The Energy Department says the project will result in 600 construction jobs and 45 permanent jobs.

Nancy Pelosi is facing accusations of cronyism after a solar energy project, which her brother-in-law has a stake in, landed a $737 million loan guarantee from the Department of Energy, despite the growing Solyndra scandal.

The massive loan agreement is raising new concerns about the use of taxpayers' money as vast sums are invested in technology similar to that of the doomed energy project.

The investment has intensified the debate over the effectiveness of solar energy as a major power source.

The SolarReserve project is backed by an energy investment fund where the Minority Leader's brother-in-law Ronald Pelosi is second in command.

PCG Clean Energy & Technology Fund (East) LLC is listed as one of the investors in the project that has been given the staggering loan, which even dwarfs that given to failed company Solyndra.

Other investors include one of the major investors in Solyndra, which is run by one of the directors of Solyndra.

Steve Mitchell, who served on the board of directors at the bankrupt energy company, is also managing director of Argonaut Private Equity, which has invested in the latest project.

Since Solyndra has filed for bankruptcy has been asked to testify about the goings on at the firm by two members of the House and 'asked to provide documents to Congress'.

The artist's impression shows the incredible size of the giant solar power plant, which is being bankrolled by President Obama's green jobs fund.

Energy will be generated using concentrated solar power technology, in which a series of mirrors direct sunlight to a receiver at the centre of the plant.

The 'solar tower' in the middle, which will be taller than the Washington Monument, is the first of its kind to be built.

Stretching out across a plain in Tonopah, Nevada, the mind-bogglingly big project will generate enough electricity to power 43,000 homes.

But the joint announcement by Energy Secretary Steven Chu comes just two days after the doomed Solyndra project, which cost the taxpayer $528 million from the same cash pot, was meant to be completed.

IS SOLAR ENERGY VIABLE?

The loan agreement comes as questions are raised about the effectiveness of solar power as a major energy source.

Although solar energy plants are typically comparatively cheap to operate, they are extremely expensive to build.

The proposed Nevada plant, which will provide power for 43,000 homes, is receiving a $737 million taxpayer loan, as well as private investment.

The low amounts of power generated by solar energy plants has also been criticised. To replace existing energy sources with solar plants would take up large amounts of land and cost vast amounts of money.

The project approval came as part of $1 billion in new loans to green energy companies yesterday.

Republican critics of the President Obama's solar energy program have voiced their outrage at the new loans while the Solyndra scandal is still being investigated.

They have raised concerns that the Department of Energy is rushing through the approval of loans before stimulus funds expire on Friday.

While the department insists the projects are being properly vetted, some lawmakers have written to express concern that the vast loans are not being adequately scrutinised.

'The administration's flagship project Solyndra is bankrupt and being investigated by the FBI, the promised jobs never materialised, and now the Department of Energy is preparing to rush out nearly $5 billion in loans in the final 48 hours before stimulus funds expire - that's nearly $105 million every hour that must be finalised until the deadline,' said Florida representative Cliff Stearns, who is chairman of the investigations subcommittee of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Tom Schatz, president of Washington-based advocacy group Citizens Against Government Waste, said: 'It is time for a full audit of their activities, their management and their results.'

'Candidly, it might be time for the federal government to rethink the whole idea of loan programs.'

Energy Department spokesman Damien LaVera said the project, which has had extensive reviews that included scrutiny of the parent companies' finances.

Investigation: Solyndra CEO Brian Harrison and Chief Financial Officer Bill Stover are sworn in at a House Oversight and Investigations subcommittee hearing

SOLYNDRA PLANT'S SPA SHOWERS AND DISNEY WHISTLING ROBOTS

The shocking scale of spending Solyndra lavished on the factory it started building alongside Interstate 880 in Fremont, California, has been revealed.

When it was completed at an estimated cost of $733 million, including proceeds from the company's $535 million U.S. loan guarantee, it covered 300,000 sq ft, the equivalent of five football fields.

It had robots that whistled Disney tunes, spa-like showers with liquid-crystal displays of the water temperature, and glass-walled conference rooms.

John Pierce, 54, a San Jose resident who worked as a facilities manager at Solyndra, said: 'The new building is like the Taj Mahal.'

Designed to make far more solar panels than Solyndra got orders for, the site is now empty and U.S. taxpayers may be stuck with it.

Solyndra filed for bankruptcy protection on September 6, leaving in its wake investigations by Congress and the FBI.

Mr Chu said the two projects will create about 900 construction jobs and at least 52 permanent jobs.

He added: 'If we want to be a player in the global clean energy race, we must continue to invest in innovative technologies that enable commercial-scale deployment of clean, renewable power like solar.'

The 110-megawatt Crescent Dunes project will use the sun's heat to create steam that drives a turbine, SolarReserve, which is based in Santa Monica, California.

Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid is a strong supporter of the Nevada project, which he says will help his state's economy recover. Former Governor Jim Gibbons, a Republican, also supported the project.

Mr Pelosi is one of several controversial figures set to benefit from the huge loan agreement.

The loan approvals came just two days before the renewable energy loan program approved under the 2009 economic stimulus law is set to expire. At least seven projects worth more than $5 billion are also waiting to be approved.

California-based solar panel maker Solyndra Inc went bankrupt after receiving its money and laid off 1,100 workers. The firm is now under investigation by the FBI.

It was the first renewable-energy company to receive a loan guarantee under a stimulus-law program to encourage green energy and was frequently touted by the Obama administration as a model.

President Barack Obama visited the company's Silicon Valley headquarters last year, and Vice President Joe Biden spoke by satellite at its groundbreaking ceremony.

Since then, the company's failure has become an embarrassment for Obama.

Nut Scott Crider, a spokesman for Sempra Generation, a Sempra Energy subsidiary that is developing the Arizona project, said its loan guarantee was not as risky as the Solyndra loan.

Most important, the project has a 20-year agreement with Pacific Gas & Electric Co. to buy power supplied by the solar plant, he said

Mr Crider claimed the purchase agreement is a key element of the project and will 'provide assurance that there are sufficient revenues in place to support the loan guarantee'.

A similar agreement is in place in Nevada. NV Energy, the state's largest electric utility, has agreed to buy power from the Tonopah tower, which will connect to NV Energy's power grid.

Investigators from the District of Columbia U.S. Attorney's Office recently interviewed former FBI director James Comey as part of a probe into whether his deputy, Andrew McCabe, broke the law by lying to federal agents - an indication the office is seriously considering whether McCabe should be charged with a crime, a person familiar with the matter said.

Justice Department Inspector General Michael Horowitz accused McCabe in April of misleading investigators and Comey four times - three of them under oath - about authorizing a disclosure to the media. Horowitz referred the findings to the District's U.S. Attorney's Office to determine whether criminal charges were warranted.

Lying to federal investigators can carry a five-year prison sentence, though McCabe disputes that he intentionally misled anyone. Comey's interview, while significant, does not indicate prosecutors have reached any conclusions, and people familiar with the process said it is not surprising given the allegations McCabe faces. A referral from the inspector general does not guarantee charges will be filed.

Michael Bromwich, McCabe's lawyer, said in a statement: "A little more than a month ago, we confirmed that we had been advised that a criminal referral to the U.S. Attorney's Office had been made regarding Mr. McCabe. We said at that time that we were confident that, unless there is inappropriate pressure from high levels of the Administration, the U.S. Attorney's Office would conclude that it should decline to prosecute. Our view has not changed."

He added that "leaks concerning specific investigative steps the US Attorney's Office has allegedly taken are extremely disturbing."

A Justice Department spokeswoman and a lawyer for Comey declined to comment.

Even before the allegations against him, McCabe had become a lightning rod in the political battles over the FBI and special counsel Robert Mueller III's probe of Russian interference in the 2016 election. President Donald Trump has frequently attacked the FBI's former No. 2 official, largely over political donations his wife took from an ally of Hillary Clinton when she ran for a seat in the Virginia legislature. McCabe was fired in March.

The U.S. attorney's investigation into McCabe is likely to intensify partisan squabbling, pitting respected law enforcement leaders against one another and potentially giving Trump ammunition to attack.

McCabe and Comey are at odds over the inspector general's findings. McCabe asserts that Comey knew he authorized the media disclosure, and Comey claims otherwise. Comey has said he "could well be a witness" against McCabe if McCabe were ever charged and tried.

McCabe also is somewhat at odds with Justice Department leaders.

He oversaw an investigation, which now seems to have concluded, into whether Attorney General Jeff Sessions lied to Congress about his contacts with Russians. He also kept notes detailing an interaction with Sessions' top deputy, Rod Rosenstein, that raise questions about a memo Rosenstein wrote justifying Comey's firing.

Rosenstein's memo took aim at Comey for his handling of the investigation into Clinton's use of a private email server while secretary of state. McCabe's notes, though, suggest Trump told Rosenstein before he authored the memo to mention Russia - though it was unclear in what respect, according to a person familiar with the matter.

The contents of the memo, which ultimately did not mention Russia, were first reported by the New York Times on Wednesday night. Bromwich suggested in his statement that the Times report might have motivated a disclosure of Comey's interview.

"We think it is no coincidence that these leaks follow within 24 hours of media stories - based on other leaks whose source is unknown to us - about memos written by Mr. McCabe that suggest potential criminal conduct by the President," Bromwich said. "We will be demanding a leaks investigation."

McCabe's interactions with Rosenstein could complicate any potential prosecution of McCabe because Rosenstein would likely be involved in a final decision on filing charges. McCabe has argued that the Justice Department's actions against him, including his firing, are retaliatory for his work on the Russia investigation.

Mueller is investigating Comey's firing as part of his examination into whether Trump obstructed justice, and Rosenstein is supervising Mueller's probe. The president has said publicly that the Russia case was on his mind when he fired Comey, though he tweeted Thursday that he "never fired James Comey because of Russia!"

Sessions fired McCabe from the bureau just 26 hours before he could retire, based on the inspector general's findings and a recommendation from the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility.

The next morning, Trump took to Twitter to celebrate the move.

"Andrew McCabe FIRED, a great day for the hard working men and women of the FBI - A great day for Democracy," he wrote. "Sanctimonious James Comey was his boss and made McCabe look like a choirboy. He knew all about the lies and corruption going on at the highest levels of the FBI!"

By the inspector general's telling, in seeking to advance his own interests, McCabe authorized two FBI officials to talk to the Wall Street Journal about a story he believed would cast him as standing in the way of a probe of Hillary Clinton's foundation. Then, according to the inspector general, McCabe misled Comey and FBI and inspector general investigators about having done so.

The October 2016 story offered a detailed look at debates inside the Justice Department and FBI over two Clinton-related probes - the examination of her private email server and the separate case involving the foundation. It notably confirmed the existence of the foundation investigation and described an episode in which McCabe pushed back against a Justice Department official whom he perceived to be suggesting the FBI shut it down.

Comey and McCabe offered varying accounts of who authorized the disclosure for the article. They discussed the story the day after it was published, and Comey, according to the inspector general's report, told investigators McCabe "definitely did not tell me that he authorized" the disclosure.

"I have a strong impression he conveyed to me, 'It wasn't me, boss.' And I don't think that was by saying those words; I think it was most likely by saying, 'I don't know how this s--- gets in the media or why would people talk about this kind of thing,' words that I would fairly take as 'I, Andy, didn't do it,' " Comey said, according to the inspector general.

McCabe has countered that emails between the two "clearly show that Mr. McCabe specifically advised Director Comey that he was working with colleagues at the FBI to correct inaccuracies in the story before it was published, and that they remained in contact through the weekend while the work was taking place." Those emails, though, were in reference to a different Wall Street Journal story about donations McCabe's wife had received from a political action committee controlled by Terry McAuliffe, a Clinton ally, McCabe's lawyer has acknowledged. The inspector general ultimately credited Comey's account.

Lying to Comey might not itself be a crime. But the inspector general alleged McCabe misled investigators three other times.

He told agents from the FBI inspection division on May 9, 2017, that he had not authorized the disclosure and did not know who had, the inspector general alleged. McCabe similarly told inspector general investigators on July 28 that he was not aware of one of the FBI officials, lawyer Lisa Page, having been authorized to speak to reporters, and because he was not in Washington on the days she did so, he could not say what she was doing. McCabe later admitted he authorized Page to talk to reporters.

The inspector general also alleged that McCabe lied in a final conversation in November, claiming that he had told Comey he had authorized the disclosure and that he had not claimed otherwise to inspection division agents in May.

Bromwich has said previously that McCabe's statements are "properly understood as the result of misunderstanding, miscommunication, and honest failures of recollection based on the swirl of events around him, statements which he subsequently corrected." He has also blasted McCabe's treatment and asserted that the inspector general did not detail "any understandable motive for his alleged wrongdoing."

DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSIONAL CANDIDATE INDICTED FOR FRAUD AND THEFT

| BY BRIAN ANDERSON

The democrats plan to retake the House in 2018 just took another hit. Theyâve already lost some of their âtop-tierâ challengers to the pervalanche and now one of their rising stars in Virginia is looking at a federal fraud indictment. Donât worry though, this particular candidate is black and she assures us that this is a matter of racial discrimination.

Democrat Shaun Brown is running against Republican incumbent Scott Taylor for Virginiaâs 2nd Congressional district seat. Sure, she ran against him in 2016 and lost by 23 points, but this time sheâs has a campaign with much better financing. More on that in a second.

The Daily Press reports however, that her 2018 campaign may have a few problems. A federal grand jury indicted her on charges of fraud and theft of government property. It seems that she runs a program with her mother that feeds children and/or steals money from the federal government:

The indictment alleges that Brown and others with JOBS Community Outreach Development Corp. filed fraudulent claims with the Summer Food Service Program in 2012, the U.S. Attorneyâs Office for the Eastern District of Virginia said.

The indictment says that Brown directed JOBS staff to inflate the number of children actually fed and to falsify documents in order to obtain additional money, according to the U.S. Attorneyâs Office.

She has been charged with wire fraud and theft of government property, and faces a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison if convicted.

For her part, Brown says that the USDA is discriminating against her and her mother, presumably because they are black. She has filed a $10 million lawsuit against the government agency and her biggest piece of proof the feds are involved in racism is because they wouldnât reimburse her when she spent $625,000 to purchase a restaurant. Those racist bastards!

Actually the USDA had listed Brownâs organization as a âhigh risk auditeeâ because even a bloated government bureaucracy recognizes bullshit when they see it.

Brownâs lawyer thinks the federal indictment is retaliation for her lawsuit against the USDA, calling the timing of the charges âunusual.â âAnd why would they do this right before Christmas?â asked the lawyer.

Yeah, because everyone gets a free pass for fraud and theft over Christmas, right? Is Brown and her lawyer accusing the government of being a part of the war on Christmas over these indictments? Actually, thatâs smart. If the race card doesnât work, they can always play the religion card, though it would be more effective if she were a Muslim.

Back to Brownâs campaign to steal a House seat away from the Republicans. In her FEC filing it shows that she had raised $713,491 by the end of October. Thatâs not bad, but it turns out only $2,750 came from outside sources and the rest was from her. Yup, she gave herself $710,741. Gee, I wonder where that money came from. Even stranger is that her campaign reports no cash on hand. I have a feeling there may be even more indictments headed Brown's way.

Brown is actually the perfect democrat. She's really good at taking other people's money and wasting it on bullshit and she blames all of her self-inflicted problems on discrimination. If she can beat the federal charges and overcome a 23-point hole, she should be a welcomed asset to the Democratic Party.

DEMOCRATS PUBLISH BOOK THAT PROMOTES RIOTS AND VIOLENCE

Antifa activists in Germany have published a booklet that instructs and encourages their supporters to become â riot touristsâ in Germany by violently attacking political party offices and war memorials, and by setting automobiles on fire.

Their American counterparts are slightly ahead of them. The new German publication comes in the wake of Antifa professor Mark Brayâ s book last year titled Antifa: The Anti-Fascist Handbook.

Antifaâ s violence: â Preemptive Self-Defense.â

Bray was a lecturer at Dartmouth College who describes himself as â a political organizer and historian of human rights, terrorism, and political radicalism in Modern Europe.â He is also the author of the 2013 book, Translating Anarchy: The Anarchism of Occupy Wall Street, and was a spokesman for the Occupy Wall Street movement in 2011. Last year on C-SPAN he justified Antifaâ s violence by labeling it â preemptive self-defense.â

Brayâ s school did not stand behind him, an anomaly in this era of political correctness. Dartmouth President Philip J. Hanlon condemned Bray on Aug. 21, 2017, for â supporting violent protestâ which was â contrary to Dartmouth values.â Bray is now a Professor of Comparative Education in the Comparative Education Research Centre at the University of Hong Kong.

In Germany, â Augsburg for Riot Touristsâ was published in time for the May convention in Augsburg conducted by Alternative for Germany (AfD), the second-largest party in Germany.

â The 44-page booklet was posted to the notorious Indymedia web platform that previously hosted the now-banned Linksunten website, which also posted tutorials on sabotage and other acts of terror and violence following last yearâ s riots at the G20 meeting in Hamburg,â Breitbart News reported.

In the booklet and on its website, the German Antifa group urged â a revolt against the German collective on the occasion of the AfD party conference in Augsburg.â

ANTIFA: Revolutionary communist-anarchist militia movement that aspires to forcibly overthrow the United States government

“Not only do we want to fight the AfD, we also want to direct our riot against every war memorial, against every repressive authority of the state, against every party bureau of a racist party, against any collaborator of a resurgent fascism,” the group stated.

On their website, German Antifa explain how “to make paint bombs with traditional Christmas baubles and glass bottles, create traps for cars by laying down planks of wood with nails sticking out of them, and how to set cars on fire.”

“We wish you a lot of fun trying them out,” the website states. Targeting “collaborators” such as police stations, army barracks, and a public library, is also encouraged.

The instructions for violence are credited to “Prisma”, a notorious far-left terror manual that calls on extremists to commit violence and shows detailed diagrams on building firebombs, sabotaging infrastructure, and avoiding police. The blog site also provides direct links to the Prisma terror document.

The U.S.-based Antifa movement, which has been described as a revolutionary communist-anarchist militia movement that aspires to forcibly overthrow the United States government, traces its roots to Weimar and Nazi Germany. (Capital Research Center produced a three-part documentary series, America Under Siege, about Antifa and other radical political actors.)

Despite the name, the movement embraces fascistic tactics

Antifa is not a single organization: it is a movement or coalition of leftist groups, each of which claims to combat “fascism,” a political ideology with a nebulous definition. The word Antifa itself is a truncation of anti-fascist.

Despite the name, the movement embraces fascistic tactics.

Antifa has gained new prominence in the post-Obama era. They trace their roots back to Nazi Germany when earlier iterations of their group battled Nazi stormtroopers in the streets. Like the stormtroopers, they also used violence to intimidate political opponents and break up meetings and rallies. Arguably, the ideological distance between Antifa and the now-defunct National Socialist German Workers’ Party or Nazi Party, is so slight it can be measured in millimeters.

Antifa activists are unashamed of their blood-soaked past and present. It was only a matter of time before they began publishing manuals on fomenting revolutionary violence.

The Politician Behind California High Speed Rail Now Says It's 'Almost a Crime'

Quentin Kopp convinced voters to approve the project. Now he's suing to kill it.

Justin Monticello |

High-speed rail lines began popping up in Europe and Asia in the early 1980s. Passengers were exhilarated by the futuristic trains rocketing between cities on glass-smooth rails at upwards of 200 miles per hour.

With high-profile roll-outs in France and Japan, bullet train mania was underway. And then reality set in.

"The costs of building such projects usually vastly outweigh the benefits," says Baruch Feigenbaum, assistant director of transportation policy at the Reason Foundation, the 501(c)(3) that publishes this website. "Rail is more of a nineteenth century technology [and] we don't have to go through these headaches and cost overruns to build a future transportation system."

Supporters, who claim that most high speed rail systems operate at a profit, use accounting tricks like leaving out construction costs and indirect subsidies. If you tabulate the full costs, only two systems in the world operate at a profit, and one breaks even.

But politicians can't resist the ribbon cutting ceremonies and imagery of sleek trains hurtling through the lush countryside. So the projects keep coming.

California's high speed rail line was sold to voters on the bold promise that it will someday whisk passengers between San Francisco and Los Angeles in under three hours. Nine years later, the project has turned into such a disaster that its biggest political champion is now suing to stop it.

An icon of California politics known as the "Great Dissenter," Quentin L. Kopp introduced the legislation that established the rail line, and became chairman of the High-Speed Rail Authority. He helped convince voters in 2008 to hand over \$9 billion in bonds to the Rail Authority to get the project going. Since he left, Kopp says the agency mangled his plans.

"It is foolish, and it is almost a crime to sell bonds and encumber the taxpayers of California at a time when this is no longer high-speed rail," says Kopp. "And the litigation, which is pending, will result, I am confident, in the termination of the High-Speed Rail Authority's deceiving plan."

Voters supported the bond measure to pay for construction on the condition that the train would be self-sustaining. But multiple outside analyses conclude that the Rail Authority will have to massively hike ticket prices or rely on taxpayer largess. According to one recent estimate, the project's latest iteration would suck up at least $100 million in annual subsidies.

Since 2008, lawsuits have multiplied, private investors have fled, and even the official price tag has nearly doubled, from $33 billion to $64 billion. When the legislature cleared the way for the Rail Authority to begin selling the voter-approved bonds in early 2017 to fund construction, the agency declared it a "milestone."

Kopp was livid.

"It's deceit. That's not a milestone, it's desperation, because High-Speed Rail Authority is out of money," Kopp told Reason.

Kopp joined a lawsuit brought by attorney Stuart Flashman, who has represented environmental and transportation groups in several previous actions against the Rail Authority. He aims to stop the project on the grounds that the agency broke numerous promises to voters enshrined in the 2008 ballot measure, including that all the financing for a segment had to be in place before construction could begin.

Feigenbaum believes that starting construction even though there isn't enough funding allocated to finish the project is a deliberate strategy: The Rail Authority intends to sink as much money into the project as possible, hoping to extract further taxpayer subsidies to complete it.

Kopp and Flashman still believe in high speed rail. They say it's just that this particular project has been hijacked by special interests.

Since rail projects are usually driven more by politics than consumer demand, however, nonsensical design decisions are common. That's true even in France and Japan, where a couple of the first high speed rail lines were actually profitable. After those lines were up and running, they built dozens more money-losing systems.

Flashman says the California project has also become a land grab, and the lawsuit is named for one of the farmers whose property was threatened. But this is typical of bullet trains. By design, high-speed rail lines require wide swaths of land, which often means seizing property. Feigenbaum points to a proposed rail project in Texas that might not be financially viable due to the large amounts of land that would need to be seized from ranchers.

As for the often-promised environmental benefits of high-speed rail, Flashman acknowledges they won't materialize in California. Rail lines around the world have failed to remove cars from the road, and according to Feigenbaum, the initial construction of the California line alone would release more greenhouse gases than the train could recoup in 80 years.

California's project will be both the slowest bullet train in the world and the most expensive. The Rail Authority cut costs by using track mixed with conventional rail, which means the train won't reach the speeds they promise. Coupled with a sinewy route that winds its way between endpoints, that means it will never go from Los Angeles to San Francisco in the promised 2 hours and 40 minutes.

The train, if it ever comes to pass, will also be competing with air travel at a time when a new generation of quiet supersonic planes is about to take flight. Autonomous vehicles will soon give passengers the same freedom to sleep, work, or read as train travelers. And then there's Elon Musk's plans for hyperloop pod transport in a near-vacuum tube at speeds up to 800 miles per hour.

"If government gets out of the way of deciding which transportation modes we need in the future," says Feigenbaum, "the private sector will do a much better job of innovating and creating profitable transportation modes that people want to use, instead of locking in a sub-optimal choice from the nineteenth century."

TY for this @obvious_throwaway1 !

I can't wait for this TREASONOUS, Kuntzy-Kike to reap what she has intentionally sown politically, and personally.

DIANNE FEINSTEIN'S HIT MAN

Daniel Jones is Dianne Feinstein's CIA-trained hit-man attack dog. He is sent out to target reporters and constituents that raise the ire of Ms. Feinstein. He hires Fusion GPS, Black Cube, Media Matters, Google, Gawker and other media assassins to destroy those who speak ill of the wicked witch of the West.

He has the eyes of Tony Perkin's in Alfred Hitchcock's film: Psycho. He has the haircut of an out-of-touch hipster. His latest shtick is as an apologist for the 9-11 terrorists that killed thousands of American's in the most horrific ways imaginable. You see, Daniel is very upset that the terrorists got caught and then the army threw cold water on them and they got chilly. Awwwww Poor Terrorists!

Let's compare the cold terrorist to the innocent workers that had to jump off the top of the World Trade Center, while on fire, and watch the ground rise up to crush them into pulp. You could also compare the chilly terrorist to the passengers in the jets who watched the ball of flame race down the central aisle of their jetliners and burn all of the skin off of them as they died in agony. The old World Trade Center was very tall and those who died had a comparatively long time to watch their own deaths.

Some people want the captured terrorists to get hauled up to the top of the new World Trade Center, set on fire, and get to go skydiving without a parachute. Daniel Jones wouldn't like that. He has a soft spot for those who kill American's in horrible ways.

Daniel uses his opposition research's CIA tools to kill American's every day. He puts their most shameful secrets on every online outlet, for decades, in order to end their lives simply because they said that Dianne Feinstein is corrupt. Why isn't Daniel in prison? Could he use a splash of cold water to shock him into the real world?

His perspective, as an extremist political zealot, is that he would give his life for Dianne and her crony cadre of stock market manipulators, as long as he could rationalize, like Hitler, that the ends justifies the means. Why hasn't Congress had an investigation of this guy?

Daniel J. Jones is a researcher and former intelligence analyst who heads the advocacy organizations Democracy Integrity Project and Advance Democracy, and works as president of the Penn Quarter Group, an opposition research firm. Prior to taking those positions, he was a staffer for U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein (D-CA) and the Democratic staff of the Senate Intelligence Committee. [\[1\]](#)

Senate Republicans alleged that his organizations worked with controversial opposition research firm Fusion GPS and former British intelligence officer Christopher Steele, the operative who circulated a dossier of unverified allegations against then-candidate Donald Trump to media, politicians, and law enforcement after the 2016 election. [\[2\]](#)[\[3\]](#)

As a Senate Intelligence Committee staff member, Jones authored the "Senate Torture Report" that publicized CIA detention and interrogation techniques and has been used in the defense of accused terrorists. [\[4\]](#)

Jones is a graduate of Elizabethtown College in Pennsylvania and holds master's degrees in teaching from Johns Hopkins University and public policy from Harvard University. [\[5\]](#) He participated in the Teach for America program before joining the FBI as an international intelligence analyst in 2003. [\[6\]](#)

Senate Intelligence Committee

In 2007, Jones joined the U.S. Senate Intelligence Committee staff of Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-CA).

Jones led the Senate Intelligence Committee staff team behind the creation of the "Senate Torture Report," which publicized CIA detention and interrogation practices during the War on Terror. [\[7\]](#) Many of the report's findings were disputed by the CIA and other intelligence agencies, and its release was controversial because of the value the information it contained could potentially provide to terrorist organizations and other enemies of the United States. [\[8\]](#)

The report was published in December 2014 by the Senate's Democratic leadership as one of their last actions before a Republican majority took control in 2015. In doing so, the Senate rejected a request from Obama administration Secretary of State John Kerry to delay the release out of concerns it would harm diplomatic efforts to build an international coalition against the ISIS Islamist terrorist network. [\[9\]](#)

Alka Pradhan, an attorney defending accused 9/11 terrorist attack planner Ammar al-Baluchi, has said that she will "forever be grateful" to Jones for the information released in the Torture Report. [\[10\]](#) [\[11\]](#) She said the information regarding CIA practices was "gold" for al-Baluchi's defense. [\[12\]](#)

The government charged Al-Baluchi (born Abd Al Aziz Ali) with allegedly managing the travel plans and finances that delivered at least 13 of the 9/11 hijackers to the U.S., as well as later acting as a courier for Al Qaeda terrorist organization leader Osama bin Laden. [\[13\]](#)

The Report (Film)

The 2019 film The Report tells a fictionalized story of the creation of the torture report and positions Jones, as portrayed by actor Adam Driver, as a hero. [\[14\]](#) The film premiered at what the Hollywood Reporter characterized as a "politics-heavy" 2019 Sundance Film Festival, alongside movies celebrating U.S. Rep. Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez (D-N.Y.) and "Dreamer" immigrants. [\[15\]](#) The film was created by DNC Feinstein advocates.

Penn Quarter Group

After leaving the Senate, Jones spent a year working for the lobbying firm of former Senate Majority Leader (and board chair of the Center for American Progress think tank) Tom Daschle (D-SD) before founding the Penn Quarter Group. [\[16\]](#)

According to a report by House Intelligence Committee Republicans, Jones described Penn Quarter to the FBI in 2017 as “exposing foreign influence in Western elections,” and told FBI agents that it “was being funded by 7 to 10 wealthy donors located primarily in New York and California, who provided approximately $50 million.” [\[17\]](#)

According to Senator Charles Grassley (R-IA), Jones told the FBI that Penn Quarter had secured the services of Christopher Steele and controversial opposition research firm Fusion GPS to “continue exposing Russian interference in the 2016 U.S. Presidential election.” Grassley alleged that Jones planned to send information generated by Steele and Fusion GPS to Congress and the media. [\[18\]](#)

In sworn testimony, former Trump campaign aide Michael Caputo would later accuse Penn Quarter of feeding false information to Jones’s former Senate Intelligence Committee colleagues, claiming that the resulting investigations forced Caputo to incur significant legal bills and receive death threats to himself and his family, even though Caputo was never charged with any wrongdoing. [\[19\]](#)

Even after the Mueller Report found no evidence that the Trump campaign engaged in any criminal conspiracy with Russian interests, Jones continued to promote theories regarding the 2016 election to national media based on information allegedly uncovered by his researchers at Penn Quarter. [\[20\]\[21\]](#)

Democracy Integrity Project

For more information, see Democracy Integrity Project (Nonprofit)

In 2017, Jones founded the Democracy Integrity Project as a 501(c)(4) advocacy group. [\[22\]](#) Funded by a range of left-wing donors, including liberal financier George Soros, the organization promotes left-wing narratives around foreign interference in the 2016 U.S. presidential election and other elections around the world. [\[23\]](#) A spokesperson for Soros confirmed to the Washington Post that the Democracy Integrity Project “used Fusion GPS as a contractor.” [\[24\]](#)

In its 2018 tax filings, the Democracy Integrity Project reported paying more than $3.3 million to Fusion GPS’s parent company Bean LLC and more than $250,000 to a UK-based company at which Christopher Steele is a director for “research consulting.” [\[25\]](#) [\[26\]](#) [\[27\]](#) It also paid almost $150,000 to Istok Associates, a UK-based firm run by Neil Barnett, who claims that Russia interfered with the UK’s Brexit election. [\[28\]\[29\]](#)

Advance Democracy

In January 2018, Jones also launched Advance Democracy, a 501(c)(3) charity. [\[30\]](#) This organization has not yet publicly filed any financial reports, but is also active in alleging continued Russian election interference: The New York Times reported that it had “flagged a number of suspicious websites and social media accounts” to authorities as promoting Russian interference in the 2019 European Parliament elections. DID THE DNC GO TOO FAR?

Paraphrasing Cato: The Democratic Party Must Be Destroyed

By Peter Skurkiss

Prior to the Third Punic War against Carthage in the 2nd Century BC, Cato the Elder was said to have ended all his speeches in the Roman senate by saying, "Carthage must be destroyed." Notice, Cato did not say 'defeated' but 'destroyed.' What do you suppose motivated this distinguish statesman to take such an extreme position? It was that in the Second Punic War (218 to 201 BC), Rome came close to losing to the Carthaginians. In that war, Rome suffered a number of severe battlefield defeats at the hands of Hannibal's army, most notable being the Battle of Cannae, the worse Roman defeat in history. To Cato, Carthage, although defeated in the Second Punic War, was still a threat to the Republic of Rome.

Let's move ahead in time. Today we see the depravity and anti-Americanism that is prevalent in today's Democratic Party is literally putting our constitutional republic at risk. Do you think that's an exaggeration? Let's take a look.

On social issues, the Democrats are the leading force of moral decay in America. They are the champion of such perverse things as unrestricted abortion, homosexual marriage, transgenderism, racial strife, and a God-hating form of radical secularism. They corrupt every institution in the U.S. with these 'novel' concepts from our schools to the military and everything in between. The one thing these initiatives all have in common is that they rot out the foundation of the Republic and undermine the family.

When it comes to economic matters, Democratic policies suffocate growth through regulations, high taxes, and crony capitalism. In the party's view, personal self-sufficiency, independence, and holding a traditional family together are sins, while dependency on government is a virtue. Judging by their behavior, the only growth the Democrats applaud and work towards is growth in government, growth in the welfare rolls, and growth in the influx of Third-World immigrants into the country.

Immigration deserves a special comment. As is often correctly said, demographics is destiny. Look at the quantity and quality of the type of immigration that the Democrats push for. To the Democrats whose creed is 'diversity is strength,' America will be worthy only when its composition mirrors that of the United Nations. If such a suicidal attitude prevails, then the United States as we know it is gone. Do the Democrats care? If they do, it is only that the transformation isn't happening fast enough.

As for the rule of law, the Democrats have no respect for it save for those instances where it might serve their purpose. And this lawless attitude is not reserved merely for Democratic politicians but extends to the would-be philosopher kings the Democrats want as judges. A man like the late Anthony Scalia who interprets the law as it is written (as is prescribed in the Constitution), is an anathema to Democrats. Judges like Scalia limit unconstitutional behavior. Democrats, on the other hand, want judges who turn the written law into loosey-goosey tools to remake the country according to their whims. When it comes to the corruption of legislating from the bench, the Democrats have been highly successful, due to an always complicit media and far too often a complacent Republican Party.

In past presidential races since the 1980s, the only election results Democrats accepted as legitimate are the elections they win. To the Democrats, the presidencies of George W. Bush and Donald Trump were illegitimate. And the Democrats acted accordingly to the detriment of the country. This erodes the foundation of our electoral process which bodes ill for the nation.

And what we are seeing today is an unprecedented example of Democrat lawlessness. Their operatives at high levels in the FBI, the Justice Department, and some intelligence agencies actually worked to derail the presidential campaign of Donald Trump and then continued to try to overturn the election results after he won. This is a staggering development that is now being exposed.

Since the takeover of the Democrat Party by the McGovernites in the early 1970s, the Democrats have steadily drifted from the liberalism of Harry Truman and JFK to the dark leftwing darkness of Barack Obama, Nancy Pelosi, Harry Reid, Hillary Clinton and the rest. When in power, the Democrats are oppressors. Think of the abuses of the IRS, the EPA, and the FBI. When out of power, Democrats are energized as hateful antagonists to anyone who disagrees with them. You object to open borders, you're a racist. You criticize Hillary Clinton, you're a sexist. You think marriage should be only between man and a woman, you're a hate-filled homophobe. You believe in the God of the Bible, you're a fanatic akin to Muslim terrorists. It has even gotten to the point that if you're white, you're a closet racist... at best.

The right way to view the Democrats is that they are the running dogs of the Left. And so there's no mistake of what I mean, a 'running dog' is a literal translation from Chinese to mean lackey or lapdog, an unprincipled person who helps or flatters a person more powerful, often evil. In Chinese, no idiomatic expression is more demeaning than the term 'running dogs.'

Given the state of the Democratic Party, wouldn't be nice if Republican candidates ended their speeches and echoed Cato by saying, "The Democratic Party must be destroyed?" Of course, it is not necessary to actually say such a thing... but the sentiment that "The Democratic Party must be destroyed" should be etched in the heart and mind of any Republican seeking office. Republicans who strive to 'work with' Democrats on an ongoing basis are on a fool's errand. They clearly do not understand the nature of their enemy they're dealing with.

In closing, note that Rome won the Third Punic War and totally destroyed Carthage. So there's hope. Good gracious almighty, some might say, what would the country do without a second party? Let the Republican party split in two. Or let a new party arise like the GOP did in the 1850s. In any event, the only parties of national scope that should be tolerated are ones devoted to the Constitution and the rule of law.

DNC Insider Democrat Found Guilty on All Charges in Fraud Trial

Texas state Sen. Carlos Uresti (D.) was found guilty on all charges in federal court Thursday in a criminal fraud trial concerning his connection with a now-defunct oilfield company that perpetrated a Ponzi scheme against its investors.

It took the 12 jurors about 11 hours to reach a guilty verdict, the San Antonio Express-News reported.

Both Uresti, a San Antonio Democrat, and co-defendant Gary Cain are allowed to remain free on bond until sentencing, which is scheduled for June 25.

The jury found Uresti guilty on five counts of wire fraud, one count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud, two counts of securities fraud, one count of conspiracy to launder monetary instruments, one count of engaging in monetary transactions in property derived from specified unlawful activity, and one count of unregistered securities broker.

Each wire fraud and conspiracy to commit wire fraud charge carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison, as do each of the securities fraud charges and the unregistered securities broker count. The conspiracy to launder monetary instruments charge is punishable by up to 10 years in prison. Each count also carries a substantial fine.

A federal grand jury last year indicted Uresti on 11 felony charges in connection with his roles at the now-bankrupt oilfield services company FourWinds Logistics. Several of the company's leaders pleaded guilty to fraud charges before Uresti's case went to trial, the Texas Tribune noted. Federal prosecutors alleged that Uresti and his business partners created a Ponzi scheme involving the trade of frac sand, which is used in fracking to extract oil and gas.

Uresti, an attorney by trade, worked as general counsel for FourWinds and owned one percent of the company. The FBI raided his office in February 2017, before he was indicted in May.

Cain worked as a consultant to FourWinds.

DNC Lawyers Argue DNC Has Right to Pick Candidates in Back Rooms, in Secret!

Attorneys claim the words 'impartial' and 'evenhanded' as used in the DNC Charter can't be interpreted by a court of law. DNC wants Silicon Valley billionaires to decide who can run for office!

By Michael Sainato •

On April 28 the transcript was released from the most recent hearing at a federal court in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., on the lawsuit filed on behalf of Bernie Sanders supporters against the Democratic National Committee and former DNC chair Debbie Wasserman Schultz for rigging the Democratic primaries for Hillary Clinton. Throughout the hearing, lawyers representing the DNC and Debbie Wasserman Schultz double down on arguments confirming the disdain the Democratic establishment has toward Bernie Sanders supporters and any entity challenging the party's status quo.

Shortly into the hearing, DNC attorneys claim Article V, Section 4 of the DNC Charter stipulating that the DNC chair and their staff must ensure neutrality in the Democratic presidential primaries is a discretionary rule that it didn't need to adopt to begin with. Based on this assumption, DNC attorneys assert that the court cannot interpret, claim, or rule on anything associated with whether the DNC remains neutral in their presidential primaries.

The attorneys representing the DNC have previously argued that Sanders supporters knew the primaries were rigged, therefore annulling any potential accountability the DNC may have. In the latest hearing, they doubled down on this argument: "The Court would have to find that people who fervently supported Bernie Sanders and who purportedly didn't know that this favoritism was going on would have not given to Mr. Sanders, to Senator Sanders, if they had known that there was this purported favoritism."

Jared Beck, the attorney representing Sanders supporters in the class action lawsuit, retorted that the DNC Charter is not akin to political rhetoric a politician would use during a campaign, but rather an inherent and important part of democracy in America. The entire argument of the DNC in this lawsuit is to conflate the promises of a political candidate with those of an election arbiter bound to neutrality by the DNC Charter, and to claim that fraudulent inducement cannot ever be proven as the DNC attorneys allege, "I think there's an impossible showing of causation."

"People paid money in reliance on the understanding that the primary elections for the Democratic nominee nominating process in 2016 were fair and impartial," Beck said. "And that's not just a bedrock assumption that we would assume just by virtue of the fact that we live in a democracy, and we assume that our elections are run in a fair and impartial manner. But that's what the Democratic National Committee's own charter says. It says it in black and white. And they can't deny that. He added, Not only is it in the charter, but it was stated over and over again in the media by the Democratic National Committee's employees, including Congresswoman Wassermann Schultz, that they were, in fact, acting in compliance with the charter. And they said it again and again, and we've cited several instances of that in the case.

Later in the hearing, attorneys representing the DNC claim that the Democratic National Committee would be well within their rights to go into back rooms like they used to and smoke cigars and pick the candidate that way. By pushing the argument throughout the proceedings of this class action lawsuit, the Democratic National Committee is telling voters in a court of law that they see no enforceable obligation in having to run a fair and impartial primary election.

The DNC attorneys even go so far as to argue that the words impartial and evenhanded used in the DNC Charter can't be interpreted by a court of law. Beck retorted, I'm shocked to hear that we can't define what it means to be evenhanded and impartial. If that were the case, we couldn't have courts. I mean, that's what courts do every day, is decide disputes in an evenhanded and impartial manner.

money, of course that's different. But here, where you have a party that's saying, We're gonna, you know, choose our standard bearer, and we're gonna follow these general rules of the road, which we are voluntarily deciding, we could have -- and we could have voluntarily decided that, Look, we're gonna go into back rooms like they used to and smoke cigars and pick the candidate that way. That's not the way it was done. But they could have. And that would have also been their right, and it

Argument from DNC Attorney. US District Court

The judge then questioned the DNC lawyers about what the Democratic National Committee does and what it is responsible for and the DNC lawyers had trouble answering these questions. I am 90 percent on that, responded the DNC attorneys in response to a question as to whether the DNC funded State Primaries.

The judge ended the hearing by stating to both parties he would issue an written order on the DNC's motion to dismiss the lawsuit, though no specific timeframe was given as to when that decision may be handed down. If the class action lawsuit moves forward, it would entail a discovery process that would open up the inner workings of the Democratic Primaries and force figures like Wasserman Schultz to testify in court on their actions and decisions during the Democratic Primaries.

DNC TELLS PELOSI AND FEINSTEIN TO 'IGNORE THE NEGATIVES; JUST GET THE MEXICAN VOTES'

TRUE FACT: You want to talk about foreign interference in our elections? Illegal Aliens give California NINE extra electoral votes (because they are counted towards a state's number). This cancels out entire states!

It's not just California. Any State with a large number of Illegal Aliens is getting extra seats in the House and extra electoral votes, which ARE taken away from other States.

This is the one and only true reason the Left wants to give Illegals everything under the sun! VOTES!

Below are a couple of excerpts from 2 left leaning Mainstream Media sources about it. I case your Liberal friends need proof!

From CBS News: Illegal Immigration Affects Electoral Votes

The distribution of seats in the House is referred to as apportionment, which is based on states total population and includes illegal immigrants. A national census is taken every 10 years to apportion seats in the House, but as CIS reported, the Constitution offers no method for apportionment, nor a method for compiling total population for apportionment. Currently, the resident population includes illegal aliens.

Illegal immigration played a significant role in the redistribution of seats in the past. In 1990, 12 seats were redistributed, and in 2000, 16 seats were redistributed. Louisiana was one of the states adversely affected.

In 2000, four states either lost a seat or didnt gain a seat they otherwise would have, and five states had one seat fewer than it otherwise would have.

Five states actually gained seats because of illegal aliens. Nine redistributed seats went to California alone.

These non-citizens also change the landscape of the electoral map because the Electoral College is based on the size of congressional delegations.

The Federation for Immigration Reform (FAIR), which twice led unsuccessful campaigns to remove illegal immigrants from the process of apportionment, reported the 2004 election benefitted Kerry with a net gain of two Electoral College votes.

Though the results were insignificant in that particular race, the reapportionment of seats caused by illegal aliens has affected the past two presidential elections and will continue to do so in the future.

From POLITICO:

The distribution of these 435 seats is not static: they are reapportioned every ten years to reflect the population changes found in the census. That reallocation math is based on the relative whole number of persons in each state, as the formulation in the 14th Amendment has it. When this language was inserted into the U.S. Constitution, the concept of an illegal immigrant, as the term is defined today, had no meaning. Thus the census counts illegal immigrants and other noncitizens equally with citizens. Since the census is used to determine the number of House seats apportioned to each state, those states with large populations of illegal immigrants and other noncitizens gain extra seats in the House at the expense of states with fewer such whole number of persons.

This math gives strongly Democratic states an unfair edge in the Electoral College.

• RushLimboh 4 hours ago

The Virginia State Board of Elections regularly covers up how many non-citizens register to vote and vote. The democrats, Warner, Kaine, Beyer, etc., heartily applaud illegals voting! Non-citizens should be prosecuted and deported if they knowingly register and vote. It matters!! In 2005 we had a statewide election decided by 323 votes out of 970,886 (0.01663%) and in 2013 a statewide election decided by 907 votes out of 1,105,045 (0.0411%). Do the math.

In California alone, that is over 5 million illegal aliens counted in the census, who don't even have to vote, but add 9 electoral votes to far-left/liberal/progressive/democrat California during the Presidential election. Illegals also have driver's licenses in California, so that's all you need to prove residence and identity to vote in most counties!

DNC accused of 'corrupt' money laundering scheme in new FEC complaint

This is how the Dept. of Energy Cleantech payola also operated

Did Clinton break the law with 'takeover' of DNC?

One lawyer says the deal between the Clinton campaign and the DNC in August of 2015 - which essentially turned over control of the DNC to the Clinton campaign - was in violation of federal campaign finance law. #Tucker

A new legal complaint filed with the Federal Election Commission alleges that the Hillary Clinton campaign and the Democratic National Committee used state chapters as strawmen to circumvent campaign donation limits and laundered the money back to her campaign.

The Committee to Defend the President, a political action committee, filed its complaint with the FEC on Monday with the allegations that the Hillary Victory Fund (HVF) solicited cash from big-name donors, including Calvin Klein and âFamily Guyâ creator Seth MacFarlane -- money that was allegedly sent through state chapters and back to the DNC before ending up with the Clinton campaign.

Officials with the committee said their filing was spurred by their own analysis of FEC reports, where they said they discovered the HVF either never transferred the money to state chapters and back to the DNC, or did so without the state chapters having actual control.

âWhat we have found, people need to see,â Ted Harvey, chairman of the CDP which emerged from the now-defunct Stop Hillary PAC, told Fox News. âI think itâs important that the American public has an understanding of how corrupt this campaign system was and that they were doing anything they could to secure the nomination in her favor.â

In its complaint, the CDP alleges that about $84 million was funneled illegally from the DNC through state party chapters and back into the war chest of the Clinton campaign.

âApparently the DNCâs response to the [Supreme Court] ruling was, âHold my Beer.ââ

- Committee to Defend the President counsel Dan Backer

Based on publicly available FEC records, repeatedly throughout the 2016 presidential campaign, HVF would purportedly transfer funds to its constituent political committees, which included between 34 and 40 state parties, reads a passage from a copy of the complaint reviewed by Fox News. On the very same day each of these transfers supposedly occurred, or occasionally the very next day, every single one of those state parties purportedly contributed all of those funds to the DNC.

CDP counsel Dan Backer said the scheme was a flagrant violation of a Supreme Court ruling that determined such moves were illegal -- and broke FEC campaign contribution rules which state that an individual can contribute only $2,700 directly to a presidential campaign.

Apparently the DNC's response to the ruling was, "Hold my Beer," he said, referring to a phrase from an Internet meme. "These donations were specifically earmarked for the DNC and the campaign committee."

Backer continued, "It's not entirely clear if they transferred the money to the state parties to begin with, and if they never had control of the money, it's not a contribution. It's an earmark. If the money is in control of the candidate, then it is a contribution to them."

Backer reiterated a point from the complaint -- that the Supreme Court first recognized these practices were illegal when it ruled in a 2014 case involving Shaun McCutcheon, a businessman and electrical engineer from suburban Birmingham, Ala., who created the Conservative Action Fund PAC. McCutcheon filed suit against the FEC challenging federal campaign contribution limits. It was Backer who assisted in filing the suit.

"This is exactly the scenario that they said would occur," Backer says. "They were so brazen about it yet so sloppy."

The new complaint filed against the FEC said previous reports showed a series of transactions in which the HVF disbursed contributions to its state party committee members -- and they would receive the funds on the same day. The HVF would also allegedly disburse funds to up to 40 state parties at the same time, and those parties would send the money back within 24 hours.

"It appears virtually every single disbursement from HVF to a state party resulted in an immediate transfer of the same amount of funds from the state party to the DNC," reads another passage from the complaint. "Over 99% of funds transferred through HVF to state parties wound up at the DNC."

Officials for the DNC did not return requests for comment when contacted by Fox News.

The allegations seem to echo claims by former DNC chair Donna Brazile while promoting her book earlier this year.

In her 2017 book "Hacks," Brazile recounts how she saw the money being moved.

Individuals who had maxed out their $2,700 contribution limit to the campaign could write an additional check for $353,400 to the Hillary Victory Fund -- that figure represented $10,000 to each of the 32 states parties who were part of the Victory Fund agreement -- $320,000 and $33,400 to the DNC, reads a passage from the book. "The money would be deposited in the states first, and transferred to the DNC shortly after that. Money in the battleground states usually stayed in that state, but all the other states funneled that money directly to the DNC, which quickly transferred the money to [Clinton campaign headquarters in] Brooklyn.

Brazile took issue with this, saying that it signified the victory fund was going to Clinton before she received the nomination.

A DNC statement issued last month in response to her claims said: "Joint fundraising committees were created ... in attempt to raise the general election funds needed to win in 2016. Clinton was the only candidate who raised money for the party through her joint fundraising committee with the DNC, which would benefit any candidate coming out of the presidential primary process."

Backer says the committee hopes its findings will spur campaign finance reform and an investigation by the Department of Justice.

"It's really cut and dry," he says, "but it shouldn't matter that it was Hillary Clinton and the DNC that did this. The law was broken. It doesn't matter who did it."

DOCTORS FEAR THAT NANCY PELOSI MAY BE BRAIN DAMAGED FROM SEVERE ALCHOLISM

Pelosi repeatedly says incorrect words: â Commensurate â common senseâ , â Tax force â task forceâ

BY KYLE OLSON

Share568

Nancy Pelosiâ s ongoing bizarre behavior may be a key reason why many Democrats are refusing to support her for a potential future leadership position.

As the House Minority Leader spoke to reporters in Thursday, she repeatedly used the wrong word in sentences, awkwardly correcting herself so she was clear to the journalists.

Speaking about new gun control legislation, she said there is a â commensurate bi-partisan â common sense bi-partisan supp, uh, path forward.â

Moments later, she repeated words and mistakenly said â tax force,â before enunciating â task force.â

Pelosi fell back into previous talking points, nearly saying â comprehensive immigration billâ when talking about gun control.

â So weâ re just say to, weâ re just saying to the Speaker, â Give us a vote, just give us a vote,'â she repeated.

As Pelosi attempted to again slam the popular Trump tax cut, she botched the numbers created by the Democratic Party.

â Once the tax scam is fully phased in, 6 million middle class families â excuse me,â she said, staring at her notes. â 86 million middle class families,â she continued as reporters sat in silence.

Moments later she said Republicans are going to take â $500 billion out of Medicare. One-and-a-half â excuse me,â she stopped herself. â Trillion â half a trillion dollars out of Medicare,â she continued, apparently believing $500 billion and half-a-trillion are different numbers.

While talking about transparency in settlements with sex harassment victims, Pelosi said, â I donâ t want to herm â harm victimsâ lâ Condemning members of the Trump administration who are leaving, she said, â Theyâ re having served in that White House for one year is a giant enhancement as they go out to the public sector â private sector, the private sector,â she corrected herself.

If Pelosi wants to stay in leadership, she may have a tough road head.

During a recent candidate forum of Democrats vying for an Arizona congressional seat, not a single one raised their hand to indicate support for Pelosi.

Pelosi, or Skeletor as Mark Dice calls her, needs to retire. Her Alzheimers is breaking her down and everyone in DC knows it. That story about the meds was about her according to Jack Posobiec. But at the same time, even though I don't want to laugh at her, she is so damned funny.

Some here will say get out but on second thought, I'm with Trump when he said he wishes Nancy stays in leadership for a greaat many more years. She is 78 now, she could pull out another decade or so at least, we should all hope. If any of you forgot, since she became a leader of the Dems, they've lost over 1,000 seats across the nation.

The real problem for us all is the media. Fox going left wing lately (especially that puke Shep) leaves us only with One America News, which everyone here should try.

They are truly conservative. They're small yet with access to only 45 million Americans but growing strong. Same with Drudge vs Whatfinger News. Drudge lately has been filled with sex robots and fake news links, his conservative competitor is small but far superior. I bet you'd agree. Here - <http://www.whatfinger.com>

DOJâs Huber Nails Former DIA Agent; Arrested Enroute to China for Attempted Espionage

Ron Rockwell Hansen, 58, a resident of Syracuse, Utah, and a former Defense Intelligence Agency (DIA) officer, was arrested Saturday afternoon on federal charges including the attempted transmission of national defense information to the Peopleâs Republic of China. The FBI agents took Hansen into custody while he was on his way to Seattle-Tacoma International Airport in Seattle to board a connecting flight to China.

Assistant Attorney General for National Security John C. Demers, U.S. Attorney John Huber for the District of Utah, and Special Agent in Charge Eric Barnhart of the FBI's Salt Lake City Field Office announced the charges.

“Ron Rockwell Hansen is a former Defense Intelligence Agency officer who allegedly attempted to transmit national defense information to the People's Republic of China's intelligence service (PRCIS) and also allegedly received hundreds of thousands of dollars while illegally acting as an agent of China,” said Assistant Attorney General Demers. “His alleged actions are a betrayal of our nation's security and the American people and are an affront to his former intelligence community colleagues. Our intelligence professionals swear an oath to protect our country's most closely held secrets and the National Security Division will continue to relentlessly pursue justice against those who violate this oath.”

“These allegations are very troubling in their description of conduct that runs contrary to how we identify ourselves as Americans,” said U.S. Attorney Huber. “On the other hand, revealed details of this lengthy investigation reflect effective performance and dedication on the part of the men and women of the FBI and their partners.”

“The allegations in this complaint are grave as it appears Mr. Hansen engaged in behavior that betrayed his oath and his country,” said Special Agent in Charge Barnhart. “This case drives home the troubling reality of insider threats and that current and former clearance holders will be targeted by our adversaries. The FBI will aggressively investigate individuals who put our national security at risk.”

Hansen will have an initial appearance Monday, at 5 p.m. EDT in U.S. District Court in Seattle. He is charged in a 15-count complaint, signed by Chief Federal Magistrate Judge Paul M. Warner in Utah Saturday, with attempting to gather or deliver national defense information to aid a foreign government. The complaint also charges Hansen with acting as an unregistered foreign agent for China, bulk cash smuggling, structuring monetary transactions and smuggling goods from the United States.

According to court documents:

Hansen retired from the U.S. Army as a Warrant Officer with a background in signals intelligence and human intelligence. He speaks fluent Mandarin-Chinese and Russian. DIA hired Hansen as a civilian intelligence case officer in 2006. Hansen held a Top Secret clearance for many years, and signed several non-disclosure agreements during his tenure at DIA and as a government contractor.

Between 2013 and 2017, Hansen regularly traveled between the United States and China, attending military and intelligence conferences in the U.S. and provided the information he learned at the conferences to contacts in China associated with the PRCIS. Hansen received payments for this information by a variety of methods, including cash, wires and credit card transactions. He also improperly sold export-controlled technology to persons in China. From May of 2013 to the date of the complaint, Hansen received not less than $800,000 in funds originating from China.

In addition, Hansen repeatedly attempted to regain access to classified information after he stopped working on behalf of the U.S. Government. Hansen's alerting behavior ultimately resulted in the participation of a law enforcement source from whom Hansen solicited classified information. Hansen disclosed to the source his ongoing contact with the PRCIS, including in-person meetings with intelligence officers during his trips to China. Hansen told the source the types of information his contacts in China were interested in and discussed working with the source to provide such information to the PRCIS. Hansen suggested he and the source would be handsomely paid.

Complaints are not findings of guilt. An individual charged in a complaint is presumed innocent unless or until convicted of the crimes in court. Hansen faces a maximum penalty of life in prison, if convicted of attempted espionage. The maximum potential sentence in this case is prescribed by Congress and is provided here for informational purposes only, as any sentencing of the defendant will be determined by the assigned judge.

Special agents of the FBI, IRS, U.S Department of Commerce, the Department of Defense, U.S. Army Counterintelligence, and the Defense Intelligence Agency are involved in the investigation. U.S. Army Counterintelligence, the FBI Seattle Division, the IRS, the U.S. Department of Commerce, and the Weber County Sheriff's Office assisted in law enforcement operations Saturday in Utah and Seattle.

Assistant U.S. Attorneys Robert A. Lund, Mark K. Vincent and Karin Fojtik of the District of Utah, and Trial Attorneys Patrick T. Murphy and Adam L. Small of the National Security Division's Counterintelligence and Export Control Section are prosecuting the case. Prosecutors from the U.S. Attorney's Office for the Western District of Washington assisted with this case.

David Cameron thought Obama 'was one of the most narcissistic and self-absorbed people'

Despite their apparent bromance, David Cameron apparently thought Barack Obama was one of the "most narcissistic, self absorbed people" he had ever dealt with, Cameron's former strategy director is claiming.

Steve Hilton blasted the former US president for seemingly thinking he was "smarter" than everyone around him. Obama and Cameron were often pictured high-giving or playing golf together, but Hilton claims the former prime minister could not stand Obama's self absorption.

"My old boss, former British prime minister David Cameron, thought Obama was one of the most narcissistic, self-absorbed people he'd ever dealt with," Hilton claimed during an interview with Fox News.

Hilton continued: "Obama never listened to anyone, always thought he was smarter than every expert in the room, and treated every meeting as an opportunity to lecture everyone else.

"This led to real-world disasters, like Syria and the rise of Isis."

During the interview, Hilton also tore into "elitists" who criticise current US President Donald Trump and claim he is unfit to hold office.

"For them, it's all about style and tone, not substance and results. Donald Trump offends the elites aesthetically, like a piece of art that's not to their taste.

"They can afford to do that because they live in a world of booming neighbourhoods, delightful hipster eateries and everyone they know employed in the virtual world of the knowledge economy.

"They don't see what's going on in the actual economy. Whatever his mental state, [Trump] has achieved more for working Americans in one year than his predecessors did in eight, or 16, frankly."

Libyan intervention

Hilton's claims about Obama were immediately denied by a spokesman for Cameron who said they did not reflect his views. "This does not represent David Cameron's opinion at all and could not be further from the truth.

"David Cameron's view on President Obama â whether in public or in private â are the same: he considers Barack Obama a hugely accomplished president, a great partner for Britain and a good friend to our country and to him personally."

The two world leaders were believed to get along well while in office. Cameron once said of Obama: "Yes, he sometimes calls me bro."

MailOnline reported that the pair's special relationship deteriorated, with Obama criticising Cameron for his failure to do enough to intervene in Libya. Obama said the former Tory leader had been "distracted by a range of other things".

Meanwhile, Hilton and Cameron had a falling out during the EU referendum campaign after Hilton announced he was supporting Brexit.

Dead Men Tell No Tales in Broward County: 3 Whistleblowers Who Ended Up DEAD

Controversies arise regularly in Debbie Wasserman Schultz's 23rd district and those who seek justice sometimes meet an untimely demise.

Below are the stories of 3 men who dared challenge the establishment and soon after paid with their lives.

Beranton J. Whisenant Jr

Whisenant was a federal prosecutor that was murdered in 2017 while investigating voter fraud. Biz Pac Review reported:

A federal prosecutor from the U.S. attorney's office in Miami who happened to be investigating voter fraud has been found dead along a Hollywood Florida beach, and it's being investigated as a homicide.

According to Hollywood police spokeswoman Miranda Grossman, although the investigation is still very preliminary, a 37-year-old Beranton J. Whisenant Jr. likely suffered a head wound from a gunshot or other direct trauma. His body was found by a passerby washed up on the Hollywood beach shore south of Magnolia Terrace. It isn't clear where the victim actually died.

For now, the FBI's Miami office is referring all questions related to Whisenant's death to Hollywood police, but if the death is found to be retaliatory or related to a case Whisenant was working on, standard procedure would mean the FBI and U.S. attorney's office aggressively working together on the case.

News spread quickly on social media that Whisenant was involved in a recent fraud probe involving the DNC, though none of the news reports mentioned that as fact.

A graduate of the University of Florida law school, Whisenant has been a member of the Florida Bar since 2004, joining the U.S. attorney's office in January 2017 in the major crimes section.

His office happens to be in Congressman Debbie Wasserman Schultz's district.

Broward County Deputy Jason Fitzsimons

Deputy Jason Fitzsimmons was the first of two Broward County Deputies to question the politicizing of the Parkland shooting by Democrats. Both ended up dead, under intriguing and suspicious circumstances. Sunshine State News covered the story in April of this year:

Broward County Deputy Marshall Peterson

Another member of the Broward County Sheriff's Department, also believed to be in excellent health was found dead about 3 weeks later at his Mother's house. Newspunch has the story:

Let us not forget that Debbie Wasserman Schultz is not afraid to threaten law enforcement. She can be seen in this 2017 video threatening a police chief.

One thing is for certain.

Debbie Wasserman Shultz Supporting DNC Aligned LGBT Media Outlet Pushes Idea of a Gay Icon Prince George

Why Are The U.S. Democrats So Fanatically Into Young Children?

An article in the faggot news outlet PinkNews, called Prince George a gay icon after a picture surfaced of the four-year-old prince with his hands on his face in a helicopter in Germany last month.

After backlash and being branded as sick by a politician in Northern Ireland, PinkNews says the article was merely reporting on a large volume of social media posts and was not calling Prince George a gay icon itself.

Jim Allister, leader of the Traditional Unionist Voice (TUV) party in Northern Ireland, described the article as outrageous and sick. He called on PinkNews to immediately withdraw the misjudged article and apologize.

a Sexualizing a young child in this fashion is entirely inappropriate. In reality the photo which prompted the piece shows a four-year-old boy who is smartly dressed and excited about being on a helicopter with his male father and female mother.

a To take an image of a little boy and to fantasize of him being an icon for a life defined by sex is outrageous and sick.

The chief executive of PinkNews, Benjamin Cohen, told media that he has received no letter from Allister and no official complaint has been made.

â Iâ m surprised that Jim Allister is such an avid reader of PinkNews that he spotted a minor article from three weeks ago to complain about today,â Cohen said.

â At no point did PinkNews state that Prince George is a â gay iconâ â the article merely reported on a large number of social media posts saying that he was.

The article also explored what it means to be a gay icon and referenced other â gay iconsâ such as the singer Ariana Grande.â

He added: â Mr Allister also appeared to claim that being gay is a â life defined by sex.â This is an outrageous statement. I am gay and about to marry my fiancé, something Allister opposes, and I can certainly say my life is not defined by sex.â

Cohen said Allister has strongly opposed LGBT rights in his political career. He opposed the decriminalization of homosexuality and was the only member of the Northern Irish Assembly to oppose pardons of gay men convicted of offences that would not be crimes today.

â Allister is not an impartial commentator on this issue. He is a person with a long history of opposing the rights of LGBT people,â Cohen said.

The article reads:

â Prince George has become a gay icon overnight â at least, thatâ s what some people â sorry, his subjects â are saying on Twitter.

â The monarch-to-be has always been cute and well-dressed, but one day before his fourth birthday, a photo of him excitedly holding his face changed everything.

â The image of the prince expressing his happiness in this way led many to declare their support of George for a whole new position: gay icon.â

This is obviously an attempt at sexualizing an innocent child, pushing LGBT agenda and normalizing gayness in the conservative, monarchy loving community by associating faggotry with the UK royalty.

A Democratic congresswoman laced into Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi on Wednesday, suggesting the top House Democrat "set women back and quite frankly, our party back decades" by failing to more forcefully confront allegations of sexual harassment by veteran Democratic Rep. John Conyers.

Speaking to reporters at the Capitol, Rep. Kathleen Rice of New York said Pelosi's appearance on "Meet the Press" on Sunday "when she raised questions about the accounts of Conyers' accusers and described the Michigan Democrat as an icon" ceded the party's moral high ground on sexual harassment issues, especially because one of Conyers' accusers is bound by a nondisclosure agreement.

"I think that her comments on Sunday set women back and quite frankly, our party back decades," said Rice, who is advocating for legislation that would expose a slew of hidden, taxpayer-funded settlements for sexual harassment by lawmakers and aides.

Rice said Pelosi's comments were particularly egregious in light of President Donald Trump's tacit embrace of Roy Moore, the Alabama GOP Senate candidate accused of molesting a minor.

"I think that we ceded the moral high ground on Sunday when our leader said on 'Meet the Press' that John Conyers was an icon and we don't even know who these women are, when she was fully aware that the woman in question was bound by a nondisclosure agreement," Rice said. "I think we had an opportunity to stake that moral high ground when you have a president who is supporting a man for Senate who 'all credible allegations that have not been refuted' showed him to be a predator of teenage girls."

A Pelosi spokesman said Rice's comments were not an accurate portrayal of the minority leader's sentiment.

"The leader was very clear on Sunday that no matter how great an individual's legacy, it's not a license for harassment," said the spokesman, Drew Hammill.

Hammill also noted that Pelosi, in her "Meet the Press" interview, said she favored eliminating nondisclosure agreements that silenced victims from speaking out.

â [A]ll of these nondisclosure agreements have to go,â she told NBCâ s Chuck Todd in the interview. Since that interview, Hammill added, Pelosi has said she believes Conyersâ accusers and subsequently spoke to one of them about her story. She also has signaled support for legislation from Rep. Jackie Speier (D-Calif.) that would reform the system of harassment reporting in Congress to protect victims.

Rice was among of a group of Democrats who vocally opposed Pelosiâ s reelection as Democratic leader when the caucus voted after the November election to give Pelosi another term.

Riceâ s comments escalate her already pointed criticism of Pelosiâ s leadership â and of her Democratic colleagues, who she said earlier Wednesday were not confronting sexual harassment issues within their own ranks seriously enough. Sheâ s one of three Democratic lawmakers, along with Reps. Pramila Jayapal of Washington and Earl Blumenauer of Oregon, who have called for Conyers to resign immediately.

Rice left early Wednesday from a closed-door Democratic Caucus meeting and told reporters she bailed because she didn't think her colleagues were approaching the harassment issue seriously. A Democratic aide said Rice exited after Pelosi spoke about the issue and also missed at least a portion of the comments from eight Democratic lawmakers who addressed harassment issues.

"There was a lengthy discussion of sexual harassment policies and reforms needed," the aide said.

Democrat Party Chairman Streamed Live Videos of Horrific Sex Abuse

According to the testimony of a federal agent, Harold H.L. Moody, a former Democratic Party chairman, streamed live videos of children being raped, distributed child pornography to other pedophiles, and regularly smoked methamphetamine out of a glass pipe while seated at his desk during work hours.

Our tax dollars at work, folks.

Jason Bennett, a special agent for Homeland Security Investigations, said an undercover agent took screen shots of Moody sitting at his desk and chatting with pedophiles in a secret chatroom online on more than one occasion between Aug. 29 and Oct. 12.

Bennett described Moody as a high-volume user who logged in and out of a chat room solely devoted to child pornography several times a day, including 26 times in a two-day span. He was also a host of the private chat room, which Bennett explains indicates that Moody did something to receive such recognition.

Moody, 39, was arrested on Nov. 5 and fired from his job shortly thereafter. Agents searched and seized information from his Little Rock, Arkansas apartment and found two grams of methamphetamine and pornographic images of children and infants being raped. They also found a half-gram of the drug in his office desk drawer.

Moody was a political consultant hired by the county after acting as the communications director for the Democratic Party of Arkansas for a year and a half. Before that, he was the chairman of the Democratic Party in Pulaski County for two years.

Arkansas Online reports: Bennett's testimony helped convince a federal judge to order Moody to remain in federal custody until his trial on two counts of receipt of child pornography, three counts of distribution of child pornography and a single count of conspiring to advertise child pornography.

Chris Tarver, Moody's attorney from the federal public defender's office, tried to have him released on bail pending trial and possibly be released and committed to an in-patient drug-treatment facility.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Joe Volpe considered it, but rejected the proposal after Assistant U.S. Attorney Kristin Bryant's argument that Moody poses a risk of flight and could be a danger to the community.

Bryant explained that the agents were only able to find 15 images of child pornography on one of Moody's devices because his other devices were password-protected. She said, "we don't know if he's a producer of child pornography, and, I don't think we know how much of a danger to the community he is."

Bryant described the type of photographs and videos Moody allegedly distributed—images of infants and young children being raped. She pointed to the agent's testimony that Moody was initially observed viewing the images, then distributing them and eventually even hosting sessions in which people in a secure chatroom stream live videos of infants being raped.

Tarver argues that Moody's real problem is drug addiction. His partner, Gabriel Womack, said he broke off their engagement when he found methamphetamine in their apartment. Moody admitted to being an addict, has tried to stop, but can't. Tarver argues that, "This is a drug issue."

Democrats Abandoned The Working Class in Order To Use Immigration To Pump Nancy Pelosi's Goldman Sachs Stock Accounts

Debunking The â Immigrants Will Pay For Our Pensionsâ Myth

The Democrats used to be the party of the working class: they supported trade unions and believed in the welfare state. Their goal was to soften capitalismâs rougher edges, to humanize modern industrialism, and to give the common man a fair shake. One may disagree with their methods, but their goals were laudable and their beliefs sincere.

Fast forward to 2018. The Democrats are the party of the elites. Their new mantra is â open trade and open borders,â as Hillary Clinton told Wall Street bankers in a private speech. Remember, it was the Democrats who supported President Obamaâs Trans-Pacific Partnership, a â free tradeâ deal that wouldâve gutted American industries. And it is Democrats who currently oppose President Trumpâs attempts to stop illegal immigration, which hurts Americaâs poor.

The Democrats donât care about America. They care about winning elections.

At this point the chorus of â progressiveâ rhetoric reaches fever pitch: â but we need immigrants to support the welfare state,â they sayâ â we need immigrants to pay for our pensions and healthcare!â But saying does not make it so.

In truth, immigration is destroying the welfare state, in America and throughout the West.

How Mass Immigration Will Bankrupt the Welfare State

Mass immigration destroys the welfare state because immigrants receive more in benefits than they pay in taxes. This is not true for every immigrantâ some never collect government handoutsâ but it is true for the overall immigrant population. Studies from across the Western world prove this point.

A recent, and comprehensive study from the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering, and Medicine found that although immigration is (theoretically) revenue-neutral in America, not all immigrants are created equal. Half of all immigrants actually receive more in government assistance than they pay in taxes, but thankfully they are balanced out by the other half. Specifically, immigrants who came to America for family reasons, or arrived as refugees, cost a net present value of $170,000.

Net present value is how much money the government would need to invest today, at a yield of inflation plus three percent, to pay for said immigrantâs tax deficit over the course of their expected lifetime. Of course, the government does not do thisâ it spends only as it receives. Therefore, looking at net present value creates artificially low expectations.

According to the Heritage Foundation, each non-economic immigrant more realistically costs a net of $476,000 in welfare payouts. And of course this does not account for any increases in government programs. Applying this more realistic figure to the original study means that immigrants consume far more in government services than they pay for. In fact, if immigration levels remain unchanged, those arriving over the next decade will cost American taxpayers a net of $1.9 trillion over their lifetimes. The welfare state is already struggling: immigration will make a bad problem worse.

Another important study, conducted by Denmark's Ministry of Finance, found that immigrants were a net drain on the nation's welfare state. In fact, non-EU immigrants, and their descendants, consumed 59 percent of the tax surplus collected from native Danes. This is not surprising, since some 84 percent of all welfare recipients in Denmark are immigrants, or their descendants. The bottom line: immigration is a net burden on Denmark.

Likewise, a study conducted by Canada's Fraser Institute, a think tank, found that mass immigration costs Canadian taxpayers some $24 billion per year—and this was using data from nearly a decade ago. The number has since increased significantly, as Canada has one of the highest immigration rates in the world.

Finally, a study from the University College of London found that immigrants consumed far more in welfare than they paid in taxes. Specifically, the study looked at the Labour government's mass immigration push between 1995 and 2011. They found that immigrants from the European Economic Area made a small, but positive net contribution to the British economy of £4.4 billion during the period. However, during the same period non-European immigrants (primarily from South Asia, the Middle East, and Africa) cost the British economy a net £120 billion.

The origin-based economic differences are actually exacerbated by the UK's generous welfare state: while European immigrants often left their extended families at home, to be cared for by their respective government, immigrants from the Third World generally brought their families with them, knowing that British taxpayers would care for them. From the immigrant's perspective, this is a rational choice, but does it make sense for British taxpayers? No.

Together, these studies show that mass immigration won't save the welfare state, instead it will hasten its insolvency. In the end, immigrants won't pay for our pensions, we'll pay for theirs.

Democrats Must Choose Between Immigration & the Welfare State

For decades, Democrats campaigned on promises of cradle-to-grave care for low-income Americans, while at the same time they've allowed millions of immigrants to come to America and collect welfare without ever having contributed a dime to the public purse. This is not only unfair, it's unsustainable. The welfare state is collapsing under its own weight, and mass immigration is only making this bad problem worse.

It's time we forced the Democrats to choose between the welfare state and mass immigration.

Democrats Use Mexicans For Profiteering And To Pad Their Millionaire Stock Market Accounts

By Audrey Duke

Nobody cares less about Mexicans than Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein. To hear them wail about Mexicans, though, you would think that they were running a secret drug tunnel to Guadalajara.

The only reason whatsoever that they pretend to support Mexicans is so that they can swell the DNC's voter numbers in order to put their friends in office to give them crony kick-backs.

Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein have made tens of millions of dollars in personal profits from rigging elections to benefit Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein.

Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein are actors. They pretend to be upset about things that will cause laws that will make Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein rich at the expense of taxpayers.

Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein are disingenuous fakers and liars who excel and manufacturing a crisis when that pretend-crisis will make them richer.

Fuck You: Nancy Pelosi, Jerry Brown and Dianne Feinstein! You are corrupt dancing monkeys on George Soros and Elon Musk's string!

Deputy AG Rod Rosenstein's Wife Also Has Extensive Ties to the Clintons, Mueller and Comey

Senator Lindsey Graham sent a letter on Thursday to Assistant Attorney General Rod Rosenstein about whether Rosenstein should recuse himself from the Mueller investigation due to his obvious conflicts with the case.

Graham should also request information about Rosenstein's wife who represented the Clintons in the past.

According to sources as reported at FOX News â

Top Republican Senator Lindsey Graham is pressing Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein on whether the Justice Department official should recuse himself from the Robert Mueller investigation due to his own connections to the case. In a letter obtained by Fox News, Graham, R-S.C., asked Rosenstein whether he considers himself a â potential

â If so, should you recuse yourself from further interactions with and oversight of the Mueller investigation?â Graham asked.

Graham, in the May 31-dated letter, cited reports that Muellerâs investigation is looking at whether President Trump obstructed justice by firing Comey â and the fact that Trump relied on a Rosenstein-authored memo to justify the firing. Rosensteinâs role was further detailed in a New York Times report earlier this week on a memo written by ousted FBI official Andrew McCabe.

Fox News has confirmed that the memo described a meeting where Rosenstein claimed Trump had asked him to reference Russia in his recommendation to fire Comey. Rosenstein declined, and instead focused on Comeyâs handling of the Hillary Clinton email probe. Trump pushed back on the account Thursday. â Not that it matters but I never fired James Comey because of Russia! The Corrupt Mainstream media loves to keep pushing that narrative, but they know it is not true!â Trump tweeted.

Rosenstein has many conflicts of interest related to the Mueller investigation as well as Mueller and Muellerâs entire team as we pointed out in early May. The Mueller investigation is arguably the most one-sided and conflicted group of lawyers and investigators in history. They all are conflicted.

But Rosenstein may be more conflicted than the entire gang. Rosenstein wrote the letter for President Trump recommending Comeyâs firing. This alone should disqualify him and the entire investigation from taking place.

Rosenstein and Mueller were both heavily involved in the Uranium One case where the Obama Administration and his Secretary of State Hillary Clinton allowed the sale of 20% of the USâs uranium to Russia. This was the Russian scandal involving our government. This is what the DOJ should be investigating and Rosenstein should recuse himself from that as well.

But one other conflict of interest that Rosenstein has is related to his wife.

Rosensteinâs wife, Lisa Barsoomian, represented Bill Clinton in a case in the 1990âs. This alone should be enough for Rosenstein to be unqualified for any role related to the Clintons, Obama or their cronies.

â Trump (@Trumponly) April 8, 2018

Roger Stone reported the following on Lisa Barsoomian in 2017 â

Enter Lisa Barsoomian, wife of Rod Rosenstein. Lisa is a high-powered attorney in Washington, DC, who specializes in opposing Freedom of Information Act requests on behalf of the Deep State, err, I mean, the Intelligence Communities.

Lisa Barsoomian works for R. Craig Lawrence, an attorney who has represented Robert Mueller three times, James Comey five times, Barack Obama forty-five times, Kathleen Sebellius fifty-six times, Bill Clinton forty times, and Hillary Clinton seventeen times between 1991 and 2017.

Barsoomian participated in some of this work personally and has herself represented the FBI at least five separate times. It would be great to research the specifics of the cases she worked in, many of the documents from the Court Docket relating to these cases have been removed from the D.C. District and Appeals Court, including her representation for Clinton in 1998âs case Hamburg. V. Clinton.

Her loyalties are clearly with the entities that make up the Deep State, as are her husbands.

They are a DC Globalist Power Couple, and they mean to destroy Donald Trump under the bidding of their Globalist Masters. Rod Rosenstein should not have any position in President Trumpâs administration, let alone one with so much power to harm the Office of the Presidency.

The rules for recusal are clear. There are legal statutes for this. The fact that this case has so many material conflicts of interest automatically makes it a sham and farce.

The entire Mueller investigation should be thrown out just for Rosensteinâs conflicts, let alone the rest of the Mueller team of thugs. Rosensteinâs wife is enough reason for him to recuse himself!

Cummings, 68, a Maryland Democrat, is chairman of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform. His wife, Maya Rockeymoore, 48, is the chairman of the Maryland Democratic Party and briefly ran in the state's gubernatorial race last year. The couple married in 2008. Cummings was once heavily in debt â in part due to hefty child support payments to his first wife and two other women he had children with â but his financial situation has improved considerably over the past decade.

Rockeymoore runs two entities, a nonprofit group called the Center for Global Policy Solutions and a for-profit consulting firm called Global Policy Solutions, LLC, whose operations appear to have overlapped, according to the IRS complaint filed by watchdog group the National Legal and Policy Center on Monday. The complaint states that the arrangement may have been used to derive â illegal private benefit.â

Global Policy Solutions received more than $6.2 million in grants between 2013 and 2016, according to tax records. Several of the nonprofit group's financial backers — which included Google, J.P. Morgan and Prudential — have business interests before the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform. Cummings has served as Democratic chairman of the committee since January and previously served as ranking member.

Sunday on Fox News Channel's Sunday Morning Futures, House Intelligence Committee chairman Rep. Devin Nunes (R-CA) said the presidential campaign of Hillary Clinton's colluded with nearly every top official in the Justice Department and FBI.

Nunes said, "What's come out now, Maria, is that he has been the go-between Christopher Steele, so once Christopher Steele was terminated as a source, for doing all things like talking to the media, at the behest of Glenn Simpson, remember he was working for Glenn Simpson Fusion GPS, who are working for the Clinton Campaign. Christopher Steele was fired, a lot of this information wasn't shared with the FISA court, especially because of the fact that Christopher Steele was desperate that Donald Trump not become president. After that happened, Bruce Ohr, one of the top lawyers in the Department of Justice, kept continually meeting and providing information from Christopher Steele to who? The FBI."

He continued, "This is just madness. The American people need to know it. I will tell you, like I said in the last segment, the fact that the media is ignoring this is even more of a reason that we're going to have to have more information than usual declassified. We're going to have to have, I think, an unprecedented amount of information declassified because the media is just not covering this topic."

He added, "Don't forget that Bruce Ohr's wife, Nellie Ohr, who also will have to be interviewed soon, she also was working for Fusion GPS, working for the Clinton campaign. So here you have information flowing from the Clinton campaign from the Russians, likely I believe was handed directly from Russian propaganda arms to the Clinton campaign, fed into the top levels of the FBI and Department of Justice to open up a counter intelligence investigation into a political campaign that has now colluded with nearly every top official at the DOJ and FBI over the course of the last couple years."

Devin Nunes Warns AG Bill Barr: Either Prosecute Or The American People Will Never Trust The DOJ & FBI Again

by DCWhispers

Congressman Devin Nunes has been on the forefront for nearly two years now, leading the charge to hold those who created and then pushed the fake Trump-Russia collusion hoax, to be held accountable. If they are allowed to get away with what was effectively a direct attack upon a duly elected President of the United States, Nunes believes millions of Americans will lose all faith in the nation's legal system for generations to come. He is demanding AG Barr follow the evidence to the very end, even if that evidence leads to Barack Obama and Valerie Jarrett.

Via The Conservative Treehouse:

On July 31st, 2016, FBI counterintelligence operation Crossfire Hurricane became official.

*An official investigation targeting the campaign of Donald Trump now held a legal, albeit sketchy and politically motivated, justification. Under the auspices of investigating Russian involvement with George Papadopoulos, Carter Page, Paul Manafort and General Michael Flynn, the FBI was now conducting full-blown surveillance on the political campaign of Donald Trump. Crossfire Hurricane was the legal cover; â Spygateâ begins.

If Hillary Clinton won the 2016 election all of this would disappear; none of this would ever surface; and the entire operation would just evaporate into the ether of invisible DC history. But Hillary didn't win. She lost. Now, all downstream official action takes an entirely more urgent and important shift.

Shortly after Presiding Judge Rosemary Collyer authorized the FISA warrant, NSA Director Mike Rogers went to the FISC and informed the same judge of the FISA-702(16)(17) abuses that took place in the 2016 presidential election cycle.

Judge Collyer issues an explosive opinion lambasting the FBI for their allowed abuse of the system. The DOJ head of the National Security Division, John Carlin, resigned from his position.

Ten days after the election NSA Director Mike Rogers also traveled to Trump Tower without informing his boss ODNI James Clapper.

There has been a great deal of speculation as to what Rogers told President-elect Trump during that meeting. Itâs likely Director Rogers informed Trump about some of what he knew surrounding the unauthorized surveillance activity and FISA(702) exploitation. However, intelligence is highly compartmented; itâs also virtually guaranteed Rogers had no idea what the FBI did, or was doing, with the material and the larger â Spygateâ operation.

On January 5th, 2017, President Obama held an Oval Office meeting with VP Joe Biden, James Comey (FBI), Michael Rogers (NSA), John Brennan (CIA), James Clapper (ODNI), Sally Yates (DOJ) and Susan Rice. At the conclusion of the briefing, President Obama asks Sally Yates and James Comey to remain.

The background context here is important. The outgoing Obama white house team knows what has taken place throughout. Obamaâs PDBâs have included information about the Trump campaign officials who were under active surveillance. As the Trump transition team enters into office the FBI surveillance is still ongoing. The counterintelligence operation against the incoming administration, and every participating member remains in full swing.

The day after Obamaâs oval office meeting, when President-elect Trump is briefed on the Steele Dossier, ODNI James Clapper and FBI Director James Comey cannot brief the target within their investigation on the granular material they used to gain the FISA warrant against the candidate who is now the President-elect.

Their target was Trump.

Trump is now the President-elect.

On Tuesday May 16th, Rod Rosenstein takes Robert Mueller to the White House to talk with the target of the â obstructionâ criminal investigation, under the ruse of bringing Mueller in for a meeting about becoming FBI Director. This meeting was quite literally advanced reconnaissance.

Immediately following this May 17, 2017, Go8 briefing, Deputy AG Rod Rosenstein notified the public of the special counsel appointment.

According to President Trumpâs Attorney John Dowd, the White House was stunned by the decision. [Link] Coincidentally, AG Jeff Sessions was in the oval office for unrelated business when White House counsel Don McGahn came in and informed the group. Jeff Sessions immediately offered his resignation, and Sessionsâ chief-of-staff Jody Hunt went back to the Main Justice office to ask Rosenstein what the hell was going on.

Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosensteinâs scope memos created a impenetrable firewall through which information could not be shared or discussed with congressional investigators or the IG office until Robert Muellerâs probe was complete; and Rosenstein used the threat of the appearance of â obstructionâ to keep President Trump from declassifying the material that would have exposed the corrupt endeavors.

Team Obama is hoping to keep claiming the originating 2016 surveillance upon the Trump campaign was an outcome of a valid counterintelligence investigative probe; which is the underpinning of their need to perpetuate the Russian election conspiracy narrative. So long as all Obama officials who were engaged within the process keep up the story that validates the fraudulent purpose; their hope is all players will escape legal accountability for the unlawful weaponization of the intelligence apparatus to target political opposition.

If they succeed, â by the bookâ will have been successful.

This is what Devin Nunes is warning about.

â â â â â â â â â â

The Obama administration unleashed the power of the federal government with the intent to attack and destroy a political opponent via lies, intimidation, and what remains an ongoing cover-up. It is likely among the greatest political scandals in the nationâ s history. They are now hiding behind secondary players in the scandal, confident their own part will not come to light and that while others might pay some price, they will never be held accountable. Congressman Nunes knows this and is practically begging Attorney General Barr to release all the information and go after those responsible no matter how high up the political ladder that discovery takes himâ even if it inevitably leads to these two:

Beijingâs nefarious activities in the United States are very worrying.

San Francisco is a hotbed of espionage and international intrigue. And why wouldnât it be? Strategically located near major West Coast ports, home to many large immigrant communities, and, perhaps most crucially, just up the road from Americaâs most technologically sophisticated corporations, it makes perfect sense that Americaâs geopolitical rivals would want to gain a foothold in the City by the Bay.

And gain it they have, evidently. Last year, when the president took the decidedly non-collusionish action of shuttering Russiaâs San Francisco consulateâs oldest in the countryâs black smoke billowed from the historic Pacific Heights building that had long housed the Kremlin outpost. Clearly, the Russians were burning evidence of misdeeds.

And we now know that China, a much more worrisome long-term threat to the United States than a declining Russia, has been active in the Bay Area as well.

Five years ago, Senator Dianne Feinstein, the California Democrat who then chaired the Intelligence Committee, was approached by the FBI. The bureau had learned that a staffer in her San Francisco office was a Chinese operative â runâ out of Beijingâs consulate in that city. It appears that he had started as a legitimate employee but was at some point, likely on a visit to the East, turned by a member of the Chinese Ministry of State Security.

The staffer had served the senator for some two decades as a general office lackey, a liaison to the local Chinese community, and, most important, the senatorâs chauffeur whenever she was in San Francisco, her hometown. Driving Ms. Feinstein would have been a plum assignment for an intelligence operative; it allowed the Chinese access to the senatorâs comings and goings and who she met with, as well as to any conversations she might have had in the car and any documents she may have left in it.

According to a column in the San Francisco Chronicle, the FBI did not believe the driver had managed to nab anything confidential. And after being approached by the bureau, the senator promptly fired him. It also appears that, ultimately, no charges were filed against the driver. Feinsteinâs press secretary ignored requests for comment on this story; her office has issued standard boilerplate to media outlets saying that the senator was â mortifiedâ by the revelation that she had a spy on her payroll.

Despite her efforts to brush matters aside, the Feinstein spy scandal is significant. Itâs hard to make out through the media and political classâs myopic obsession with all things Russia, but Chinese espionage in America is epidemic. In June 2015, Chinese hackers stole the sensitive personal data (Social Security numbers, addresses, etc.) of more than 20 million Americans when they breached the Office of Personnel Managementâs servers. That provided Beijing a trove of information, not to mention copious blackmail opportunities. Military secrets have been targeted repeatedly, and college campuses are also host to scores of Chinese assets and operatives. Meanwhile, Beijingâs plan to dominate the pharmaceutical, aerospace, artificial intelligence, robotics, self-driving car, clean energy, and sundry other industries of the futureââ Made in China 2025,â itâs calledâ is largely based on espionage, notably the purloining of American technology. And those are just the operations we know about.

In other words, Dianne Feinsteinâs driver might not amount to a hill of beans compared to the OPM hack. But itâs another star in a vast constellation of Chinese espionage against the United States; not to mention a clever way to get close to the chair of an important Senate committee, one privy to sensitive information. So itâs puzzling that the Washington Post has mentioned the Feinstein matter only once, and this in an opinion column rather than the news pages. The nationâs paper of record, the New York Times, hasnât seen fit to publish even a squib on the matter. I asked the *Times*âs deputy Washington editor, Jonathan Weisman, why his paper hasnât deigned to mention the story. Uncharacteristically for the garrulous Twitter-er, who this week has found time to weigh in on Crazy Rich Asians, the U.S. Postal Service, and the crowd capacity of Texas A&Mâs football stadium, Weisman declined to answer. Even the Los Angeles Times, catering to a readership that Feinstein represents, has ignored it.

What makes Beijingâs nefarious activities in the United States all the more worrying is that China, unlike Russia, is not just an intelligence and military rival to the United States, but presents a genuine ideological threat as well. Nobody wants to import the â Russia modelââ that of a declining petro-state with a plummeting population, shrinking lifespans, low growth, and serious fiscal problems. Vladimir Putin can, and does, make mischief outside his borders, but his method of governance is not something that anyone wants to emulate.

China, on the other hand, has delivered 40 consecutive years of economic growth, lifting hundreds of millions of people out of poverty, and done it with only limited economic freedomâ they call it state-directed capitalismâ and essentially zero political liberalization. Itâs little wonder that nations as varied as Turkey, Poland, Vietnam, the Philippines, and Ethiopia are no longer just importing Chinese productsâ theyâre looking to import its system of political and economic management as well.

China wants to pilfer a lot from us: our technological prowess, our military sophistication, our tradition of academic excellence. But not, unfortunately, our democratic system of government.

Insular U.S. Rail Industry Impedes Innovative Outsiders By

Robert J. Ahern â Small, innovative companies in the U.S. are coming up with answers to some of the most pressing and persistent problems on Americaâs railways. But theyâre being stonewalled at every turn by a hidebound, insular rail industry. Rail travel, for both freight and passengers, is safer now than it has ever been. Yet the industry has been unable â or unwilling â to fix some issues. Failure of wheel bearings is one of them. Another is the accidental uncoupling of cars. In both of these cases, smart, independent companies have devised solutions only to be rebuffed by a railroad industry that is protective of its own suppliers and hostile to ideas that come from outside its closed culture. This behavior puts lives and freight at unnecessary risk. After years of being frustrated by the rail industry at every turn, companies with new ideas have little choice but to turn to the federal government. Legislation is pending in Congress that would require the Federal Railroad Administration â the government agency that oversees the rail industry â to adopt and enforce mandatory safety standards that would ensure bearing failures, decoupling and other accidents do not happen. This would permit railroads to use any technology, from inside or outside the industry, that meets the standards. Why is this needed? Consider the case of Columbus Castings, of Columbus, Ohio. In 2008, the railroad industry, acknowledging that trains still accidentally uncouple, set a standard that any manufacturer must meet if it designed a device that would fix the problem. Columbus Castings invented the Z-Knuckle, which prevents uncoupling. It met the industryâs new standard. But in a strange twist, the industry refused to back the Z-Knuckleâs use because it was the only device that met the standard. Instead, it simply chose not to enforce the standard. Never mind that Columbus Castings is the countryâs largest steel foundry and a maker of steel for many uses. Several companies, including Amsted Rail, Standard Truck Car, National Railway Equipment and A. Stucki Co., have created advanced trucks â the framework that holds a rail carâs four wheels â that are less likely to derail and use less energy, due to enhanced suspension. But these have been rejected by the railroad industry as well. Likewise, the industry has shunned electronically controlled pneumatic braking systems that not only stop a train in a much shorter distance in an emergency, but give the engineer constant, real-time feedback on the trainâs braking system. Stage 8 Locking Fasteners of San Rafael, Calif., also a railroad industry outsider, has come up with an inexpensive solution that would virtually eliminate bearing-failure derailments. And, as with Columbus Castings, the railroad industry has stood in the way of safety and technology improvements. Failure of wheel bearings â the round, metal rods inside a rail carâs wheel assembly that help the wheels roll smoothly â are the nationâs third-largest cause of train derailments, according to a 2012 University of Illinois study. Only broken rails and track irregularities cause more accidents annually. Bearing failure typically leads to derailments. In the worst cases, derailments can cause injury, community disruption and death. These derailments happen because the screws holding the bearing end caps (which maintain proper tension in the bearing) vibrate loose after thousands of miles of service. The rail industry has tried for half a century to devise a reliable screw-locking technology of its own, but has not been able to do so. The best system the rail industry has been able to come up with allows a failure rate of 23 percent. That isnât good enough. A better system was devised in 2009. Stage 8 invented the Cap Screw Locking System, which keeps rail or tank car wheel bearing end-cap screws from vibrating loose. But as soon as the invention was unveiled, the rail industry bureaucracy withheld approval of the product. The rail industry then demanded a field test for the Stage 8 device. After 150,000 miles of testing on the industryâs own cars, the locking device showed no failures at all. And yet, the FRA and the Association of American Railroads continues to withhold approval. So, whoâs really running our railroads? Itâs time for Congress to step in. Robert J. Ahern is director and executive vice president of Stage 8 Locking Fasteners Inc. Dianne Feinstein is the Most Corrupt Senator in the United States

BY MICHAEL LEDEEN

(AP Photo/Jeff Chiu)

On top of her McCarthyite smear of Judge Kavanaugh, sheâs closely tied to both Chinese and Russian operations in the United States.

To date, only one fairly obscure member of Congress has asked our intel peopleâ in this case, the FBI--to look into the alarming case of a Chinese agent becoming her office manager and personal chauffeur. An excerpt from Rep. Jim Banksâ letter to FBI Director Wray:

It has recently come to light that U.S. Senator Dianne Feinstein, the former chair of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, employed a staff member who was using his position to secretly report information to the Ministry of State Security in China. Given the type of information Senator Feinstein had access to and Chinaâs position as a top foreign adversary of the United States, this revelation is alarming.

The Chinese agent is apparently working without annoyance in California. Feinstein is running for reelection. I wonder if he is planning to vote for her.

Banks asked for an investigation and a briefing. That was last month, and I havenât seen anything since. Have you? Yet the ânewsâ is chock-a-block with thousands of column inches on an unknown event alleged by an unknown woman who claims it happened when she and Judge Kavanaugh were in high school 35-40 years ago.

This is a good way to measure how little Chinese espionage matters to the nation's law enforcers and opinion makers. Well, of course, and we all know why: nobody is accusing Trump of colluding with Beijing.

Funny world. So many things are backwards. We have apparently hard evidence of Chinese espionage in the office of the number one senator on the Senate Intelligence Committee—the FBI told her about it five years ago, and she did nothing (nor did the bureau)—but nobody seems concerned. Meanwhile, there is no evidence of any collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign, yet half the world constantly frets about it.

Feinstein is also part of the Russian story. After British former spy Christopher Steele was fired for his misleading dossier on Trump and the Russians, he continued work for Democrat-paid lobbyists to provide (dis)information to the bureau. One of his prime contacts was Daniel Jones, as Sean Davis reported:

New evidence suggests that a former top staffer for Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) may be directing the post-election efforts of Fusion GPS, a Democrat-linked political opposition research firm, to vindicate a series of memos alleging illegal collusion between the Donald Trump campaign and Russian officials.

Congressional documents and recently leaked texts between Sen. Mark Warner (D-Va.) and a registered foreign agent for a Russian aluminum oligarch indicate that Daniel J. Jones is intimately involved with ongoing efforts to retroactively validate a series of salacious and unverified memos produced by Christopher Steele, a former British intelligence agent, and Fusion GPS.

So Feinstein employed a Chinese agent, who is apparently free and clear. And her former top staffer was—and perhaps still is—paying Fusion GPS to link with Steele to promulgate nonsense to the FBI. One begins to wonder some things:

1. Is she making money out of this? Sean Davis has written that Daniel Jones raised fifty million dollars for his Russian project, and the Chinese agent was being paid from Beijing. Did any of that money end up in Feinstein ventures, or in her husband's activities in China?
2. Why, after learning that her staffer/chauffeur was an agent of an enemy regime, did she keep him on the payroll and within easy listening distance?
3. Why did she fail to inform colleagues and investigators of her close ties with Daniel Jones?

And finally, does anybody do any counterintelligence in this town? Or is that only when Republicans are involved?

Actually, there are Republicans, or at least one, Senator Richard Burr, who passionately pursued General Michael Flynn, who are inclined to join the lynch mob. Burr is blessedly retiring; let's hope his replacement is better.

The largest U.S. public pension fund has offered an official with China's State Administration of Foreign Exchange its top investment job, according to a Wall Street Journal report citing a people familiar with the matter.

The California Public Employees' Retirement System, better known as CALPERS, has offered the job of chief investment officer to Ben Meng, the Wall Street Journal reported Wednesday. Meng is an official of China's State Administration of Foreign Exchange, its foreign exchange regulator.

The State Administration of Foreign Exchange is the agency that oversees China's foreign currency reserves and was central to its currency manipulation schemes, according to people familiar with the matter.

CALPERS has enormous sway over investment in the U.S., managing $360 billion in assets to fund the state's retirement obligations to police officers, firefighters, and other public employees. In 2016, Fortune described CALPERS as a one of its most influential institutional investors in the US.

Meng hadn't signed an offer letter as of Wednesday morning, according to the Wall Street Journal

From the Wall Street Journal:

Calpers's next investment chief would join a fund that is debating the direction of its roughly $27 billion private-equity program. Calpers, as part of a review of that portfolio, is exploring plans to farm out billions to pools that will take stakes in private companies.

Any moves made by Calpers, which is responsible for benefits to more than 1.9 million active or retired public employees, will be watched closely in the pension world. The system is considered a bellwether for investment trends. Calpers and many other public retirement systems around the country are struggling to meet their return targets as they try to fill sizable funding gaps.

The pick of Meng, who previously worked at CALPERS, is likely to spark controversy. The Trump administration has increased monitoring on Chinese investment in the U.S. Placing a Chinese official in charge of such a large pool of U.S. investment assets will undoubtedly attract criticism from the administration's China hawks.

If this is trueâ and Maxine Watersâ staffers doxxed several GOP Senators yesterday on Wikipediaâ there should be hell to pay.

Waters has already called for direct action against GOP.

Waters has come under fire for advocating that her Democratic followers form into mobs and physically confront members of the Trump administration if they see them in public.

The Democratic rep - who doesn't live in the district she represents and paid her daughter \$750,000 for Democratic fundraising activities, said to a crowd at a "Keep Families Together" rally on Saturday: "If you see anybody from that Cabinet in a restaurant, in a department store, at a gasoline station, you get out and you create a crowd and you push back on them, and you tell them theyâ re not welcome anymore, anywhere."

Waters' call to action came amid protests at the homes of Department of Homeland Security Kirstjen Nielsen's house, as well as White House aide Stephen Miller's apartment, which makes the doxxing of GOP Senators all the more significant - especially if it came from Waters' office.

White House spokesman Raj Shah wrote on Twitter that the leaked information was "outrageous."

Docs Reveal FBI Cover Up of Chart of Potential Violations By Hillary Clinton: Judicial Watch

by Cristina Laila

- 916Share
- 98Tweet
- Email

Once again Judicial Watch is doing the heavy lifting.

Conservative watchdog group Judicial Watch announced Friday it received another tranche of documents from a January 2018 FOIA lawsuit that revealed the FBI actively covered up a "chart" of potential violations by Hillary Clinton.

The newly obtained emails came in response to a May 21 order by U.S. District Judge Reggie B. Walton to the FBI to begin processing 13,000 pages of records exchanged exclusively between Strzok and Page between February 1, 2015, and December 2017.

The FBI may not complete review and production of all the Strzok-Page communications until at least 2020, reported Judicial Watch.

Three days after then-FBI Director James Comey's July 2016 press conference where he usurped the DOJ and exonerated Hillary Clinton, a July 8 2016 email chain reveals a Special Counsel to the FBI's executive assistant director in charge of the National Security Branch, whose name is redacted, wrote to Peter Strzok and other officials that he was creating a chart of Hillary Clinton's violations they found during the investigation and reasons to NOT prosecute.

Via Judicial Watch:

[Redacted] writes: I am still working on an additional page for these TPs that consist of a chart of the statutory violations considered during the investigation, and the reasons for the recommendation not to prosecute, hopefully in non-lawyer friendly terms :

Strzok forwards to Page, Jonathan Moffa and others: I have redlined some points. Broadly, I have some concerns about asking some of our [sic] senior field folks to get into the business of briefing this case, particularly when we have the D's [Comey's] statement as a kind of stand alone document. In my opinion, there's too much nuance, detail, and potential for missteps. But I get they may likely be asked for comment.

[Redacted] writes to Strzok, Page and others: The DD [Andrew McCabe] will need to approve these before they are pushed out to anyone. At the end of last week, he wasn't inclined to send them to anyone. But, it's great to have them on the shelf in case they're needed.

[Redacted] writes to Strzok and Page: I'm really not sure why they continued working on these [talking points]. In the morning, I'll make sure Andy [McCabe] tells Mike [Kortan] to keep these in his pocket. I guess Andy just didn't ever have a moment to turn these off with Mike like he said he would.

Page replies: Yes, agree that this is not a good idea.

Neither the chart of Hillary Clinton's potential violations nor the talking points drafted by the FBI officials have ever been released.

On May 15, 2016, James Rybicki sent Bill Priestap, McCabe, Lisa Page and others an email with the subject line "Request from the Director."

Comey wanted a list of all cases charged in the last 20 years where the gravamen of the charge was mishandling classified information.

POLL: Should Hillary Be In Jail?

It should be in chart form with: (1) case name, (2) a short summary for content (3) charges brought, and (4) charge of conviction," Rybicki wrote.

A July 22, 2016 email exchange between Peter Strzok, Lisa Page and other FBI and DOJ officials show that Beth Wilkinson, a lawyer for several of Hillary Clinton's aides, demanded a conference call with the FBI/DOJ and that she was haranguing the FBI/DOJ about the return of laptops in the FBI's possession:

A Wilkinson Walsh attorney, emails [Redacted] FBI National Security Division

Officials: We wanted to follow up on our conversation from a few days ago. We would like to schedule a time to speak with both you and [Redacted] early next week. Is there a time on Monday or Tuesday that could work on your end?

[Redacted] FBI National Security Division official writes: In the meantime, Iâ I tell Hal that we will certainly schedule a call and will get back to him as to timing. Since he knows Beth [Wilkinson] personally, it could be useful to have Jim on the phone if she is going to be haranguing us re: the laptops.

[Redacted] FBI Office of the General Counsel writes: Moreâ I guess this is [Redactedâ s] rationale for why we need to have the GC on the call to discuss the fact that we will be following all of our legal obligations and FBI policies/procedures with regard to the disposition of the materials in this case.

Strzok writes: You are perfectly competent to speak to the legal obligations and FBI policy/procedures. We should NOT be treating opposing counsel this way. We would not in any other case.

President of Judicial Watch Tom Fitton had this to say about the FBI hiding a chart detailing Hillary Clintonâ s violations of the law:

â Judicial Watch caught the FBI in another cover-up to protect Hillary Clinton. These records show that the FBI is hiding a chart detailing possible violations of law by Hillary Clinton and the supposed reasons she was not prosecuted.â

WATCH: More from Tom Fitton on this breaking story, â This is an outrageous cover upâ says Fitton in a video posted Friday:

ENDING THE CLINTON - OBAMA COVER-UPS- GOP Lawmakers Call on AG Sessions to Investigate Hillary Clinton Crimes or Resign

by Joshua Caplan

- 258Share
- 44Tweet
- Email

Disgruntled Republican lawmakers are beginning to voice the same displeasure over the inaction of Attorney General Jeff Sessions as many conservatives have for months. The calls for Sessions to investigate the corruption surrounding Hillary Clinton and James Comey are growing louder.

The people want justice.

On Monday, GOP Congressmen Jim Jordan and Matt Gaetz called on Sessions to probe the FBI's investigation into Hillary Clinton private email use or resign.

Washington Times reports:

It's time for Jeff Sessions to name a Special Counsel and get answers for the American people. If not, he should step down, the congressmen said in a piece for FoxNews.com.

They said Mr. Comey's decision to draft an exoneration letter regarding Mrs. Clinton months before the end of the investigation, and well before the FBI talked to her, was troubling.

So, they said, was Mr. Comey's handling of the anti-Trump dossier. They said if it was so concerning, the director should have briefed the president-elect well before the Jan. 6 briefing Mr. Comey delivered.

And the congressmen said the 2010 deal that saw the U.S. approve sale of uranium to Russian interests demands a more thorough investigation, saying it calls into question the independence of Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who is probing Trump campaign figures' work with Russia.

In a fiery speech on the House floor Wednesday, Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) warned the U.S. is at risk of a coup d'état, unless Special Counsel Robert Mueller resigns or is fired.

Gaetz's concern about Mueller mirrors his views Clinton. Unless Mueller, Clinton and Comey face accountability, the corruption they engaged in will go unpunished.

"I'm calling for Mr. Mueller's resignation or his firing" pic.twitter.com/rEpobJCn8V

RepMattGaetz (@RepMattGaetz) November 8, 2017

The Hill reports:

“We are at risk of a coup d’état in this country if we allow an unaccountable person with no oversight to undermine the duly-elected President of the United States,” Gaetz said. “That is precisely what is happening right now with the indisputable conflicts of interest that are present with Mr. Mueller and others at the Department of Justice.”

“I join me in calling for Mr. Mueller’s resignation or his firing,” Gaetz continued.

[“]In his Wednesday speech, Gaetz also called on the Justice Department to appoint a special counsel to investigate the Clinton Foundation, the Uranium One deal and the Fusion GPS dossier.”

As The Gateway Pundit previously reported, Special Counsel Robert Mueller is under pressure to resign as his investigation into alleged Russian interference in the 2016 presidential election drifts further and further away from its core purpose.

Many are asking if Mueller should resign after charging former Trump campaign chair Paul Manafort and business partner Rick Gates with alleged crimes that have nothing to do with President Trump’s 2016 campaign.

GOP Rep. Matt Gaetz (R-FL) introduced a resolution demanding Mueller resign immediately due to the lack of oversight on the Special Counsel. If Mueller can be reigned in, Gaetz could change course, just like he may take back his statements on Sessions if the Justice Department launches a thorough investigation into the Comey-Clinton email scandal.

GEORGE SOROS ANNOUNCES THAT IT IS HE WHO HAS RUN THE GLOBAL ANTI-TRUMP CAMPAIGN

SOROS: EVERYTHING HAS GONE WRONG BECAUSE OF HIM! WILL DOUBLE HIS EFFORTS TO DESTROY REPUBLICANS

'LIVING IN MY OWN BUBBLE'...

The news headline reads:

“ESG, VALIC AND AIG STOCKS ARE HOW BIDEN, PELOSI, HARRIS AND FEINSTEIN FAMILIES GET THEIR BRIBES!”

...at the same time Joe Biden just issued an "Executive Order" to try to protect the ESG stock profits owned by his family and his campaign financiers. What a bold-faced act of corruption that was! According to federal investigators and forensic accounting experts, we are now informed that:

A. White House Staff, federal judges and Congress hold ESG, Valic and AIG stocks that conduit for lobbyists and millionaire directives.

B. Case histories are provided, herein, from among many hundreds of thousands of examples, proving that public officials make decisions based on bias, cronyism, favoritism and pre-arranged bribes.

C. Goldman Sachs, McKinsey Consulting, Deloitte, Silicon Valley Bank and a group of insider consultants in the San Francisco Bay area and Washington, DC sell illicit STOCK BRIBERY CONDUITS to White House Staff, U.S. Senators, members of Congress and Department of Energy staff in an organized â enterpriseâ .

D. The Valic and AIG stock market accounts are arranged for politicians to provide a beneficiary profiteering route, for those politicians, and their family members, in exchange for favorable public policy decisions.

E. Political and economic cronyism bias are the controlling criteria for most judicial and public policy decisions since 2001.

"ESG", "VALIC" and "AIG" are code for "Insider Payola DNC Stock Bribes" that exist to benefit White House financiers.

The framers of the Fourteenth Amendment stressed that the due process and equal protection clauses created a right to fair and impartial government acts, hearings and trials. Courts have repeatedly held that an impartial judge or public official is an indispensable element of those rights. The facts, though, show both bias and prejudice in fact and in appearance, and a lack of legal qualification and temperament to preside in modern policy cases. Each alone is sufficient to require many politicians or judge's disqualification and recusal.

1. Due process demands a fair and impartial hearing by a neutral and detached public official or magistrate. Gerstein v. Pugh, 420 U.S. 103 (1975); Ward v. Village of Monroe, 409 U.S. 57, 62 (1972). A right to an impartial judge is so basic to due process that courts can never treat its infraction as a harmless error. Chapman v. California, 386 U.S. 18, 23 (1967). â ...the tribunals of the country shall not only be impartial in the controversies submitted to them but shall give assurance that they are impartial...â Berger v. the United States, 255 U.S. 22, 35-6 (1921).
2. Rule 1.2 states â Promoting Confidence in the Judiciary - A judge shall act at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the independence, integrity, and impartiality* of the judiciary, and shall avoid impropriety and the appearance of impropriety.â
3. Public officials have a duty to promote confidence in the judiciary and in Congress.
4. The citizens do not feel that the present Congress or White House will act independently, with integrity and impartiality regarding the present matters of public policy because those officials transact bribes via the stock market.
5. Actual improprieties include violations of law, court rules or provisions of the Codes of ethics. The test for appearance of impropriety is whether the conduct would create in reasonable minds and a perception that the public officials violated this Code or engaged in other conduct that reflects adversely on the government's honesty, impartiality, temperament, or fitness to serve the public.
6. Rule 1.3 provides the standard. Rule 1.3 states that â Avoiding Abuse of the Prestige of Judicial Office - A judge shall not abuse the prestige of judicial office to advance the personal or economic interests* of the judge or others or allow others to do so.â This is mirrored in other government regulations.
7. The current Congress and White House, as public offices, has an economic interest in all matters via stock market ownerships. It would be unfair and unreasonable if the current Congress and White House would be allowed to preside over public matters while owning stock market assets that fill their family wallets with unjust gain and the filth of corrupt gain.

WhereasWhite House executives, U.S. Senators, and Government agency executives colludedwith Silicon Valley oligarchs, operating, together, as an "Enterprise",to coordinate insider stock market "Stimulus Scams" that involved funding blockades, blacklists, contracted tabloid media assassinations and RICO Racketeeringlaw violations, Anti-trustlaw violations, IP law violations,lobbying law violations and various civil and criminal acts that harmed domestic citizens andDemocracy. This case matter is well known to Courts, media, federal law enforcement and innearly a million news articles. It is not possible for this Judge, who knows many of the participants in this case, to not have seen theconflict of interest herein, at first blush.

Asimple cross-comparison of the ICIJ, FINCEN, Interpol, SEC, GAO forensic accounting and XKEYSCORE, et al, databases proves theillicit financial interactions between Defendants. Such a check can be technically accomplished within 60 minutes, or less, according tofederal IT experts.

Almostevery single investor of Elon Musk is also the primary financier and beneficiary of the politicians, and their Congressional shenanigans,that used taxpayer money and resources to give Musk's companies all that free money. For example, Dianne Feinstein's family run the HRservice (Herb Newman), the construction company, the railroads, the building leases (CBRE), the China funds (Mart Bailey, Steve Westly,Steve Spinner, et al) and swap staff members for Tesla and Solyndra. Feinstein and Pelosi blocked funding for all Tesla competitors forthe same State and Federal cash and tax waivers and for the NUMMI factory. The California and Washington, DC politicians, personally,made billions off insider trading, pump-and-dumps and payola. Felonies? You Bet! Valic, who the Judge invests massively, with, runspart of the Tesla and Elon Musk cash.

Reporters and family members of California politicians, including U.S. Senators, who Plaintiffs has a personal relationship with and knows the staff of, have contacted Plaintiffs. Based on current investigative information, federal finance reports on the Judge's sources of income from stock market investments, speakers fees and other sources and social media postings, photographs and social photography archives from Getty, Drew Altizer and related Washington, DC "high-society" photographers there appears t be conflicts of interest between public officials and this case. Senators Dianne Feinstein, Nancy Pelosi, Kamala Harris, Harry Reid (Deceased, but records acquired), White House staff, and other related parties, appear to have given orders to the Judge's office to "Stop this case no matter what.." stating that "This will cut off the stock market income of 90% of the DNC..". As, for example, Chief Judge Elaine D Kaplan is a renown spokesperson and speaker for the DNC and this case has the potential to cause the arrest, indictment, censure, Congressional charges of Contempt, and other hardships for "90% of the DNC", there is a reasonable assumption, that any person of average intelligence could make, that this Judge is overly conflicted in this matter.

Asone of the founders of the "Anti-corruption Party", there are also basic conflicts of interest between the "Anti-corruptionParty" : "NO Public Official, or their family, should own stock market assets because that is how bribes are paid" stanceand the DNC's stance, per Nancy Pelosi, that: "All public officials and judges should get stock market perks". The Plaintiffs is an active proponent of the Expansion, FBI enforcement and application of the federal STOCK ACT, which most of the opposition are in violation of.

Facebook, Google, Alphabet, Tesla Motors, SpaceX and other Big Tech companies as well as the Senators mentioned, co-partnered in the government criminal endeavors mentioned in this case. Reporters have stated to Plaintiffs that financial disclosures indicate that those who own direct, or mutual funds, together, in this entities are Defendants and "enemies" of the Plaintiffs. Plaintiffs and advisors request that the Judge Swear, Warrant and Certify that they, or their partner own no stocks or interests in any "Big Tech" companies and that the points in the Co-Defendant Senator's financial disclosures (Per <https://www.openthebooks.com>, <https://sunlightfoundation.com/>, and Senate Investigators) do not cross over in the Judge's financial disclosure in any non-coincidence manner.

You can see the reports from Congress, Federal Agencies and Investigators verifying these assertions at: <http://american-corruption.com/public/>

The federally documented reports, below, prove that the number one way to bribe Judges and public officials is via Dark Money stock market transactions and covert Mutual Funds "packing".

Such conflicts cannot even have a hint of possibility in a case this important to every American citizen.

How can you ever trust a single judge to rule fairly on a case involving famous politicians and notorious millionaires that the Judge knows, parties with, co-invests with and gets political perks from?

There is a pandemic of crooked, bribed, judges in America as the following evidence shows. We must not give leverage to ANY possibility that a Judge could be influenced.

The Judge has confirmed, herself, extensive investments in: Valic Large Cap Investment Fund, Valic Mid Cap Investment Fund, Valic Small Cap Investment Fund, Valic Global & Internat'l Equity Fund, Valic Specialty Fund, Valic Fixed Income which are investment fronts for Google, Alphabet, Tesla and the other corrupt companies who are DOE/Defendants in this case and are under federal criminal investigations and those companies are regulated by the Senators and White House officials charged in these crimes. The United States Government has sued "Valic", over and over, for a variety of misdeeds and dirty financial tricks. "Valic" recently had to change their name in order to try to ward off more bad press, just like crooked "Facebook" changed its name to "Meta" in order to try to ward off more bad press from Facebook being outed as a corruption empire. The new name of Valic is "AIG Retirement Services".

Readers will recall that in the 2007-2008 "stimulus scam" a certain contingent of Congress people insisted that a company called AIG should get handed a massive load of free taxpayer cash. As we all know by now, insurance giant AIG sparked national outrage by paying more than $165 million in executive bonuses after receiving a $170 billion taxpayer bailout in the last "Stimulus Scam". What fewer people know is that AIG gave more than $9 million in campaign contributions to Congress and the Congress People that lobbied FOR the AIG give-away were the people who AIG gave political resources to. Valic/AIG is suspected to be a money-laundering Dark Money route between Big Tech and members of Congress.

Plaintiffs provided information and research to Robert Simon, the Producer for CBS News 60 Minutes TV investigative show. 60 Minutes produced segments deeply relevant to this case including: Congress Trading On Insider Information; The Lobbyists Playbook; The Cleantech Crash; The Data Brokers and others. The pertinent sections of those news items can be viewed in the film: How Political Corruption Works located at http://american-corruption.com/NEWS_VIDEO_COVERAGE/

Robert (Bob) Simon was killed in a suspicious car crash. Bystanders described someone leaning into the car, at the crash, and spraying something.

This information was publicly available to The Judge, for years, prior to this case and was publicly discussed among the Judges peers and associates, to this day:

Washington, D.C. is a town that runs on inside information - but should our elected officials be able to use that information to pad their own pockets? As Steve Kroft, Bob Simon's peer at 60 Minutes, reports, members of Congress and their aides have regular access to powerful political intelligence, and many have made well-timed stock market trades in the very industries they regulate. For now, the practice is perfectly legal, but some say it's time for the law to change.

Even if a Judge or Senator denies that they could be influenced by personal favorites or by stocks that all of their friends own, Psychology proves that assertion to be virtually impossible to be believed. Judges, or public officials would not deny that they subconsciously assert influence in a school to make sure their child has the best treatment and that kids that bully their child get the most punishment. Why should anyone think a Judge or Senator would not consciously, or subconsciously, assert influence over something that buys them mansions, trips to the Virgin Islands and sexy parties?

Judges and Senators in this case are either financed by, friends with, sleeping with, dating the staff of, holding stock market assets in, promised a revolving door job or government service contracts from, partying with, personal friends with, photographed at private events with, exchanging emails with, business associates of or directed by; our business adversaries, or the Senators and politicians that those business adversaries pay campaign finances to, or supply political digital search manipulation services to. Criminal U.S. Senators coordinated and profited in these schemes. Their own family members, who Plaintiffs, and his peers know personally, have now supplied evidence against them.

In one published report where Steve Kroft was the correspondent, with Ira Rosen and Gabrielle Schonder as producers, it was shown that, for national elections, public officials, including congressmen and senators are expending much of their time and their energy raising the millions of dollars in campaign funds they'll need just to hold onto a job that pays $174,000 a year.

Few of them are doing it for the salary and all of them will say they are doing it to serve the public. But there are other benefits: Power, prestige, and the opportunity to become a Washington insider with access to information and connections that no one else has, in an environment of privilege where rules that govern the rest of the country, don't always apply to them.

Most former congressmen and senators manage to leave Washington - if they ever leave Washington - with more money in their pockets than they had when they arrived, and as you are about to see, the biggest challenge is often avoiding temptation. Judges lives are set according to which Senators, and other public officials are in office, Judges have even more incentive to rig political decisions because most of them own mansions they can't pay for with the speaker fees and stock perks their office provides.

Renown anti-corruption investigative reporter: Peter Schweizer, was asked to comment:

Peter Schweizer: "This is a venture opportunity. This is an opportunity to leverage your position in public service and use that position to enrich yourself, your friends, and your family."

Peter Schweizer is a fellow at the Hoover Institution, a conservative think tank at Stanford University. A year ago he began working on a book about soft corruption in Washington with a team of eight student researchers, who reviewed financial disclosure records. It became a jumping off point for our own story, and we have independently verified the material we've used.

Schweizer says he wanted to know why some congressmen and senators managed to accumulate significant wealth beyond their salaries, and proved particularly adept at buying and selling stocks.

Schweizer: â There are all sorts of forms of â honestâ grafts that congressmen engage in that allow them to become very, very wealthy. So it's not illegal, but I think it's highly unethical, I think it's highly offensive, and wrong.â

Steve Kroft: â What do you mean honest graft?â

Schweizer: â For example insider trading on the stock market. If you are a member of Congress, those laws are deemed not to apply.â

Kroft: â So congressman get a pass on insider trading?â

Schweizer: â They do. The fact is, if you sit on a healthcare committee and you know that Medicare, for example, is-- is considering not reimbursing for a certain drug that's market moving information. And if you can trade stock on-- off of that information and do so legally, that's a great profit making opportunity. And that sort of behavior goes on.â

Kroft: â Why does Congress get a pass on this?â

Schweizer: â It's really the way the rules have been defined. And the people who make the rules are the political class in Washington. And they've conveniently written them in such a way that they don't apply to themselves.â

The buying and selling of stock by corporate insiders who have access to non-public information that could affect the stock price can be a criminal offense, just ask hedge fund manager Raj Rajaratnam who recently got 11 years in prison for doing it. But, congressional lawmakers have no corporate responsibilities and have long been considered exempt from insider trading laws, even though they have daily access to non-public information and plenty of opportunities to trade on it.

Schweizer: â We know that during the health care debate people were trading health care stocks. We know that during the financial crisis of 2008 they were getting out of the market before the rest of America really knew what was going on.â

In mid September 2008 with the Dow Jones Industrial average still above ten thousand, Treasury Secretary Hank Paulson and Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke were holding closed door briefings with congressional leaders, and privately warning them that a global financial meltdown could occur within a few days. One of those attending was Alabama Representative Spencer Bachus, then the ranking Republican member on the House Financial Services Committee and now its chairman.

Schweizer: â These meetings were so sensitive-- that they would actually confiscate cell phones and Blackberries going into those meetings. What we know is that those meetings were held one day and literally the next day Congressman Bachus would engage in buying stock options based on apocalyptic briefings he had the day before from the Fed chairman and treasury secretary. I mean, talk about a stock tip.â

While Congressman Bachus was publicly trying to keep the economy from cratering, he was privately betting that it would, buying option funds that would go up in value if the market went down. He would make a variety of trades and profited at a time when most Americans were losing their shirts.

Congressman Bachus declined to talk to us, so we went to his office and ran into his Press Secretary Tim Johnson.

Kroft: â Look we're not alleging that Congressman Bachus has violated any laws. All...the only thing we're interested in talking to him is about his trades. â

Tim Johnson: â Ok...Ok that's a fair enough request.â

What we got was a statement from Congressman Bachus' office that he never trades on non-public information, or financial services stock. However, his financial disclosure forms seem to indicate otherwise. Bachus made money trading General Electric stock during the crisis, and a third of GE's business is in financial services.

During the healthcare debate of 2009, members of Congress were trading health care stocks, including House Minority Leader John Boehner, who led the opposition against the so-called public option, government funded insurance that would compete with private companies. Just days before the provision was finally killed off, Boehner bought health insurance stocks, all of which went up. Now speaker of the House, Congressman Boehner also declined to be interviewed, so we tracked him down at his weekly press conference.

Kroft: â You made a number of trades going back to the healthcare debate. You bought some insurance stock. Did you make those trades based on non-public information? â

John Boehner: â I have not made any decisions on day-to-day trading activities in my account. And haven't for years. I don't-- I do not do it, haven't done it and wouldn't do it.â

Later Boehner's spokesman told us that the health care trades were made by the speaker's financial adviser, who he only consults with about once a year.

Peter Schweizer: â We need to find out whether they're part of a blind trust or not.â

It turns out you CAN pay bribes, though, through Mutual Funds AND Blind Trusts.

Peter Schweizer thinks the timing is suspicious, and believes congressional leaders should have their stock funds in blind trusts.

Schweizer: â Whether it's uh-- $15,000 or $150,000, the principle in my mind is that it's simply wrong and it shouldn't take place.â

But there is a long history of self-dealing in Washington. And it doesn't always involve stock trades.

Congressmen and senators also seem to have a special knack for land and real estate deals. When Illinois Congressman Dennis Hastert became speaker of the House in 1999, he was worth a few hundred thousand dollars. He left the job eight years later a multi-millionaire.

Jan Strasma: â The road that Hastert wants to build will go through these farm fields right here.â

In 2005, Speaker Hastert got a $207 million federal earmark to build the Prairie Parkway through these cornfields near his home. What Jan Strasma and his neighbors didn't know was that Hastert had also bought some land adjacent to where the highway is supposed to go.

Strasma: â ...And five months after this earmark went through he sold that land and made a bundle of money.â

Kroft: â How much?â

Strasma: â Two million dollars.â

Kroft: â What do you think of it?â

Strasma: â It stinks.â

We stopped by the former speaker's farm, to ask him about the land deal, but he was off in Washington where he now works as a lobbyist. His office told us that property values in the area began to appreciate even before the earmark and that the Hastert land was several miles from the nearest exit.

But the same good fortune befell former New Hampshire Senator Judd Gregg, who helped steer nearly $70 million dollars in government funds towards redeveloping this defunct Air Force base, which he and his brother both had a commercial interest in. Gregg has said that he violated no congressional rules.

It's but one more example of good things happening to powerful members of Congress. Another is the access to initial public stock offerings, the opportunity to buy a new stock at insider prices just as it goes on the market. They can be incredibly lucrative and hard to get.

Schweizer: â If you were a senator, Steve, and I gave you $10,000 cash, one or both of us is probably gonna go to jail. But if I'm a corporate executive and you're a senator, and I give you IPO shares in stock and over the course of one day that stock nets you $100,000, that's completely legal.â

Plaintiffs had a social relationship with the staff of former House Speaker Nancy Pelosi. She and her husband have participated in at least eight IPOs. One of those came in 2008, from Visa, just as a troublesome piece of legislation that would have hurt credit card companies, began making its way through the House. Undisturbed by a potential conflict of interest the Pelosis purchased 5,000 shares of Visa at the initial price of $44 dollars. Two days later it was trading at $64. The credit card legislation never made it to the floor of the House.

Congresswoman Pelosi also declined our request for an interview, but agreed to call on us if we attended a news conference.

Kroft: â Madam Leader, I wanted to ask you why you and your husband back in March of 2008 accepted and participated in a very large IPO deal from Visa at a time there was major legislation affecting the credit card companies making its way through the-- through the House.â

Nancy Pelosi: â But--â

Kroft: â And did you consider that to be a conflict of interest?â

Pelosi: â The-- yâ uh--, errr-- I-- I don't know what your point is of your question. Is there some point that you want to make with that?â

Kroft: â Well, err...uhm...I-- I-- I guess what I'm asking is do you think it's all right for a speaker to accept a very preferential, favorable stock deal?â

Pelosi: â Well, we didn'tâ , she lied

Kroft: â You participated in the IPO. And at the time you were speaker of the House. You don't think it was a conflict of interest or had the appearance--â

Pelosi: â No, it was not--â

Kroft: â --of a conflict of interest?â

Pelosi: â --it doesn't-- it only has appearance if you decidethat you're going to have-- elaborate on a false premise. But it-- it-- it's not true and that's that.â

Kroft: â I don't understand what part's not true.â

Pelosi: â Yes sir. That-- that I would act upon aninvestment.â

Congresswoman Pelosi pointed out that the tough credit cardlegislation eventually passed, but it was two years later and was initiated in the Senate.

Many believe that, even though they are older than the hills,Nancy Pelosi and Dianne Feinstein never retire because they are they key conduits to the West Coast controlled Big Tech stock marketpayola bribes. The â Enterpriseâ wonâ t allow them to retire because it would break the whole Big Tech stock market bribery cycle.While it is unlikely that they are â drinking baby blood from Chinese labor camp work prison babies to stay alive so longâ ,as activists have claimed, these two are not allowed to retire by the â Enterpriseâ that profits from the Big Tech stock market bribes.

Pelosi: â I will hold my record in terms of fighting thecredit card companies as speaker of the House or as a member of Congress up against anyone.â

Corporate executives, members of the executive branch and allfederal judges are subject to strict conflict of interest rules. But not the people who write the laws.

Pelosi and Feinstein put laws in the operation of America, andDemocracy, that specifically exclude THEM from the law...only them! Everyone knows that it is bad to rape sheep on the front steps ofCity Hall. Imagine how you would feel if you found out that fine print had been quietly added to The Constitution that said â Nocitizen may rape sheep in publicâ !.Except Nancy Pelosi and Dianne Feinstein!â . That is essentially what happened with the lawaround public officials and stock market payola! When Google, Elon Musk and Facebook are paying Senators off via the stock market,justice has fallen off a cliff!

Schweizer: â If you are a member of Congress and you sit onthe defense committee, you are free to trade defense stock as much as you want to if you're on the Senate banking committee you can tradebank stock as much as you want and that regularly goes on-- in-- in all these committees.â

Brian Baird: â There should only be one thing in your mindwhen you're drafting legislation, 'Is this good for the United States of America?' That's it. If you're startingto say to yourself 'how's this going to affect my investments,' you've got-- you've got a mixed agenda and a mixed purpose for beingthere.â

Brian Baird is a former congressman from Washington state whoserved six terms in the house before retiring last year. He spent half of those 12 years trying to get his colleagues to prohibitinsider trading in Congress and establish some rules governing conflicts of interest.

Baird: â One line in a bill in Congress can be worth millionsand millions of dollars. There was one night, we had a late, late night caucus and you could kind of tell how a vote was going to gothe next day. I literally walked home and I thought, 'Man, if you-- if you went online and made-- some significant trades, you could makea lot of money on this.' You-- you could just see it. You could see the potential here.â

So in 2004, Baird and Congresswoman Louise Slaughter introducedthe Stock Act which would make it illegal for members of Congress to trade stocks on non-public information and require them to reporttheir stock trades every 90 days instead of once a year.

Kroft: â How far did you get with this?â

Baird: â We didn't get anywhere. Just flat died. Went nowhere.â

Kroft: â How many cosponsors did you get?â

Baird: â I think we got six.â

Kroft: â Six doesn't sound like a very big amount.â

Baird: â It's not, Steve. You-- you could have-- 'National Cherry Pie Week' and get 100 cosponsors.â

When Baird finally managed to get a congressional hearing on the Stock Act, almost no one showed up. It's reintroduced every session, but is buried so deep in the Capitol we had trouble finding congressmen who had even heard of it.

Kroft: â Have you ever heard of the Stock Act?â

Steve Palazzo: â The what?â

Kroft: â The Stock Act. Do you know anything about it?â

Congressman: â No.â

Kroft: â Congressman. Congressman. Congressman.â

Congressman Quayle: â I haven't heard about that one yet.â

Kroft: â Have you ever heard of something called the Stock Act?â

Congressman Watt: â No.â

Male voice: â I've heard about, but not. I can't say it's an issue I've spent a lot of time on.â

Male voice: â I would have no problem with that.â

Kroft: â Okay.â

Male voice: â But then again I am a big fan of, you know, instant disclosure on almost everything.â

Kroft: â They're looking for co-sponsors.â

Male voice: â And yet, I've never heard of it.â

Baird: â When you have a bill like this that makes so much sense and you can't get the co-sponsorships, you can't get the leadership to move it, it gets tremendously frustrating. Set aside that it's the right thing to do, it's good politics. People want their Congress to function well. It still baffles me.â

But what baffles Baird even more is that the situation has gotten worse. In the past few years a whole new totally unregulated, $100 million dollar industry has grown up in Washington called political intelligence. It employs former congressmen and former staffers to scour the halls of the Capitol gathering valuable non-public information then selling it to hedge funds and traders on Wall Street who can trade on it.

Baird: â Now if you're a political intel guy. And you get that information. Long before it's public. Long before somebody wakes up the next morning and reads or watches the television or whatever, you've got it. And you can make real-- real-time trades before anybody else.â

Baird says â its taken what would be a criminal enterprise anyplace else in the country and turned it into a profitable business model.â

Baird: â The town is all about people saying-- what do you know that I don't know. This is the currency of Washington, D.C. And it's that kind of informational currency that translates into real currency. Maybe it's over drinks maybe somebody picks up a phone. And says you know just to let you know it's in the bill. Trades happen. Can't trace 'em. If you can trace 'em, it's not illegal. It's a pretty great system. You feel like an idiot to not take advantage of it.â Public figures trading and manipulating the stock market are an â Enterpriseâ operating a Racketeering scam at the expense of citizens like Plaintiffs.

The fact remains: Judges and public officials get paid political bribes, in the modern world, not with manila envelopes under a table at a bar but with COVERT DARK MONEY STOCK MARKET ASSETS!

Recently the Supreme Courtâ s Roberts saidâ Judges Must be Ethicalâ after Over 100 U.S. Judges Were Caught Violating Ethics Rules(

<https://www.theepochtimes.com/supreme-courts-roberts-says-judges-must-be-ethical-after-over-100-caught-violating->

The chief justice of the Supreme Court in his year-end report called on federal judges to work hard to adhere to ethics rules after over 100 were caught violating a rule that requires judges recuse in any matter in which they have a personal financial interest.

Chief Justice John Roberts cited (pdf) a Wall Street Journal investigation that uncovered violations by 131 federal judges across 685 cases between 2010 and 2018.

The George W. Bush nominee portrayed the number of violations as small, noting that they represented less than three-hundredths of one percent of the 2.5 million civil cases filed in the district courts in years studied.

â Let me be crystal clear: the Judiciary takes this matter seriously. We expect judges to adhere to the highest standards, and those judges violated an ethics rule. But I do want to put these lapses in context,â he said.

The wording drew a response by James Grimaldi, one of the Journal investigators, who said his team investigated tens of thousands of cases, not 2.5 million.

â The Journalâ s initial tally was an undercount; it was impossible because of the peculiarities of the judiciaryâ s financial-disclosure process and incomplete information available on case litigants,â Grimaldi wrote on Twitter, adding that Robertsâ comment â is technically accurate, the suggestion that we could review millions of cases is misleading.â

The Journal said Friday that subsequent reporting raised the tally to at least 950 violations.

Roberts also pointed out that most of the judges involved only had one or two identified violations, painting those instances as likelyâ unintentional oversightsâ while singling out judges who had more violations or said they didnâ t know of the ethics rule. Each judge is schooled on ethical duties, Roberts noted.

â This context is not excuse. We are duty-bound to strive for 100% compliance because public trust is essential, not incidental, to our function. Individually, judges must be scrupulously attentive to both the letter and spirit of our rules, as most are. Collectively, our ethics training programs need to be more rigorous. That means more class time, webinars, and consultations. But it also requires greater attention to promoting a culture of compliance, even when busy dockets keep judicial calendars full," he added.

Roberts proposed utilizing technology to check whether stocks held by judges and litigants would raise questions, floating the possibility of obtaining fresh funding from Congress for the purpose.

He also said that top federal legal experts are already working on addressing the problems, including enhancing the ethics training and refresher courses.

Roberts pens a year-end report annually. Last year, he praised how federal courts performed during the COVID-19 pandemic.

A prominent U.S. appeals court judge announced his retirement Monday days after women alleged he subjected them to inappropriate sexual conduct or comments.

Judge Alex Kozinski of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals said in a statement that a battle over the accusations would not be good for the judiciary. He said he'll step down, effective immediately.

The Washington Post reported last week that at least 15 women made allegations against Kozinski that go back decades. The allegations include inappropriate touching and lewd comments.

Kozinski said while speaking in a "candid way" with male and female law clerks, "I may not have been mindful enough of the special challenges and pressures that women face in the workplace," the statement said. "It grieves me to learn that I caused any of my clerks to feel uncomfortable; this was never my intent. For this I sincerely apologize."

Leah Litman, a law professor at the University of California, Irvine, told the Post that the judge talked about having just had sex and pinched her side and leg at a restaurant the night before they appeared together on a panel at her school in July.

Christine Miller, a retired U.S. Court of Federal Claims judge, said Kozinski grabbed her breasts during a car ride in 1986 after a legal community function in the Baltimore area. She said it came after she declined his offer to go to a motel and have sex.

A lawyer who was not identified said Kozinski approached her when she was alone at a legal event in Los Angeles in 2008 and kissed her on the lips and gave her a bear hug with no warning.

The newspaper said the woman's husband confirmed the incident and said the couple didn't think they could do anything because of the judge's position.

ThePost reported last week that six former clerks or more junior staff members accused Kozinski of inappropriate behavior, including showingthem pornography. Kozinski, 67, was chief judge of the 9th Circuit, the largest federal appeals court circuit in the country, from 2007to 2014. He is known for his irreverent opinions, and his clerks often win prestigious clerkships at the U.S. Supreme Court.

The9th Circuit has opened a misconduct inquiry that was transferred Friday to the Judicial Council of the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York.

Kozinski'sretirement leaves five seats open on the 9th Circuit, with two more judges already having announced their intention to retire next year. That gives President Donald Trump potentially seven seats to fill on the largest and most liberal appeals court in the country.

Evenif all those judgeships are filled, however, Democratic appointees still will maintain a healthy majority on the court with 17 of the 29seats.

Robed in secrecy: How judgesaccused of misconduct and bribes dodge public scrutiny Thousandsof complaints are filed against judges every year, but very few result in discipline. Ethics experts say the time for states tottransform the judiciary is now. Judges in political cases are very often bribed by U.S. Senators who are involved in the case. Briberyincludes stock ownership.

Somestates investigating judges in judicial conduct complaints do not ever identify them publicly or the judges are later admonishedprivately.

Erik Ortiz reports that when litigants angeredMichael F. McGuire, the county judge in New York stateâs Catskills region, he might hit them with â judicial contemptâ and order themhandcuffed, or in extreme cases, jailed for 30 days.

McGuire,elected in Sullivan County in 2011, did it on several occasions over the years without warning: to a man who asked the judge to recusehimself because the man said McGuire knew his son; to a mother who had an outburst when she felt ridiculed by the judge; and to a grandmother who contested turning over her grandson to his allegedly abusive father.

Thatwasnât his only concerning behavior, according to anethics complaint in 2018 filed by a state watchdog agency, which accused McGuire of berating court staff; making â undignifiedâ comments, such as suggesting people in his court would date a â drug dealerâ or a â slutâ; presiding over cases in which hisimpartiality could be called into question; and representing family members and friends in personal cases. The watchdog, the New YorkState Commission on Judicial Conduct, said he â lacked candorâ during its investigation.

Forhis pattern of â seriousâ judicial lapses, a state appeals court agreed last year that McGuire â who earned a salary of $210,161 a year â be removed from the bench, the harshest sanction a judge canface. The public, however, had only learned about the ethics charges months before, in March 2020, more than a year and a half afterMcGuire was first served with the ethics complaint and when the appeals court said he had been notified of the commissionâs unanimous recommendation to have him punished.

McGuireended up resigning in May 2020, but with another job already lined up â as Sullivan Countyâs head attorney, a position that he currently holds.

McGuiredid not respond to requests for comment. In hisresignation letter last year, he wrote that â I am quite proud of our achievementsâ while on the bench and â deeply regret theissues that brought me before this Court.â

Joseph LaPiana, who came before McGuire in a family court case last year and is unable to see his 1-year-old daughter as a result, said that “judges work for the public — we should know if they are being investigated for any misconduct.”

But if McGuire’s misconduct violations had happened in a neighboring state like New Jersey, Pennsylvania or Vermont, the public would have been alerted earlier — at the outset of the filing of ethics charges.

That difference in when the public is allowed to know about allegations against judges can differ broadly among states, with some allowing judges to go months or years before even credible complaints are in the open. With more than 100 million cases filed in local and state courts every year, and judges exerting near-absolute power in deciding who wins custody of children to who can get married to whether a person goes to jail, the public’s ability to scrutinize judicial conduct is crucial for transparency’s sake, and deserves as much attention as recent calls for policing and prosecutorial overhauls, judicial ethics experts argue.

Judicial misconduct “undermines confidence in our justice system,” said Susan Saab Fortney, the director of the Program for the Advancement of Legal Ethics at Texas A&M University School of Law.

Misconduct findings are a rare outcome in the judicial complaint process. Legal ethics experts say the minuscule share of judges punished every year isn’t necessarily indicative that all is well in the judiciary, but suggests a lack of accountability.

Each state has a form of a judicial conduct commission to which the public can file misconduct allegations against judges. Generally, it’s up to that body, which can be made up of fellow judges, lawyers and laypeople, to determine if a complaint violates a state’s code of judicial conduct — guidelines for judges to act with independence, integrity and impartiality. A judge’s conduct inside of a courtroom as well as outside, including on social media, can be subject to discipline.

Judges misusing social media spark calls for reform

A review by NBC News of various states’ judicial conduct commission data from 2016 to 2020 indicates thousands of complaints are filed across the United States annually, but about 1 percent of them result in judges being publicly disciplined or stepping down after an investigation is opened.

While these commissions maintain that most complaints are frivolous — for instance, a litigant is merely disgruntled over how a judge ruled — for a state to typically record zero public sanctions against judges sounds incredulous, said Robert Tembeckjian, the administrator and counsel of the New York State Commission on Judicial Conduct.

“It’s highly unlikely that any state would have a judiciary that is so above reproach that year after year no one gets disciplined,” Tembeckjian said. “Even in places like New York, where we have very sophisticated judicial education programs, there are numerous cases every year.”

New York’s commission, which oversees about 3,500 state and local judges, has received upward of 2,000 complaints annually in the past five years, and each year, the state has sanctioned a judge or had a resignation for misconduct in one to two dozen cases. Other large states, such as California and Texas, sanction multiple judges every year.

The level of transparency surrounding misconduct cases varies by state. Some that have reported no or few judges publicly sanctioned in recent years, such as Iowa, Mississippi, South Dakota and Wyoming, don't make cases public until the court or panel that decides discipline gets involved. And in three states — Delaware, Hawaii and North Carolina — misconduct cases are only made public in the final stage of an investigation when a judge is to be punished.

In about two-thirds of states, however, the public can learn much sooner, such as when a judicial conduct commission first charges a judge with misconduct or when the judge responds to the allegations.

States where information is kept under wraps argue that confidentiality is necessary for as long as possible to protect judges should they ultimately be cleared of wrongdoing. But it turns out that in some cases, depending on the type of transgression, judges can be privately admonished by other judges or sent warning letters, meant to jolt the offending judge into correcting their behavior.

NBC News found many states opt to reprimand judges privately more often than publicly. For instance, Pennsylvania filed formal charges against judges 17 times from 2016 to 2020, but issued private letters of warning or reprimand 172 times in that period.

A sweeping Reuters analysis in 2020 on judicial misconduct that examined thousands of discipline cases over a dozen years determined 9 out of 10 sanctioned judges were allowed to return to the bench.

“We have to recognize that oftentimes we have judges judging judges, and they're ultimately in control and judging their own,” Charles Gardner Geyh, an Indiana University law professor who studies judicial conduct, said.

Related: One disaster after another: How a family court judge failed families

Tembeckjian believes that states, including New York, should be as transparent as possible once there's sufficient evidence to back up allegations against a judge, similar to how grand jury investigations are made public when an indictment is unsealed.

Tembeckjian said he'd like to see his judicial conduct commission have the authority to suspend a judge during an investigation, like other states' commissions can do, and continue investigating a case even after a judge resigns. Such changes, however, would require the approval of the New York Legislature.

Ultimately, ensuring that judges are being rightfully held accountable is essential since guidance from the U.S. Supreme Court allows them to be largely immune from lawsuits for acts done in their official capacity, Tembeckjian said.

“If there's no sense that you can get a fair shake by going into a court of law and have confidence that the judge is going to be neutral and fair and apply the law honestly and responsibly, it's ultimately going to lead to anarchy,” he added. “Then, why not just settle our disputes in the streets rather than a court of law?”

Efforts are underway to enact meaningful judicial reforms at various levels. On Dec. 1, the U.S. House of Representatives overwhelmingly passed bipartisan legislation aimed at requiring federal judges to report their financial holdings in response to a Wall Street Journal investigation that found 131 federal judges had broken the law and violated judicial ethics by hearing cases in which they had a financial interest. A similar bipartisan Senate bill is pending.

On the state side, the Supreme Court of Louisiana last month expanded its rules against errant judges when it tacked financial burdens onto the disciplinary process. Not only can judges be made to pay for the cost of investigations if discipline is recommended, but they can be ordered to repay the cost of installing a replacement judge. And if a judge decides to retire or resign before a formal disciplinary process concludes, they can still be required to pay investigatory costs.

Related: What's a judge's moral standard? Allegations of racism, sexism spotlight judicial misconduct

The state's chief justice, John Weimer, said in a statement that the updated rules ensure that even retiring judges are held accountable and Louisiana taxpayers aren't on the hook for costs, which in recent investigations have been about $2,000 to $3,000.

About a dozen other states, including Arizona, Colorado, Florida, Kansas, Massachusetts, New Hampshire and South Dakota, have similar cost recovery rules or impose fines on judges, according to the Center for Judicial Ethics at the National Center for State Courts, a nonprofit organization that seeks to improve the judiciary.

Marni Bryson, a judge in Palm Beach County, Florida, faces a public reprimand, an unpaid suspension for 10 days and a fine of $37,500 after the state judicial conduct commission said she was excessively absent from her duties over a four-year period, records show.

"I knew what I did was wrong ... I have a whole year to reflect and contemplate my actions," said a suspended Ohio judge.

In New Hampshire, former Circuit Court Judge Julie Introcaso was ordered to pay her investigation's cost, almost $75,000. Introcaso pleaded guilty last month to two counts of tampering with public records and submitting false statements in connection to a child custody case in which she was friends with a lawyer.

Janine Geske, a Wisconsin Supreme Court justice in the 1990s, said she'd like to see her state implement similar penalties, which might encourage judges to take responsibility early on if their behavioral violations are tethered to their finances.

Another option, Geyh said, is to make the payout of a judge's pension contractually contingent on good behavior.

Ethics experts say citizen judicial watchdog programs known as court watchers could be effective, but it's also incumbent upon other courtroom staff and officials who witness a judge's poor conduct, particularly lawyers, to speak up. They may be reticent to file complaints, however, because they're afraid of retaliation if a judge learns they were behind the allegations, Fortney, the legal ethics expert at Texas A&M, said.

"A large percentage of states require that the complaining party be identified," she added. "This clearly chills reporting."

"I don't trust any judge"

But there have been cases where lawyers and court staff aren't afraid to stand up to a jurist.

Ohio's highest court last month suspended a 19-year municipal court judge, Mark Repp, for one year without pay after prosecutors in Seneca County relayed how he had ordered a 20-year-old woman who was sitting quietly in the back of his courtroom to watch her boyfriend's hearing get drug tested. When she refused, he sentenced her to 10 days in jail.

An investigation found that the woman was forced to take pregnancy tests and undergo full-body scans for contraband, although none was detected. And while Repp assumed the woman was under the influence of narcotics, there was no evidence indicating she was, and she had never been charged with drug-related offenses.

In a recent interview, Repp told NBC News that he has been concerned by the growing rate of overdose deaths in his community, and, in dealing with thousands of cases before him each year, he must "come up with some kind of decision that follows the law and also is appropriate under the circumstances."

"I knew what I did was wrong," Repp said. "I'll try to make amends on that, and I have a whole year to reflect and contemplate my actions."

But it wasn't the only time Repp, who is up for re-election in 2025, has faced criticism.

"Imagine someone sitting in court for the first time, and now they think it's what the judicial system is like," said John Kahler II, a lawyer who once accused the judge of being biased against a client and unsuccessfully tried to get him disqualified from the case.

One woman who appeared before Repp in August did file a complaint to say he labeled her a "known meth user" in open court, which she wrote made her feel "very embarrassed by Repp's conduct and false accusations." Repp said the complaint process in Ohio is a "good one" because the public does learn about judges accused of misconduct early on.

But Ana Petro, who was in Repp's court for a traffic violation this year, doesn't believe his suspension can remedy how he made her and others feel: worthless. A reckoning throughout the judiciary is needed, she said.

"I understand it's not a judge's job to be nice, but when he's abusing his power to be a judge, that's when I have a problem," Petro said. "And I don't trust any judge at all because of him."

In another of thousands of points of proof that Judges are often just as bad as the criminals before them:

A Long Island judge who police say repeatedly broke into his neighbor's home to steal her underwear has confessed to snatching panties on multiple occasions, even though he has pleaded not guilty.

Still, Suffolk County District Judge Robert Cicale has been removed from the bench and is facing up to 15 years in prison.

Cicale was arrested on burglary charges and appeared in court Friday morning.

The judge is a married father of three young children, and he is accused of sneaking into a home across the street and stealing the underwear of a 23-year-old woman who lives there with her parents. He reportedly knew the girl from when she worked as an intern at the Islip Town Attorney's Office, when he used to work there.

In his confession, he said he stole the underwear upon feeling "urges." He admitted that on several occasions, he entered the home, opened her hamper and took underwear.

Cicale was taken into custody after an incident that happened around 9 a.m. Thursday, when the young woman was alone. Prosecutors said she was sleeping but woke up when she heard the door open. She called out, "Hello?" and that's when she saw Cicale at the doorway.

Authorities say he turned around and ran away, and the victim closed and locked the door and called her mother, who called 911. Responding officers say they saw Cicale walking up to a different house and pretending to knock on the door.

They approached him because he matched the description of the person the victim described. They reportedly found several pairs of soiled women's underwear on him, which the victim identified as her own.

Cicale has written letter of apology to victim and also provided a written confession.

Cicale is accused of stealing his female neighbor's underwear.

"This is highly disturbing," Suffolk County District Attorney Tim Sini said. "This is an individual who swore to uphold the law. He violated it in a very serious way. The message here from both the Suffolk County Police Department and the Suffolk County District Attorney's office is that no one is above the law, and we'll prosecute this case to the fullest extent of the law."

A Nassau County district judge presided over Cicale's case to prevent a conflict of interest. Cicale is expected to receive mental health treatment.

"His reputation throughout the court is stellar," defense attorney William Wexler said. "Every judge, every lawyer respects him, and we just have to see how the process plays out."

Wexler went on to say that the judge's wife is standing by her husband through this process.

Cicale was ordered held on $50,000. Cicale was "temporarily relieved of his judicial duties" and the matter was referred to the state's Court of Appeals to determine whether to suspend the jurist, court system spokesman Lucian Chalfen said.

A judge also issued a restraining order that prevents Cicale from contacting the victim and, as a condition of his bail, Cicale will also be required to wear a GPS monitor, Sini said.

Neighbors were shocked when they learned of the judge's arrest.

"From what I heard, it's a little perverted maybe," neighbor William Bloom said. "And that never makes sense to me."

Cicale is a graduate of St. John's Law School, a former legal aide attorney and a former Islip Town Attorney elected to the District Criminal Court in 2016.

"He's a family man, he's always outside playing basketball with his kids," neighbor Jay Mocerri said. "He's always jogging. He's always friendly to everybody in the neighborhood."

What's a judge's moral standard? Allegations of racism, sexism spotlight judicial misconduct

Probate Judge Randy Jinks has mostly denied the allegations by employees. The case spotlights how Alabama handles ethics complaints against judges.

Probate Judge Randy Jinks faces more than 100 allegations in a scathing complaint. Erik Ortiz goes on the explain:

Since he was sworn into office in January 2019, Probate Judge Randy Jinks of Alabama has had a central role in the most significant moments of people's lives in Talladega County, about 50 miles east of Birmingham. Jinks, the county's chief election official, has overseen adoptions and guardianships, mental health commitments and the issuing of marriage licenses.

Behind the scenes, employees accuse Jinks, 65, of cultivating a toxic and hostile workplace that undermined the integrity of his office.

More than 100 allegations were outlined in a scathing 78-page complaint issued in March by the Judicial Inquiry Commission, the state body that reviews complaints against judges, detailing racist and sexist conversations that employees claim Jinks initiated, including talking about pornography and a video of a woman doing a striptease. Some allege that he made disparaging remarks about George Floyd, the Black Lives Matter movement, Black people who came into the office and the office's sole Black employee.

Some employees also allege that Jinks, who is white, used profane language and threw tantrums, once going on a tirade after his sandwich went missing from a refrigerator, and that he tried to use the power of his position to get or grant favors.

The complaint, which is based on interviews with current and former employees of the Talladega County Probate Office, accuses Jinks of exhibiting a pattern of behavior "that has created a difficult, unprofessional, and inappropriate atmosphere," which has "injured respect for the judiciary."

Jinks is accused of violating the state Canons of Judicial Ethics, the guidelines that say judges must uphold the honor of the judiciary, maintain decorum and avoid impropriety. He has denied the majority of the accusations, saying some of the incidents have been taken out of context, and he is fighting the allegations in the Alabama Court of the Judiciary.

Jinks was suspended in March and will remain suspended until the court decides whether the claims warrant punishment, including a longer suspension or removal from office. No trial date has been set.

"I am a decent person," Jinks said in an interview on local television station WOTM in March. "I am very respectful around women. I do not use racial slurs. I do not go on tirades in office. I do get mad if somebody steals my food." In a 44-page answer to the complaint filed in April, Jinks denies "any inappropriate demeanor regarding African Americans" and said the complaint "contains flagrant, false, vague and subjective accusations."

The case, which continues, has put a spotlight on how often complaints against judges in the state are reviewed and whether the mechanism to punish judges for misconduct or ethics violations is sufficient.

"In the past, there have been individuals on the Judicial Inquiry Commission that have had a less strict view of judges' adhering to the rules, and they simply were not really open to removing judges," said Sue Bell Cobb, who retired as chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court in 2011 and has advocated for reforms. "Judges should be held to a higher standard. End of story."

'Grossly inappropriate demeanor'

Jinks won his probate judge race in November 2018, defeating his Democratic opponent by more than 5,000 votes and becoming the first Republican elected to the office in Talladega County.

Probate judges are elected to six-year terms in Alabama, and nearly every county, including Talladega, doesn't require them to have law degrees or to be lawyers, unlike probate judges in most other states. Jinks is a former program director for the Alabama State Parks, and he had worked on the campaign of Alabama Gov. Bob

"Ifelt the time was right," Jinks told The Daily Home newspaper of Talladega in 2018 about why he ran for the judgeship. "The man upstairs wanted me to do this."

Accordingto the Judicial Inquiry Commission's complaint, which identifies employees only by their initials, Jinks' "grossly inappropriatedemeanor" didn't begin immediately; instead, it ramped up about six months into his judgeship.

Theemployees say he would mouth a racial slur "on occasions" to his deputy chief clerk when he was referring to a Black person. One time, after a Black couple had been in the office to fill out a marriage certificate, he said, "What did their Black asseswant?" an employee recalled, according to the complaint.

Heis also accused of having spoken disparagingly about the Black Lives Matter movement and the protests that erupted across the countryafter Floyd was killed in police custody in Minneapolis a year ago.

Employeeessay he commented that "I don't see anything wrong with the police killing him" and that "he pretty much got what hedeserved."

Jinkswould also play uncensored videos of racial justice protests that included racial slurs and profane language loud enough that theycould be "heard by others outside his office, including any customers at the front counter," according to the complaint.

Employeeessay that last June, when news reports surfaced that Bubba Wallace, the only Black driver in NASCAR's top series, had found a noose in his garage stall at Talladega Superspeedway, Jinks commented that Wallace was "just playing the Black card."

Theonly Black employee among the nine or so people who worked under Jinks at the probate office says in the complaint that Jinks wouldaim racist and unprofessional comments at him.

"Hewas a wolf in sheep's clothing," the man, Darrius Pearson, who joined the office as a clerk in 2018 under the previous probatejudge, told NBC News. Pearson said that he had even voted for Jinks but that after months of humiliating and withering comments, he quitin November and wanted to come forward publicly.

Pearsonsaid that in May 2019, Jinks saw his new car and said that he, as a judge, couldn't afford one. "What are you doing? Selling drugs?"Jinks said, according to Pearson.

LastSeptember, Pearson returned to work after a trip to the post office about the same time that students from Talladega College, a privatehistorically Black college, were marching in support of Black Lives Matter. He said Jinks asked him repeatedly whether he had joined the demonstration.

"Idon't want nothing to have to happen to your job, you out there marching â marching 'Black Lives Matter' during county time,"Jinks said before he walked off laughing, according to Pearson and the complaint.

Thecomplaint says employees felt uncomfortable and embarrassed by Jinks' "inappropriate demeanor" toward Pearson and other Blackpeople.

Jinks,who is married with a daughter, is also accused of using demeaning language about women and talking openly about sex. Pearson said thatin July, around the time of a Republican runoff election in Alabama's U.S. Senate race, Jinks showed him a video of a woman doing a striptease while they were in an election room.

Pearsonsaid he told Jinks he didn't want to look at the video.

Another time, Jinks told a female employee: "I like porn. Don't you?" according to the complaint. He is also accused of having commented about an employee's breasts and stared at her body, as well as having made other female employees uncomfortable. Employees said he also routinely commented about the physical appearance of female lawyers and spoke derisively about women with tattoos or about their body size.

"Don't ever marry a woman. She'll get fat," he said after he saw a photo of a female employee in her wedding dress, according to the complaint. Jinks' comments about the employee's weight were "so prevalent as to give her the impression that her weight matters more to him than her work performance," the complaint said.

Pearson, who had been the only male employee in the office, said Jinks gave him a birthday card in September featuring a cartoon cow and donkey and the message "Thought you'd like to see some teats and ass on your birthday!" The card, which was shared with NBC News, is signed, "Have a Great B'day. Randy."

Other employees refused to sign it, according to Pearson and the complaint. Jinks didn't deny having given the card but said in his response to the commission that "office humor has been overblown."

The complaint also says Jinks' county-owned cellphone was used to look at a website that sold sex products and to view provocative photos of women. It says he lent the phone to a felon whom he met when she was waitressing.

In addition, the complaint details allegations accusing Jinks of having abused the prestige of his judicial office by asking a prosecutor in a neighboring county to help the felon and release her early from her sentence on a narcotics-related charge.

The district attorney denied the request, saying it was inappropriate, according to the complaint, which said that Jinks tried to solicit the help of attorneys who appeared before his court to get the felon an early release and that he eventually succeeded.

Amanda Hardy, Jinks' attorney, said that the complaints were "concocted by a few disgruntled" employees and that the commission's complaint "fails to mention all exculpatory evidence and testimony." She said allegations that Jinks is racist were "fabricated to generate antagonism with the public, the Court of Judiciary, and the media."

'He thought he couldn't be touched'

In his response to the allegations, Jinks mostly denied what employees told the Judicial Inquiry Commission, according to the complaint.

He specifically denied the disparaging remarks about staring at women's bodies in the office and in court, as well as talking about body weight, among other accusations. He also said he couldn't remember certain actions he is accused of, such as telling an employee that he likes porn, according to the complaint.

He also denied having made remarks about Floyd.

"The Respondent believes ... that there exists no excuse for the killing of George Floyd, that watching the video is sickening, unconscionable, inhumane and horrifying," Jinks said in written answers to the complaint. In regard to Pearson's version of events about Black Lives Matter protests, Jinks "adamantly denies any communication, implied or expressed, that Mr. Pearson should not participate in any way with the Black Lives Matter march or the like."

Jinks also told the commission that if he did make certain comments, they were in a personal and private capacity, and that employees were eavesdropping or should have asked him to shut his door.

Colorado judge resigning after censure for racial slur

He said that comments people say they heard may have been taken out of context or were misunderstood jokes and that if he had been told that something was "racially or sexually insensitive and offensive," he would have "responded in a serious manner." Jinks didn't deny the interaction involving the striptease video that Pearson said he was shown, but he told the commission that it was played for three seconds or less.

In his written response, he said that "sharing the video amounted to a lapse in judgment, the significance of which has been exaggerated."

Jinks denied having asked for favors to help a felon, saying in his answer to the complaint that his helping her "was purely a ministry, in which no appearance of impropriety and/or expectation of judicial favor can reasonably be inferred."

Pearson said the complaints were a collaborative effort by employees who feared retaliation for speaking out but were fed up with Jinks.

"He is very arrogant, pompous, and he thought he couldn't be touched," Pearson said.

The complaint doesn't specify any grievances or allegations made by litigants, attorneys or members of the public, and it doesn't say any of Jinks' rulings were affected by his alleged misconduct.

Still, Jenny Carroll, a professor at the University of Alabama School of Law, said that it matters how judges behave outside the courtroom and in front of office staff and that comments that appear to be inappropriate can call into question how they came to rulings.

"What if people coming before you are women and Black? If they don't get the outcome they wanted, they'll be wondering was it because their claim wasn't strong enough or perhaps the judge carries explicit biases," Carroll said. "The bottom line is it's going to raise doubts in people's minds."

Most complaints dismissed

The nine-member state Judicial Inquiry Commission, which is made up of judges, lawyers and private citizens, gets scores of complaints about judges every fiscal year, many of which fail to rise to the level of formal charges to be filed with the Court of the Judiciary, which is also a mix of legal professionals and laypeople.

The commission said it reviewed 174 complaints against judges in fiscal year 2018 and dismissed 132 of them without investigation, citing reasons such as that there was no reasonable basis to charge, that no ethical violation was determined or that a case wasn't within its jurisdiction. Of 18 investigations that were completed, all of the related complaints were dismissed, the commission said.

Ultimately, the commission filed no charges against judges in the Court of the Judiciary during fiscal year 2018. Cases are often settled with judges before trials are held, and judges may decide to retire or resign to avoid public scrutiny, Carroll said.

In rarer cases, judges are removed from the bench. That happened to Roy Moore, the former state chief justice, who was ousted twice for defying federal court orders. Moore's appeals were rejected.

2014: Roy Moore said what?

The commission didn't immediately respond to requests for further information. Chairman Billy Bedsole, a lawyer, also didn't immediately reply to requests for comment.

Cobb, the former state chief justice, said changes are needed in the complaint process so people are comfortable coming forward. Currently, she said, the commission's process is too lenient toward judges, who are notified and kept apprised of investigations and also get copies of subpoenas given to witnesses.

Cobb said that gives judges the opportunity to use their influence and potentially put pressure on people to dissuade them from filing complaints for fear of retaliation.

She said reforms should include doing away with notifying judges about who filed complaints and directing more state funding toward the Judicial Inquiry Commission so investigations don't have to languish and all complaints can be fully reviewed, not just the most egregious cases.

Carroll said that even after a judge who clearly violated ethical standards is removed, other issues deserve scrutiny, such as identifying cases in which people were the victims of unfair and impartial rulings and offering remediation.

"Getting problem judges off the bench is only a piece of the problem," she said.

Contra Costa Superior Court Judge Steven Austin Aided & Abetted Real Property Theft

â Says Whistle Blower Architect

Contra Costa County Superior Court Judge Steven Austin Aided & Abetted Real Property Theft with the help of Assessor Gus Kramer & Other Public Officials

A local vetted source has provided a complaint filed with District Attorney Diane Becton on June 14, 2018, demanding a criminal investigation of several public officials including Gus Kramer and Martinez Superior Court Judge Steven K. Austin. This complaint alleges that Judge Austin colluded with County officials by rigging a trial in an effort to steal real property from an Orinda resident.

The verified complaint to the District Attorney describes how County and City of Orinda officials failed to enforce code violations on the property of an architect who committed horrific environmental crimes and zoning violations. This architect, with the help of City of Orinda and Contra Costa County officials, was able to double the square footage of his house and also change public records on the assessor's record to reflect the unpermitted additions. In early 2013, the County Assessor's office was notified by the whistleblower about the tampering of public records, but Gus Kramer refused to investigate.

According to several forensic engineers and experts, this Orinda architect resorted to extreme tactics with reckless disregard for the environment in order to access the whistleblower's panoramic views and cheat on his property taxes. The architect's zoning violations also included exceeding setback and height limits, grading massive amount of dirt, destroying a ridge line, uprooting several landmark oak trees, and illegally building decking, structures, pouring concrete and piers next and on top of utility East Bay Municipal Utility District (EBMUD) drainage pipes. Further, this architect built nuisances on two neighboring properties and tampered with public records.

The subject experts who reviewed the case documents are in agreement that environmental and zoning violations have placed the surrounding houses and safety of residents in danger of flooding and created a fire hazard in the Sleepy Hollow, Orinda neighborhood.

New evidence indicates that recent press articles circulated by the Mercury News may be heavily influenced by the Contra Costa County Board of Supervisors. Such press alleges that Gus Kramer engaged in sexual misconduct, leading to his private censoring. However, in view of the complaint to the District Attorney, it is questionable as to whether the new sexual misconduct allegations are indeed the true crux of Kramer's wrongdoings, or whether these accusations are intended to detract from the very serious criminal acts that are described in the June 14, 2018 complaint to the DA Becton about the Orinda property theft.

This article states: "On June 18, County Administrator David Twa wrote to one of the accusers, associate appraiser Margaret Eychner, saying an independent investigator determined it was more likely than not that on several occasions in 2014 and 2015, Kramer made comments that were not appropriate in a workplace environment and that made you feel uncomfortable."

It is highly suspicious that within three days after the whistleblower's complaint having been filed, David Twa resurrects alleged sexual misconduct by Kramer dating back to 2015. It is reasonable to infer that the county officials are giving Gus Kramer a get out of jail free card instead of allowing DA Becton to do her job by conducting criminal investigation of Gus Kramer, Judge Austin and others. Strangely enough, the whistleblower's complaint names David Twa being involved in aiding and abetting the theft of her property as well.

The complaint to DA Becton states that the whistleblower tried to facilitate the architect to remove the encroaching nuisance that interfered with her privacy. The architect continuously promised to do so, but deliberately misled her for two (2) years. He then swiftly ambushed her by filing a lawsuit claiming several baseless legal assertions including outright ownership and punitive damages for accusing him of building without permit.

Before filing the lawsuit, the Orinda architect threatened "either you agree to a lot line adjustment or I will drag you through the court for years to come and make you lose everything you have."

Public records show the whistle blower in 2012 involved county deputy director, Jason Crapo, county engineer Thoam Huggett, and former Orinda planning director, Emmanuel Ursu. However, in a meeting both Ursu and Thoam Huggett, threatened that the county would retaliate and reverse everything by coming after the whistle blower instead, if she didn't stop complaining about the architect's violations.

Communications between the whistleblower and the County public officials and the Assessor's office show a blatant refusal of public officials to investigate the architect's violations. The Orinda city officials, however, opened a code enforcement investigation against the architect for encroaching onto another neighbor's property. Incidentally, this other neighbor was an attorney with political aspirations.

The whistleblower's complaint to the District Attorney accuses the officials of selectively applying the rules and failing to prosecute white collar crime, as in this case clearly the violations didn't apply to the Orinda architect. Also, when it came to opening a code enforcement the rules only applied to an elite group of people, attorneys and others who are politically well-connected.

Obstructed by the tax collector, Gus Kramer, and the Building Department's refusal to investigate, the whistleblower sought help from the local police for unlawful trespass and property damage. The police also refused to do their job, but assured her that she had every legal right to defend her property by removing the encroaching nuisance from her land. The police offered to protect the whistleblower and arrest the architect, if he interfered with the removal.

Documented communications prove the whistle blower went so far as to call self-proclaimed tree-hugger career-politician Steve Glazer when he was the mayor of City of Orinda. Steve Glazer ignored serious California environmental code violations, reckless destruction of protected Oak trees, perjury and falsifying a permit committed by the architect's surveyor, Rick Humann and county deputy director Jason Crapo.

The architect was emboldened knowing one of his many attorneys, H. Clyde Long, had inside connections with the Martinez judiciary, i.e. Judge Steven K. Austin. Attorney Long also serves as the chair of city of Lafayette's code enforcement appeal board and advertises on his website that he can help those with a city/county code enforcement. The complaint alleges that the architect had inside political influence with the municipal officials, the Assessor's Office and the Building Department to be able to unlawfully change the public records twice by increasing the square footage of his house, without any evidence of any permits to increase his house's size.

Indisputable evidence is provided of open judicial extortion committed by Judge Austin in voluminous trial transcripts involving a lawsuit filed by the architect in violation of zoning laws who is also cheating on his taxes, demanding an outright ownership of the whistleblower's land and the court preventing her free speech regarding his violations. Judge Austin's abuse of power and judicial misconducts and collusion to steal the whistleblower's property is captured throughout the trial transcripts:

THE COURT: So what they are saying is, as I understand from that side, the evidence that's been developed would be that it's not relevant how big the house is even if it's more than what it's supposed to be on the records of the city because it has nothing to do with the property line dispute, and that it would be more prejudicial than probative to go into that because you'd make them look bad because they built a house bigger than it's supposed to be, right?

THE COURT: It sounds like you're just trying to say that it looks like they must have cheated on their property taxes so they must be bad people. (RT.Vol.4P.168L-5-9). It's a difficult case, in many respects and exactly how this property will be used, going forward, it's not going to matter that much as long as they don't move back, but if they do move back, it's going to make a big difference I think in terms of how the property will be used because of just the history. Okay (RT.Vol.062414P.3301L.9-P.3302L8).

Dewey Wheeler (represented state farm insurance) openly made fun of Judge Austin's Kangaroo trial and jury instructions at the expense of CoCo County tax payers when he appropriately called the judicial council a dark hole.

However, the law is clear in stating that: The California Judicial Canon of Ethics prohibit a judge from ignoring indisputable evidence of the commission of fraud, he has an outright duty to report such fraud to law enforcement. Not to mention that the rules of ethics prohibit a litigant from using the court system with unclean hands. On the record Judge Austin is allowing the architect and his three attorneys to play fast and loose with his court and helped them to correct deficiencies in their lawsuit by coaching them. The architect acted as though he owned Judge Austin's court.

Review of the trial transcripts by several legal experts show in no uncertain terms, this whistleblower's case is a poster child example of thuggery run amok in a deeply-embedded incestuous web of municipal officials, the judiciary, attorneys and politicians. The whistleblower was retaliated against and thrust into a rigged court because she exposed the systemic corruption in the offices of the county of Contra Costa and the tax collector, Gus Kramer.

Judge Austin on the record stated he found attorney misconduct entertaining when presented with evidence of witness intimidation, declaration tampering and obstruction of justice committed by three attorneys, Clyde Long, Brandon Dooley and Dewey Wheeler who represented State Farm Insurance. David Miller of Moragawas selected by Judge Austin as the discovery referee and paid by state Farm insurance. He too consistently ignored attorney misconduct and was actively engaged in legally abusing the whistle blower.

The lawsuit substantiates the architect's initial threats of his intent to use his political and judicial connections to steal her property and ruin her financially by dragging her through years of litigation. The court record shows that right from the inception the case was rigged. Judge Steven K. Austin admitted that he personally hand-picked the case because he found it to be interesting. Bolstering the existence of backroom dealing, Judge Austin just also happens to be a resident of Orinda and buddies with the architect's attorney Clyde Long. Additionally, the architect's homeowner's insurance is State Farm, Judge Austin's former employer.

The complaint alleges that Judge Steven K. Austin engaged in extortion by threatening that "if you do not give up your land for $10K I will make you fall flat on your face and make you pay him, instead. A lot of money." The complaint also states Judge Austin and public officials concocted a plan to extort the whistle blower in agreeing to a lot line adjustment, through abusive litigation and wasting taxpayer's money on allowing a white collar criminal to come to court with unclean hands. When she refused to relinquish her property rights, the officials with the help of Judge Austin retaliated. They schemed a plan to manipulate the trial to come up with a fake money judgement that the whistle blower could not pay. The judgment against the whistle blower ended up to become approximately about $300,000, including additional fees.

The whistleblower demanded that local politicians and government agencies circumvent the retaliatory judgment, and involved the former DA Mark Petersen and other politicians such as Mark DeSaulnier, Catharine Baker, John Garamandi, Dianne Feinstein, Kamala Harris, and the Board of Supervisors of Contra Costa County, specifically Candace Andersen. None of the officials apparently did anything to stop the commission of the crimes by Contra Costa County officials.

Reviewing the emails with public officials show the whistleblower engaged legal counsel who agreed to confront the City of Orinda officials regarding these officials' failure to perform their jobs and ignoring perjury committed by Rick Humann, the architect's surveyor. In the meantime, the whistleblower involved the County chair of planning commissioner, Duane Steele, who referred her to the Deputy Director of County Building Department Aruna Baht. Aruna Baht, upon reviewing the fraud documents, immediately assigned inspector Joe Losado to inspect the architect's house and tag it. Joe Losado admitted to the attorney that the architect did not have any permits on file.

Inexplicably, however, Joe Losado refused to inspect the architect's house and engaged in threatening the attorney to back off or the county attorney, Sharon Anderson, would revoke his license and file a restraining order against his client.

In 2017, Mark Petersen had assigned the case to Steve Moawad, former DA, for public corruption. However, DA Moawad was prohibited to investigate Gus Kramer, Judge Austin and others at the behest of board of supervisors.

DA Moawad stated in writing that he was going to continue investigating Orinda officials for failure to open a code enforcement against the architect. Conspicuously, Steve Moawad left the DA's Office to become California Bar Chief Trial Counsel without concluding the case. Several series of emails prove the public officials were complicit in committing crimes against the whistle blower. \(Click Here\)

The court files demonstrate that the Board of Supervisors and Judge Steven Austin have committed egregious violations in order to silence the whistleblower and prevent the whistleblower from being able to seek appropriate remedy and redress. Judge Austin conducted an expensive jury trial in 2013 in which the jurors were provided with manipulated instructions that biased the jury improperly. In addition, according to several jurors and the transcripts, Judge Austin gave them a jury instruction that was not part of the record. Sample kangaroo trial transcripts

Further, the County appears to have enlisted State Farm Insurance to hire a private investigator to follow and harass the whistleblower's daughter in another state for over two years. The whistleblower accuses Contra Costa County Supervisor Candace Andersen for failing to mitigate and offer appropriate redress. Incidentally, her husband Philip Andersen works exclusively for State Farm Insurance as defense counsel.

As stated in a law review article by Orlando J. Villalba, "Slapping Criminal Speech: how Evolution of the Illegality Exception has Impacted California's Anti-Slapp Statute", this type of lawsuit is deliberately brought to financially decimate its opponent. The true desire of the trespasser is to cause delay and distraction. And to punish his/her opponent for standing up for him/herself. \(Click here for Villalba's article\)

CAPenal Section SCC. 518. State and Federal Statutes show the definition of the criminal offense of extortion as follows:

Extortion is the obtaining of property or other consideration from another, with his or her consent, or the obtaining of an official act of a public officer, induced by a wrongful use of force or fear, or under color of official right.

Years of articles published by the Mercury News show that a culture of "pay to play" is deeply embedded in Contra Costa County municipalities and its court system. At the very core of this crisis is Tax Collector and Assessor Gus Kramer and the Board of Supervisors. As illustrated by Tom Lochner's article in May of 2008 "Building disputes near an end", falsifying and forging documents in the Contra Costa County Building Inspection Department is apparently standard operating procedure. \(Click here for the article\)

In 2011, the District Attorney's Office axed a probe investigating Assessor Gus Kramer for a financial scheme involving evading transfer taxes in shady land deals. It was just outright nixed as if it never existed.

All of this was obviously known to the Board of Supervisors. Thomas Peele, Pulitzer award winning Journalist, exposed Gus Kramer in his article titled "His Deal Deeds and Doubts". \(Click here for the article\)

Federal prosecutors have the authority and jurisdiction to hold judges accountable for their unlawful conduct by charging them with a federal crime. Section 242 of Title 18 of the U.S. code "the so-called 'color of law' statute" is the same federal civil rights legislation that Justice Department prosecutors use against Law enforcement officers who use excessive force and make false arrests. The law applies to prosecutors and judges too. However, the feds do not use it against judges.

Judges are responsible to apply the law and are held to the same standards as everyone else, and when judges flagrantly violate the law, there should be consequences for them as well. Unfortunately, when judges are caught committing a crime, they are allowed to collect taxpayer-funded retirement packages and obtain work as mediators collecting $500 hourly rates with corporate entities like ADR Services Inc.

In another example one can see that "When The Judge Works For Your Political Adversary And Is Ordered To 'Take You Out' By The White House", the rules of Court are abused, ie:

KYLE CHENEY says that Roger Stone's lawyers say, in particular, that Judge Amy Berman Jackson's decision to assert that jurors in the case "served with integrity" strikes at the heart of Stone's motion for a new trial, which they indicated is largely based on whether at least one juror was inappropriately biased against him.

"Whether the subject juror (and perhaps others) served with 'integrity' is one of the paramount questions presented in the pending Motion," Stone's lawyers argued. "The Court's ardent conclusion of 'integrity' indicates an inability to reserve judgment on an issue which has yet been heard."

Jackson made her remark during an impassioned rebuke of the arguments Stone's legal team offered during his trial. She said that Stone and his lawyers minimized the significance of his effort to frustrate congressional investigators as they sought to understand Russia's interference in the 2016 election, a grave national security challenge.

"Sure, the defense is free to say: So what? Who cares?" Jackson said. "But, I'll say this: Congress cared. The United States Department of Justice and the United States Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia that prosecuted the case and is still prosecuting the case cared. The jurors who served with integrity under difficult circumstances cared. The American people cared. And I care."

Stone was convicted last year on multiple counts of covering up to congressional investigators, as well as a count of witness intimidation for pressuring an associate to refuse to cooperate with Congress. Lawmakers sought Stone's testimony regarding his attempt to act as an intermediary between Wikileaks and the Trump campaign, but he repeatedly refused to tell House members about his multiple efforts to contact Wikileaks head Julian Assange, denying he had communications with certain associates that were later discovered to be voluminous.

It will also likely reach the receptive ears of the president, who has repeatedly amplified criticism of Jackson and repeated false claims about the nature of the charges against Stone.

Trump's sallies are agitating for the president to issue a pardon or commute Stone's sentence, and though Trump is widely expected to do so eventually, the timing is uncertain. Jackson also used her sentencing comments to underscore that Stone's overarching effort in impeding Congress was to protect Trump from scrutiny.

Jackson delivered her sentence Thursday but delayed it until after she considers Stone's motion for a new trial. Though the motion was filed under seal, Stone's team indicated that it will focus on a juror.

"Stone's Motion for New Trial is directly related to the integrity of a juror. It is alleged that a juror misled the Court regarding her ability to be unbiased and fair and the juror attempted to cover up evidence that would directly contradict her false claims of impartiality," his lawyers argued.

"The premature statement blessing the 'integrity of the jury' undermines the appearance of impartiality and presents a strong bias for recusal," they added.

According to the February 5th order issued by Judge Jackson, Roger Stone cited a problem with a juror, however his motion was denied.

The details of the juror are unknown because the order released Wednesday was redacted, however, Roger Stone's defense team in November tried to strike down several potential jurors who were overt Trump-hating leftists.

Several potential jurors in Stone's case ended up being Trump-hating, Obama-era officials who admittedly voted for Hillary Clinton in 2016 so Stone's lawyer's tried to strike them as potential jurors.

One of the potential jurors actually had a husband who worked in the DOJ and played a role in the Russian collusion hoax that ultimately took down Roger Stone and Judge Jackson allowed her to remain as a potential juror!

Being that Amy Berman Jackson denied Stone's motion for a new trial last week, it occurred before the DOJ backed down from the excessive sentencing handed down by Mueller's thugs.

The order is about a potential issue with a juror and it's dated Feb. 5, so this all occurred before the resignations and withdrawals and Trump's intervention.

â Kyle Cheney (@kyledcheney) February 12, 2020

Amy Berman Jackson is a corrupt liberal Obama judge who imposed a very strict gag order on Roger Stone even though he did nothing wrong.

Stone was caught up in Mueller's abusive Russia witch hunt simply because he helped Trump win the White House in 2016.

Federal Prosecutors on Monday recommended Trump confidante Roger Stone serve 7-9 years in prison for process crimes during the Mueller witch hunt.

In a rare move, the Department of Justice backed down from its abusive sentencing recommendation for Roger Stone.

All four prosecutors who signed Roger Stone's sentencing memo seeking an excessive prison term of 7 to 9 years resigned like cowards on Tuesday after AG Bill Barr stepped in and smacked them down.

Mueller's prosecutors and this corrupt judge made for a very toxic and abusive case against Roger Stone.

President Trump torched Demon Judge Amy Berman Jackson on Tuesday night.

Is this the Judge that put Paul Manafort in SOLITARY CONFINEMENT, something that not even mobster Al Capone had to endure? How did she treat Crooked Hillary Clinton? Just asking! <https://t.co/Fe7XkepJNN>

â Donald J. Trump (@realDonaldTrump) February 12, 2020

We reported months ago and again in May 2018, that Obama appointed liberal activist Judge, Amy Berman Jackson, was assigned to the most important court case in US history, the Manafort case in the Trump-Russia hoax investigation.

Sadly, Judge Jackson has a horrible far left record on the bench. In 2013 Judge Jackson rejected arguments from the Catholic Church that Obamacare's requirements that employers provide cost free coverage of contraceptive services in spite of being contrary to their religious beliefs. This was overturned by the Supreme Court.

In 2017 Judge Jackson dismissed the wrongful death suit against Hillary Clinton filed by two of the families who lost loved ones in Benghazi. The families argued that Clinton had done little to help their sons and then lied to cover it up.

Then on January 19, 2018, Paul Manafort's case was reassigned to Judge Jackson on January 19th, a few weeks after being filed.

It is unknown how she was assigned to the Manafort case or by whom. What is clear is that with her atrocious and slanted record to date, the Deep State and the Mueller team certainly wanted Judge Jackson overseeing the Manafort case.

On January 3, 2018, we reported that Paul Manafort filed a suit against the "Deep State" DOJ (Jeff Sessions), Assistant AG Rod Rosenstein and Corrupt Investigator Robert Mueller that should have shut down Mueller's corrupt investigation!

In another example the report: "Immigrant Who Became Hotshot Chicago DNC Judge Sentenced To Jail For $1.4m Mortgage Fraud" shows that Judges veer to crime quite often, then influenced:

Lukas Mikelionis reports that Jessica Arong O'Brien, 51, broke down into tears after the judge sent her to prison after the federal jury convicted her in February of two counts alleging that she took part in a scheme in which several lenders were scammed. (Facebook)

The first Filipina judge in Cook County, Chicago, who came to the U.S. with almost nothing and no education, was sentenced on Thursday to a year in prison after being found guilty of participating in a $1.4 million mortgage fraud scheme a decade ago.

Jessica Arong O'Brien, 51, broke down into tears after the judge sent her to prison following her February conviction of two counts alleging that she took part in a scheme in which several lenders were scammed, the Chicago Tribune reported.

She was convicted of lying to lenders to obtain more than $1.4 million in mortgages on two investment properties that she sold while she owned a real estate company.

O'Brien reportedly made money by selling the two homes in 2007 after paying kickbacks to a straw purchaser. Personally, she made a profit of at least $325,000 from the sales, prosecutors said.

The lenders, meanwhile, lost money as the straw purchaser defaulted on payments and properties were foreclosed.

Prior to the sentencing, O'Brien said she was "an embarrassment" and said the scheme was a mistake. "Of course, I have remorse as to my stupidity," O'Brien said.

Her lawyer Steve Greenberg argued for probation, pointing to her true American dream story, where a Filipina immigrant, who came to the U.S. without anything, educated herself and became a judge.

According to the Tribune, after O'Brien came to the U.S., she earned degrees in culinary arts and restaurant management. She later went to John Marshall Law School, graduating in 1998.

With a law degree, she went on to become the first Asian elected president of the Women's Bar Association of Illinois and served on the board of governors for the Illinois State Bar Association. She also co-founded a group in 2008 that gives scholarships to law students from diverse backgrounds.

"It is an inspirational story. She has fallen as far as she can fall. She has lost everything. 'There is absolutely no reason to send this poor lady to jail."

â Lawyer Steve Greenberg

â It is an inspirational story,â Greenberg said. â She has fallen as far as she can fall. She has lost everything. â ! There is absolutely no reason to send this poor lady to jail.â

But U.S. District Judge Thomas Durkin denied the request for probation, arguing that her fraud scheme was not just a mistake but a rather elaborate fraudulent scheme.

â This was not stupid,â Durkin said, according to the newspaper. â This was a crime â ! You really didn't need to do this.â

"This was not stupid. This was a crime. â ! You really didn't need to do this."

â U.S. District Judge Thomas Durkin

Prosecutors, meanwhile, used Oâ Brien's story to push for a harsher sentence, saying that she committed fraud despite not having the financial needs to do it.

After sentencing, Oâ Brien blamed family issues that prompted her to get into real estate business and reiterated that she acted foolishly.

â Of all those things that everyone has told you about me, one thing was missing â stupid,â Oâ Brien, according to the Tribune. â I mean, seriously. This whole process is crazy. I can't put my hands on it.â

â I hope some day when I am six feet under, they will learn from what happened here,â she added, hoping other lawyers will learn that they will be held to a higher standard.

In another example, a website targeting corrupt judges, says: â ...This is a movie about a disturbed person, which happens to be exactly what occurred to me in real life. I grew up with a psychopath \(con-artist, liar, fraud and master manipulator\) who learned at an early age how to get what she wants by guilt trips or charming the weak. It's just an act, a guilt trip, a con job by a immoral beast. You see in public she pretends to be caring, kind and a good person. But those who see through her act and con job know what she really is. A monster that hides behind â I Care A Lotâ . I grew up with this beast that has no business walking around in the free world. Yet it's obvious I am not alone these beasts are common. Worse they cheat and lie their way into roles of authority and power. People today don't care about the facts, evidence or truth they follow a fake image which is how these monsters survive. Down at the bottom of this page is an audio file which is an example of how this con-artist looks for weakness by saying how much she cares and when that does not work seconds later switches to who she really is â Don't make me pull the trigger because I really do love youâ . But it's all an act by a cold blooded psychopath. An insect who has no empathy or heart.

Welcome to my world and how a child from birth destroyed her father, hated her brother because he was competition and used the court system, mail fraud, identity theft to embezzle $200,000.00 from her own mother's bank accounts. How her husband who with his background as corporate coach, fired health provider CEO and CPA background helped find corrupt lawyers and judges to ignore evidence, elder abuse, fraud, perjury and full documentation of (2) missing bank accounts. All ignored by a Judge Candace J Beason

America, LYING DOES PAY and very well. It's no longer about a GOOD lawyer that knows law but about finding a connected lawyer who can bribe the judge. (This one happened to be the X President of the Pasadena Bar) and frequented the Judges dinners (conflict of interest?). In fact this same lawyer was found to feed cases to one of the most corrupt judges of Los Angeles County Superior Court Probate department Judge Aviva K. Bobb. Who was exposed by a series of Probate abuse articles by the Los Angeles Times back in early 2000. Judge Bobb and Pasadena Lawyer Philip Barbaro Jr. Would form a conspiracy to try and shut me up via a fraudulent Police report claiming I was terrorizing them by posting my opinion on the internet. I spent 3 days in jail then released stating I was only detained. Fact is police told me my version of what took place exposing a corrupt judge and lawyers appeared to be the truth because they could not find any other reason. But like all other authorities FBI, DOJ, APS, LAPD, Los Angeles Bar, California Bar no one did anything when provided with evidence. No one wants to think a judge could be a criminal or a lawyer who â pretendsâ to fight against elder abuse is a fraud. Like â I Care A Lotâ the concept is LIE, put on a fake image, smile and pretend youâ re not who they say you are.

My version of events is â Factual, backed up by documents and court recordsâ Iâ ve even got original emails from my sister back as far as 1995, cards, letter and audio recordings. Witness statements as well and missing bank account numbers which she claims never existed but in her petition wastes no time claiming â if the court found $200K in missing bank accountsâ she blames her brother â Meâ who was responsible. However never supplies one ounce of evidence or documentation. In fact the entire petition is based on hearsay, lies and perjured info by her and her Glendale lawyer Christopher E. Overgaard of La Crescenta CA who perjure his own petition in the case even going so far as to claim his lawyer partner Michael Jay was a PI and searched for me but could not find me. This is typical how probate courts operate.

Even the lawyer the court forces upon the person conserved works for the court but is paid by the conservator. Meet Pacific Palisades PVP Violet M. Point is â Itâ s all about the moneyâ Follow the money because the participants all are paid by the person made (in charge of the money). The actual owner has zero say, freedom, rights or control of anything. Theyâ re made out to be mentally incompetent ([but in reality are over medicated). The game is â Isolate, Medicate and Liquidateâ while they smile all the way to the bank.

The Superior Court system in Los Angeles has become a joke for a city that has so much, yet so little, California is ranked F, at present and the Superior Court system here is next to third world as far as fraud, corruption and justice for profit. This system is denying its residents/Taxpayers their due process on so many levels, Banks, Escrow companies and title companies own the courts and they are attempting to own the land. Lawyers won't take a stand against these courts and their judges thatâ s how bad it has become. Please do the right thing and investigate and replace those who donâ t want to play fair.

Someone from San Gabriel, CA writes:

My husband was an employee at Los Angeles Department of Water and Power. He has a Ph.D. and has done exceptional job as a chemist for the department by training other employees. But because of the ongoing discriminatory and retaliatory actions against him for filing an internal grievance about the corrupt and discriminatory promotion process, he never got promoted even though he is only one of the few working there with a Ph.D. degree. He was physically assaulted by an assistant supervisor who got promoted ahead of him despite not having as much job experience and degree credential. Not only was he denied proper justice, he was further retaliated against with excessive amount of work, excessive monitoring with his supervisorsâ attempts to force him to commit errors with his work. When he was finally forced to make a mistake which could have been easily avoided had he not been piled so much work, he was denied the chance to correct the mistake (every employee is allowed to correct mistakes as part of the work protocol) and his mistake was grossly exaggerated to one that cannot be scientifically and evidentially supported. He is terminated because he was demoted to do the task of peeling labels and discarding sample waste which resulted in an additional workplace injury. When he reported this additional injury, he was immediately terminated with that supposed "mistake" that he so wanted to avoid and correct from a year ago. The Skelly Meeting and the city appeals both before a supposed arbitrator (Joseph Duffy) and some city commissioners went absolutely nowhere as they refused to consider any scientific evidence. They only consider what LADWP management colluded to say (a bunch of shameless and corrupt PERJURERS), as if a lie repeated many times by enough people, it would become the truth. LADWP went to strike our lawsuit down recently at the Superior Court. I have been following through this case for several years and the corruption and collusion within the whole judicial system is astounding. They have the appearance and facade of "due process" without the real substance. Everything they did was only formality. Whatever LADWP managers and supervisors colluded to say (that is, to say only, WITHOUT EVIDENCE) becomes "evidence", but whatever real object scientific and forensic evidence we present with my husband being also an eyewitness is brushed aside. I guess if I bring over all of my friends and relatives from all over the globe and say LADWP supervisors murdered someone, it would become the truth just because there are enough people repeating the same accusation, then by all means I can lock all of these managers and supervisors up for murders. With the same logic, the judicial system in Los Angeles is such that they consider enough perjurers repeating the same false accusations or claims to be "good evidence" and so they used such "evidence" (whatever they collide together to defame and perjure) to wrongfully terminate my husband and continue to deny him justice. These "judges" and "commissioners" who hold law degrees or have studied law should be utterly ashamed of themselves for such blatant distortion of justice. We should call the judicial system in Los Angeles CORRUPTION SYSTEM.

In the past dozen years, state and local judges have repeatedly escaped public accountability for misdeeds that have victimized thousands. Nine of 10 kept their jobs, a Reuters investigation found — including an Alabama judge who unlawfully jailed hundreds of poor people, many of them Black, over traffic fines. Judge Les Hayes once sentenced a single mother to 496 days behind bars for failing to pay traffic tickets. The sentence was so stiff it exceeded the jail time Alabama allows for negligent homicide. Marquita Johnson, who was locked up in April 2012, says the impact of her time in jail endures today. Johnson's three children were cast into foster care while she was incarcerated. One daughter was molested, state records show. Another was physically abused.

“Judge Hayes took away my life and didn't care how my children suffered,” said Johnson, now 36. “My girls will never be the same.”

Fellow inmates found her sentence hard to believe. “They had a nickname for me: The Woman with All the Days,” Johnson said. “That's what they called me: The Woman with All the Days. There were people who had committed real crimes who got out before me.”

In 2016, the state agency that oversees judges charged Hayes with violating Alabama's code of judicial conduct. According to the Judicial Inquiry Commission, Hayes broke state and federal laws by jailing Johnson and hundreds of other Montgomery residents too poor to pay fines. Among those jailed: a plumber struggling to make rent, a mother who skipped meals to cover the medical bills of her disabled son, and a hotelhousekeeper working her way through college.

Hayes, a judge since 2000, admitted in court documents to violating 10 different parts of the state's judicial conduct code. One of the counts was a breach of a judge's most essential duty: failing to respect and comply with the law. Despite the severity of the ruling, Hayes was not barred from serving as a judge. Instead, the judicial commission and Hayes reached a deal. The former Eagle Scout would serve an 11-month unpaid suspension. Then he could return to the bench. Until he was disciplined, Hayes said in an interview with Reuters, "I never thought I was doing something wrong." This week, Hayes is set to retire after 20 years as a judge. In a statement to Reuters, Hayes said he was "very remorseful" for his misdeeds. Community activists say his departure is long overdue. Yet the decision to leave, they say, should never have been his to make, given his record of misconduct.

"He should have been fired years ago," said Willie Knight, pastor of North Montgomery Baptist Church. "He broke the law and wanted to get away with it. His sudden retirement is years too late."

Hayes is among thousands of state and local judges across America who were allowed to keep positions of extraordinary power and prestige after violating judicial ethics rules or breaking laws they pledged to uphold, a Reuters investigation found.

Judges have made racist statements, lied to state officials and forced defendants to languish in jail without a lawyer and then returned to the bench, sometimes with little more than a rebuke from the state agencies overseeing their conduct.

Recent media reports have documented failures in judicial oversight in South Carolina, Louisiana and Illinois. Reuters went further.

In the first comprehensive accounting of judicial misconduct nationally, Reuters identified and reviewed 1,509 cases from the last dozen years — 2008 through 2019 — in which judges resigned, retired or were publicly disciplined following accusations of misconduct. In addition, reporters identified another 3,613 cases from 2008 through 2018 in which states disciplined wayward judges but kept hidden from the public key details of their offenses — including the identities of the judges themselves.

All told, 9 of every 10 judges were allowed to return to the bench after they were sanctioned for misconduct, Reuters determined. They included a California judge who had sex in his courthouse chambers, once with his former law intern and separately with an attorney; a New York judge who berated domestic violence victims; and a Maryland judge who, after his arrest for driving drunk, was allowed to return to the bench provided he took a Breathalyzer test before each appearance.

The news agency's findings reveal an — excessively — forgiving judicial disciplinary system, said Stephen Gillers, a law professor at New York University who writes about judicial ethics. Although punishment short of removal from the bench is appropriate for most misconduct cases, Gillers said, the public — would be appalled at some of the lenient treatment judges get — for substantial transgressions.

In Utah, a judge texted a video of a man's scrotum to court clerks. He was reprimanded but remains on the bench. In Indiana, three judges attending a conference last spring got drunk and sparked a 3 a.m. brawl outside a White Castle fast-food restaurant that ended with two of the judges shot. Although the state supreme court found the three judges had — discredited the entire Indiana judiciary, — each returned to the bench after a suspension. In Texas, a judge burst in on jurors deliberating the case of a woman charged with sex trafficking and declared that God told him the defendant was innocent. The offending judge received a warning and returned to the bench. The defendant was convicted after a new judge took over the case. — There are certain things where there should be a level of zero tolerance, — the jury foreman, Mark House, told Reuters. The judge should have been fined, House said, and kicked off the bench. — There is no justice, because he is still doing his job. — Judicial misconduct specialists say such behavior has the potential to erode trust in America's courts and, absent tough consequences, could give judges license to behave with impunity. — When you see cases like that, the public starts to wonder about the integrity and honesty of the system, — said Steve Scheckman, a lawyer who directed Louisiana's oversight agency and served as deputy director of New York's. — It looks like a good ol' boys club. — That's how local lawyers viewed the case of a longtime Alabama judge who concurrently served on the state's judicial oversight commission. The judge, Cullman District Court's Kim Chaney, remained on the bench for three years after being accused of violating the same nepotism rules he was tasked with enforcing on the oversight commission. In at least 200 cases, court records show, Judge Chaney chose his own son to serve as a court-appointed defense lawyer for the indigent, enabling the younger Chaney to earn at least $105,000 in fees over two years.

In February, months after Reuters repeatedly asked Chaney and the state judicial commission about those cases, he retired from the bench as part of a deal with state authorities to end the investigation. Tommy Drake, the lawyer who first filed a complaint against Chaney in 2016, said he doubts the judge would have been forced from the bench if Reuters hadn't examined the case. "You know the only reason they did anything about Chaney is because you guys started asking questions," Drake said. "Otherwise, he'd still be there."

Broken Bedrock of American justice

State and local judges draw little scrutiny even though their courtrooms are the bedrock of the American criminal justice system, touching the lives of millions of people every year. The country has approximately 1,700 federal judges hear 400,000 cases annually. The nearly 30,000 state, county and municipal court judges handle a far bigger docket: more than 100 million new cases each year, from traffic to divorce to murder. Their titles range from justice of the peace to state supreme court justice. Their powers are vast and varied — from determining whether a defendant should be jailed to deciding who deserves custody of a child. Each U.S. state has an oversight agency that investigates misconduct complaints against judges. The authority of the oversight agencies is distinct from the power held by appellate courts, which can reverse a judge's legal ruling and order a new trial. Judicial commissions cannot change verdicts. Rather, they can investigate complaints about the behavior of judges and pursue discipline ranging from reprimand to removal.

Few experts dispute that the great majority of judges behave responsibly, respecting the law and those who appear before them. And some contend that, when judges do falter, oversight agencies are effective in identifying and addressing the behavior. "With a few notable exceptions, the commissions generally get it right," said Keith Swisher, a University of Arizona law professor who specializes in judicial ethics.

Others disagree. They note that the clout of these commissions is limited, and their authority differs from state to state. To remove a judge, all but a handful of states require approval of a panel that includes other judges. And most states seldom exercise the full extent of those disciplinary powers.

As a result, the system tends to err on the side of protecting the rights and reputations of judges while overlooking the impact courtroom wrongdoing has on those most affected by it: people like Marquita Johnson. Reuters scoured thousands of state investigative files, disciplinary proceedings and court records from the past dozen years to quantify the personal toll of judicial misconduct. The examination found at least 5,206 people who were directly affected by a judge's misconduct. The victims cited in disciplinary documents ranged from people who were illegally jailed to those subjected to racist, sexist and other abusive comments from judges in ways that tainted the cases. The number is a conservative estimate. The tally doesn't include two previously reported incidents that affected thousands of defendants and prompted sweeping reviews of judicial conduct.

â If we have a system that holds a wrongdoer accountable but we fail to address the victims, then we are really losing sight of what a justice system should be all about.â

In Pennsylvania, the state examined the convictions of more than 3,500 teenagers sentenced by two judges. The judges were convicted of taking kickbacks as part of a scheme to fill a private juvenile detention center. In 2009, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court appointed senior judge Arthur Grim to lead a victim review, and the state later expunged criminal records for 2,251 juveniles. Grim told Reuters that every state should adopt a way to compensate victims of judicial misconduct.

â If we have a system that holds a wrongdoer accountable but we fail to address the victims, then we are really losing sight of what a justice system should be all about,â Grim said. In another review underway in Ohio, state public defender Tim Young is scrutinizing 2,707 cases handled by a judge who retired in 2018 after being hospitalized for alcoholism. Mike Benza, a law professor at Case Western Reserve University whose students are helping identify victims, compared the work to current investigations into police abuse of power. â You see one case and then you look to see if it's systemic,â he said. The review, which has been limited during the coronavirus pandemic, may take a year. But Young said the time-consuming task is essential because â a fundamental injustice may have been levied against hundreds or thousands of people.â â Special rules for judgesâ Most states afford judges accused of misconduct a gentle kind of justice. Perhaps no state better illustrates the shortcomings of America's system for overseeing judges than Alabama.

As in most states, Alabama's nine-member Judicial Inquiry Commission is a mix of lawyers, judges and laypeople. All are appointed. Their deliberations are secret and they operate under some of the most judge-friendly rules in the nation. Alabama's rules make even filing a complaint against a judge difficult. The complaint must be notarized, which means that in theory, anyone who makes misstatements about the judge can be prosecuted for perjury. Complaints about wrongdoing must be made in writing; those that arrive by phone, email or without a notary stamp are not investigated, although senders are notified why their complaints have been summarily rejected. Anonymous written complaints are shredded. These rules can leave lawyers and litigants fearing retaliation, commission director Jenny Garrett noted in response to written questions.

â It's a ridiculous system that protects judges and makes it easy for them to intimidate anyone with a legitimate complaint,â said Sue Bell Cobb, chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court from 2007 to 2011. In 2009, she unsuccessfully championed changes to the process and commissioned an American Bar Association report that offered a scathing review of Alabama's rules. In most other states, commission staff members can start investigating a judge upon receiving a phone call or email, even anonymous ones, or after learning of questionable conduct from a news report or court filing. In Alabama, staff will not begin an investigation without approval from the commission itself, which convenes about every seven weeks. By rule, the commission also must keep a judge who is under scrutiny fully informed throughout an investigation. If a subpoena is issued, the judge receives a simultaneous copy, raising fears about witness intimidation. If a witness gives investigators a statement, the judge receives a transcript. In the U.S. justice system, such deference to individuals under investigation is extremely rare. "It's a ridiculous system that protects judges and makes it easy for them to intimidate anyone with a legitimate complaint." Why the need for special rules for judges? said Michael Levy, a Washington lawyer who has represented clients in high-profile criminal, corporate, congressional and securities investigations. "If judges think it's fair and appropriate to investigate others for crimes or misconduct without providing those subjects or targets with copies of witness statements and subpoenas, why don't judges think it's fair to investigate judges in the same way?" Alabama judges also are given an opportunity to resolve investigations confidentially. Reuters interviews and a review of Alabama commission records show the commission has met with judges informally at least 19 times since 2011 to offer corrective guidance. The identities of those judges remain confidential, as does the conduct that prompted the meetings. "Not every violation warrants discipline," commission director Garrett said.

Since 2008, the commission has brought 21 public cases against judges, including Hayes, charging two this year. 496 = Number of days Judge Hayes sentenced Marquita Johnson to jail for unpaid traffic tickets. Two of the best-known cases brought by the commission involved Roy Moore, who was twice forced out as chief justice of the Alabama Supreme Court for defying federal court orders. Another Alabama justice fared better in challenging a misconduct complaint, however. Tom Parker, first elected to the state's high court in 2004, pushed back when the commission investigated him in 2015 for comments he made on the radio criticizing the U.S. Supreme Court's decision legalizing gay marriage. Parker sued the commission in federal court, arguing the agency was infringing on his First Amendment rights. He won. Although the commission had dropped its investigation before the ruling, it was ordered to cover Parker's legal fees: $100,000, or about a fifth of the agency's total annual budget.

In 2018, the people of Alabama elected Parker chief justice. These days, Parker told Reuters, Alabama judges and the agency that oversees them enjoy "a much better relationship" that "is less politically tinged." "How can I say it? It's much more respectful between the commission and the judges now."

â Gut instinctâ

Montgomery, Alabama has a deep history of racial conflict, as reflected in the clashing concepts emblazoned on the city's great seal: "Cradle of the Confederacy" and "Birthplace of the Civil Rights Movement." Jefferson Davis was inaugurated here as Confederate president after the South seceded from the Union in 1861, and his birthday is a state holiday. As was common throughout the South, the city was the site of the lynchings of Black men, crimes now commemorated at a national memorial based here. Police arrested civil rights icon Rosa Parks here in 1955 for refusing to give up her seat on a city bus to a white passenger. Today, about 60% of Montgomery's 198,000 residents are Black, U.S. census records show. Even so, Black motorists account for about 90% of those charged with unpaid traffic tickets, a Reuters examination of court records found. Much of Judge Hayes' work in municipal court involved traffic cases and the collection of fines. Hayes, who is white, told Reuters that "the majority of people who come before the court are Black." City officials have said that neither race nor economics have played a role in police efforts to enforce outstanding warrants, no matter how minor the offense. In April 2012, Marquita Johnson was among them. Appearing before Hayes on a Wednesday morning, the 28-year-old single mother pleaded for a break. Johnson had struggled for eight years to pay dozens of tickets that began with a citation for failing to show proof of insurance. She had insurance, she said. But when she was pulled over, she couldn't find the card to prove it. Even a single ticket was a knockout blow on her minimum-wage waitress salary. In addition to fines, the court assessed a $155 fee to every ticket. Court records show that police often issued her multiple tickets for other infractions during every stop "a practice some residents call 'stacking.'"

Under state law, failing to pay even one ticket can result in the suspension of a driver's license.

Johnson's decision to keep driving nonetheless — taking her children to school or to doctor visits, getting groceries, going to work — led to more tickets and deeper debt. "I told Judge Hayes that I had lost my job and needed more time to pay," she recounted.

By Hayes's calculation, Johnson owed more than $12,000 in fines. He sentenced Johnson to 496 days in jail. Hayes arrived at that sentence by counting each day in jail as $25 toward the outstanding debt. A different judge later determined that Johnson actually owed half the amount calculated by Hayes, and that Hayes had incorrectly penalized her over fines she had already paid. To shave time off her sentence, Johnson washed police cars and performed other menial labor while jailed.

Hayes told Reuters that he generally found pleas of poverty hard to believe. "With my years of experience, I can tell when someone is being truthful with me," Hayes said. He called it a "gut instinct" — though he added, in a statement this week, that he also consulted each defendant's criminal and traffic history as well as their history of warrants and failures to appear in court.

Of course, the law demands more of a judge than a gut call. In a 1983 landmark decision, Bearden v. Georgia, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that state judges are obligated to hold a hearing to determine whether a defendant has willfully chosen not to pay a fine. According to the state's judicial oversight commission, Judge Hayes did not make any inquiry into Ms. Johnson's ability to pay, whether her non-payment was willful. From jail, "I prayed to return to my daughters," Johnson said. "I was sure that someone would realize that Hayes had made a mistake." She said her worst day in jail was her youngest daughter's 3rd birthday. From a jail telephone, she tried to sing "Happy Birthday" but slumped to the floor in grief. "She was choking up and crying," said Johnson's mother, Blanche, who was on the call. "She was devastated to be away from her children so long."

When Johnson was freed after 10 months in jail, she learned that strangers had abused her two older children. One is now a teenager; the other is in middle school. "My kids will pay a lifetime for what the court system did to me," Johnson said. "My daughters get frantic when I leave the house. I know they've had nightmares that I am going to disappear again." Six months after Johnson's release, Hayes jailed another single Black mother. Angela McCullough, then 40, had been pulled over driving home from Faulkner University, a local community college where she carried a 3.87 grade point average. As a mother of four children, including a disabled adult son, she had returned to college to pursue her dream of becoming a mental health counselor. Police ticketed her for failing to turn on her headlights. After a background check, the officer arrested McCullough on a warrant for outstanding traffic tickets. She was later brought before Hayes. "I can't go to jail," McCullough recalled pleading with the judge. "I am a mother. I have a disabled son who needs me."

Hayes sentenced McCullough to 100 days in jail to pay off a court debt of $1,350, court records show. Her adult son, diagnosed with schizophrenia, was held in an institution until her release. McCullough said she cleaned jail cells in return for time off her sentence. One day, she recalled, she had to clean a blood-soaked cell where a female inmate had slit her wrists. She was freed after 20 days, using the money she saved for tuition to pay off her tickets, she said. Jail was the darkest chapter of her life, McCullough said, a place where "the devil was trying to take my mind." Today, she has abandoned her pursuit of a degree. "I don't think I'll ever be able to afford to go back."

SUSPENDED 6 MONTHS:

Chris Kunza Mennemeyer

Circuit Court, Missouri

Deliberately postponed the appointment of public defenders in probation violation cases.

A clear sign that something was amiss in Montgomery courts came in November 2013, when a federal lawsuit was filed alleging that city judges were unlawfully jailing the poor. A similar suit was filed in 2014, and two more civil rights cases were filed in 2015. Johnson and McCullough were Plaintiffs. The lawsuits detailed practices similar to those that helped fuel protests in Ferguson, Missouri, after a white police officer killed a Black teenager in 2014. In a scathing report on the origins of the unrest, the U.S. Department of Justice exposed how Ferguson had systematically used traffic enforcement to raise revenue through excessive fines, a practice that fell disproportionately hard on Black residents. "Montgomery is just like Ferguson," said Karen Jones, a community activist and founder of a local educational nonprofit. Jones has led recent protests in Montgomery in the wake of the killing of George Floyd, the Black man whose death under the knee of a cop in Minneapolis set off worldwide calls for racial justice. In Montgomery, "everybody knew that the police targeted Black residents. And I sat in Hayes's court and watched him squeeze poor people for more money, then toss them in jail where they had to work off debts with free labor to the city." It was years before the flurry of civil rights lawsuits against Hayes and his fellow judges had much impact on the commission. The oversight agency opened its Hayes case in summer 2015, nearly two years after Plaintiff's lawyers in the civil rights cases filed a complaint with the body. Hayes spent another year and a half on the bench before accepting the suspension.

Under its own rules, the commission could have filed a complaint and told its staff to investigate Hayes at any time. Commission director Garrett said she is prohibited by law from explaining why the commission didn't investigate sooner. The investigation went slowly, Garrett said, because it involved reviewing thousands of pages of court records. The commission also was busy with other cases from 2015 to early 2017, Garrett said, issuing charges against five judges, including Moore.

"Slap in the face"

A few months after Judge Hayes's suspension ended, his term as a municipal judge was set to expire. So, the Montgomery City Council took up the question of the judge's future on March 6, 2018. On the agenda of its meeting: whether to reappoint Hayes to another four-year term.

Hayes wasn't in the audience that night, but powerful supporters were. The city's chief judge, Milton Westry, told the council that Hayes and his colleagues have changed how they handled cases involving indigent defendants, "since we learned a better way of doing things." In the wake of the suits, Westry said, Hayes and his peers complied with reforms that required judges to make audio recordings of court hearings and notify lawyers when clients are jailed for failing to pay fines. As part of a settlement in the civil case, the city judges agreed to implement changes for at least two years. Those reforms have since been abandoned, Reuters found. Both measures were deemed too expensive, Hayes and city officials confirmed. Residents who addressed the council were incredulous that the city would consider reappointing Hayes. Jones, the community activist, reminded council members that Hayes had pleaded guilty to violating the very laws he was sworn to uphold. The city council voted to hire Hayes to a fifth consecutive term.

Marquita Johnson said she can understand why a judge whose unlawful rulings changed the lives of hundreds has himself emerged virtually unscathed. Hiring Hayes back to the bench was a slap in the face to everyone, Johnson said. It was a message that we don't matter. On Thursday, Hayes will retire from the bench. In an earlier interview with Reuters, he declined to discuss the Johnson case. Asked whether he regrets any of the sentences he has handed out, he paused. I think, maybe, I could have been more sympathetic at times, Hayes said. Sometimes you miss a few. Additional reporting by Isabella Jibilian, Andrea Januta and Blake Morrison. Edited by Morrison. In another example reported by JOHN SHIFFMAN, A watchdog accused, a pattern of rulings delayed, a repeat offender wherein Three recent cases illustrate how Alabama judges who were cited for wrongdoing were able to remain on the bench for years. Judge Chaney: Enforced, broke rules! What happened when a trial judge who also served on the state's judicial oversight board was accused of misbehavior. Alex Chaney was just a year out of law school in 2015 when he started receiving lucrative appointments at taxpayer expense. A district judge began assigning him to represent people too poor to afford a lawyer. That judge was his dad, Kim Chaney.

Judge Chaney is a powerful figure in rural Cullman County, where he was first elected to the bench in 1992. Chaney serves on a local bank board and has led several statewide justice associations. In 2012, the governor honored Chaney by selecting him to also serve on Alabama's nine-member Judicial Inquiry Commission, which investigates misconduct by judges. While on the commission, Chaney broke its ethics laws in his own courtroom. In 2016, local attorney Tommy Drake filed a complaint against Chaney, alleging that the judge was appointing his son to represent indigent defendants, violating ethics rules that prohibit nepotism. Alex Chaney was paid $105,000 from 2015 to 2017 by the state for such court-appointed work, accounting records show. Because Judge Chaney served on the judicial commission, Drake sent his complaint to a different state watchdog agency, the Alabama Ethics Commission. On October 4, 2017, the Ethics Commission found that Judge Chaney violated ethics rules and referred the case to the state attorney general. The following day, records show, Judge Chaney resigned from the Judicial Inquiry Commission. But he remained a trial judge in Cullman. Eighteen months passed. Last summer, a Reuters reporter began asking state officials about the status of the case. The officials declined to comment. In November, Reuters sent Judge Chaney and his son queries. They did not respond. The judge's lawyer, John Henig Jr, wrote to Reuters: Judge Chaney is a person of remarkably good character and would never knowingly do anything unethical or wrong. Henig said that Judge Chaney appointed his son from a rotating list of lawyers to represent indigent defendants. Henig called the appointments ministerial in nature.

If Judge Chaney's son's name was the next name on the list for appointments, Judge Chaney would call out his son's name and thereafter immediately recuse himself from the case, Henig wrote. A Reuters review of court records showed otherwise: Judge Chaney participated in several cases after appointing his son and issued substantive decisions. For example, records show that the judge reduced bond for one of his son's clients, and approved another's motion to plead guilty. Henig did not respond to questions about these records.

This February 7 — eight months after Reuters began inquiring about Chaney — the commission charged the judge with appointing his son to more than 200 cases and making rulings in some of them. Chaney struck a deal with the commission and retired from the bench, avoiding a trial. During a hearing to approve the deal, commission lawyer Elizabeth Bern said Chaney should have known better than to appoint his son, especially given that he did so while a member of the oversight agency. During Chaney's tenure, the commission had disciplined two judges who abused their office to benefit a relative. — The nepotism provision is clear and unequivocal without exception, — she said.

Chaney did not speak during the hearing. Drake, the lawyer who filed the complaint in 2016, said that absent the Reuters inquiries, he doubts Chaney would have retired from the bench because he is so politically powerful. Indeed, shortly after the judge stepped down in disgrace for steering work to his son, the local bar association issued a resolution praising him. Of Chaney, the local lawyers said, — He has always maintained the highest ethical and moral standards of the office and has been an example to all, what a judge should represent. —

Judge Kelly: — Callous indifference —

How a judge left children in limbo by repeatedly failing to perform her most basic duty: ruling on cases. Montgomery Circuit Court Judge Anita Kelly hears time-sensitive family matters such as child custody, adoption and divorce — cases in which a child remains in limbo until she rules. Starting in 2014, court and judicial commission records show, word of years-long delays in her cases began to emerge from foster parents, lawyers, social workers and appeals court judges. Commission officials are barred by law from discussing the case, but Reuters pieced together the scope of the investigation through juvenile court records, public documents and interviews with people involved. In May 2014, foster parents Cheri and Travis Norwood filed a complaint about Kelly with the judicial commission. They alleged the judge's incompetence led to a traumatic, years-long delay in which a foster child who began living with the Norwoods as an infant was taken away from them at age 3 ½ and returned to live with her teenage biological mother. — If Judge Kelly thought they should have been together, fine, — Travis Norwood said in an interview. — Why didn't this happen sooner? Because children can't wait. You can't freeze a child, hold her in suspended animation until her mother is ready. — Social workers who heard about the Norwood complaint forwarded their own concerns about Kelly's conduct in several other cases. Nonetheless, the commission dismissed the Norwood complaint in early 2015, finding — no reasonable basis to charge the judge. —

Over the next year, more red flags emerged. State appeals court judges raised concerns about Kelly's — continued neglect of her duty, — citing at least five cases that had untenable delays. In November 2015, a supreme court justice criticized the nearly three years it took to determine one child's fate. — I refuse to be another adult who has totally failed this child," Justice Tommy Bryan wrote. Another 20 months passed before the judicial commission took action. In August 2017, it charged Kelly with delays that "manifest a callous indifference or lack of comprehension" to children's well-being. One child's case, it noted, had dragged on for five years. Kelly took her case to trial before the Court of the Judiciary, the special tribunal that weighs charges against judges. Her attorney argued that the judge worked hard and had shown no ill intent.

In 2018, the tribunal found Kelly failed to "maintain professional competence." Kelly was suspended for 90 days. Still, she kept her job. The court said it likely would have removed Kelly from the bench if not for two factors: Voters re-elected her in 2016, and she exhibited "good character and the lack of evidence of scandal or corruption on her part." Her lawyer, Henry Lewis Gillis, applauded her reinstatement and said the delays never affected the quality of her decisions. "Judge Kelly cannot change yesterday," Gillis said. "Rather, she chooses to learn from her past experiences as she continues to handle the many, many, many cases that come before her today."

Judge Wiggins: Give blood or go to jail

A judge who is a repeat offender "four times over" remains on the bench. Circuit Judge Marvin Wiggins has been hit with misconduct charges by Alabama's judicial conduct commission four times over the past decade. In 2009, he was reprimanded and suspended for 90 days for failing to recuse himself from a voter fraud investigation involving his relatives. "The public must be able to trust that our judges will dispense justice fairly and impartially," the Court of the Judiciary concluded. "Judge Wiggins, by his actions, disregarded that trust." In 2016 "in a case that made global headlines" Wiggins was censured for offering defendants the option of giving blood instead of going to jail for failing to pay fines. A local blood drive happened to be taking place at the courthouse that day. "If you do not have any money and you don't want to go to jail, as an option to pay it, you can give blood today," Wiggins told dozens of defendants, according to a recording. "Consider that as a discount rather than putting you in jail, if you do not have any money." Forty-one defendants gave blood that day, and the commission called Wiggins' conduct "reprehensible and inexcusable." Wiggins acknowledged that his comments were inappropriate, but noted he did not send anyone to jail that day for failure to pay fines.

Wiggins' lawyer, Joe Espy III, said that the judge "has always tried to cooperate" with authorities. Espy noted that Wiggins is a community leader, an ordained pastor and has been repeatedly re-elected to the bench for more than 20 years. "He is not only a good judge but a good person," Espy said. Last year, Wiggins was reprimanded for directly calling the father in a custody dispute "a conversation that violated a rule prohibiting a judge from discussing a case without both sides present. A recording of the call became a key piece of evidence against Wiggins. In preparation for trial in that case, the commission said it found a "pattern and practice" of similar one-sided calls. The commission also said it found evidence that Wiggins was meeting with divorce litigants in his chambers without lawyers present. In November, this prompted a new commission case against Wiggins "his fourth in 10 years." "At a very minimum," the commission alleged, his track record indicates a "pattern of carelessness or indifferent disregard or lack of respect for the high standards imposed on the judiciary." But at a pretrial hearing in January, and in a subsequent order, Wiggins scored a victory before the Alabama tribunal that issues final judgment on such cases, the Court of the Judiciary. The presiding judge raised questions about whether proper procedures had been followed in the case against Wiggins. Three weeks later, the commission dropped the case. And Wiggins returned to the bench.

These are only a few examples, supplied by major investigators and public officials that prove that some judges believe they are immune to violations of the law in order to protect their special interests. These, and many other reports, validate Plaintiffs' concerns.

Plaintiffs, and his team associates, have helped develop and promote software, for use by every member of the public, by every member of Congress and by every law enforcement and regulatory agency. This software catches conflicted public officials..from Senators, to Judges, to White House staff.

These software tools are new open-source, and free, public software let any citizen get any corrupt official arrested. Any voter can use the software from the comfort of their living room. The AI replicates itself (Like A benign digital version of Covid) across the entire web.

You can download a copy of the software or build-your-own version of it from freely available code at Github, CERN and Linux repositories. Plaintiffs, and his peers, have consulted with the SEC and the GAO on this technology.

After suffering millions of dollars of losses from public official's Insider Trading schemes, Plaintiffs decided to do something about that!

Illegal and corrupt Congressional, Judge and major public servant insider trading tends to be something you don't hear about until it's hit the big news networks and newspapers as the SEC goes for the throat of the accused. By then, unfortunately, those committing the crimes have made their gains, usually in the multi-millions of dollars, and the damage has been done to the stock, its company, investors and the American Way. Covert stock market trades are now the #1 form of bribes in California and Washington, DC.

Quite frankly, the jail time assessed doesn't correct the damage done, and the fines rarely aid the investors, or the voters, in getting their money and their democracy back. Many of those hurt are Average Joe's and Jill's, like Plaintiffs, who were just trying to save their retirement nest eggs.

â€ Public Shameâ€ is the tool that works best to take down the corrupt!

These crimes involve an investment banker spouse and a Senator or other top official, using information, which was not available to the public, buying and selling a company's stock in an underhanded manner. In many cases bribes have been paid with Google, Tesla or Facebook stock in a covert manner. It is particularly onerous when a Senator buys Tesla, Google, Facebook or Solyndra stock, and makes laws that only benefits Tesla, Solyndra, etc, while sabotaging their competitor constituents. Because the dealings involved are pretty much done on the sly, it's been difficult, until now, for the governing body of the SEC to prove illegal insider trading, unless one of the cohort stumbles on the others or their actions become glaringly obvious. In some cases, a sharp mind around the action may take notice and become what's called a whistle-blower.

Previously, writes Andrew Beattie of Investopedia: "... insider trading is often difficult for the SEC to spot. Detecting it involves a lot of conjecture and consideration of probabilities." That was the 'old days', though. Today, the new AI software can bust through these scams like a hot knife through butter!

With this new open-source, free, public spy agency-class software, detecting illegal insider trading is actually less complicated than it sounds.

To the eyes of this new super-powerful AI observer server bot and peer-to-peer databases, it is easy work. You, the citizen, just type the politician or agency employee name into a field and hit the "analyze" button. A few minutes later you receive a multi-page PDF report similar to an FBI report on the target. You can either research the subject in more detail or send copies of the report to the FBI, GAO, OSC, SEC or other enforcement group.

The software is an automated AI temporal matching system which includes 24/7 analysis of all stock trades involving politicians to its information source, politician finances, communications and policy participators. It uses some of the same software code used by the CERN mega-research center in Switzerland.

The technology Core Evaluation Points:

- Analyst estimates - these come from what an analyst estimates that a company's quarterly or annual earnings will be. They are important because they help approximate the fair value of an entity, which basically establishes its price on the stock exchange.
- Share volume - this reflects the quantity of shares that can be traded over a certain period of time. There are buyers and there are sellers, and the transactions that take place between them contribute to total volume.

One Way The AI Detects Congressional Insider Trades

Metricized signs of illegal insider trading occur when trades occur that break out of the historical pattern of share volume traded compared to beneficiary participation's of those connected to company and political entity. Another clue of the illegal insider trading is when a lot of trading goes on right before earnings announcements. That tends to be a sign that someone already knows what the announcement is going to indicate, and it's an obvious violation. One module of the new software hunts these trends around-the-clock in an unmanned manner like a detective who never needs to sleep.

The software red alerts are issued when trades are linked close to the actual earnings and politicians bills instead of what the predicted earnings were. In a corruption case, it's clear the trades- especially made by politicians close to the company - stemmed from information that was not readily available to the general public.

In other words, at the time an insider makes a trade, the trade has a stronger relationship to earnings guidance rather than to earnings results achieved.

Part Of The Insider Trading Detection AI Uses 'Dynamic Time Warping (DTW)'

In econometrics, which is a concept frequently used by quantitative analysts to evaluate stock market prices, dynamic time warping (DTW) is an algorithm that can be used for measuring similarity between two data sequences by calculating an optimal match between the two. This sequence "matching" method is often used in time series classification to properly "line things up."

The method, coupled with AI machine learning ensemble methods, can provide a clear path between the trades made by insiders and public data used to make the trades.

This is a product of artificial intelligence that has been expanded by Indexer, Splunk, Palantir and other firms fast becoming experts in products that can be used to advance the art of manipulating political and social trends in business and markets by using social media, financial data and news stories. The new software process has taken that sort of approach to the next level and targeted every member of Congress, their staff, family and friends. The first emphasis is on California and Washington, DC public figures.

In a hypothetical example, a group of executives failed to trade by industry standards by leveraging material non-public information and policy manipulation. Although consensus estimates called for higher commodity prices at the end of 2015, it appears key executives traded for their personal accounts as a result of the forecast provided by a specialist system within the firm that was adept at predicting prices alongside lobbyist manipulations. Flash-boy trading is now dirtier and powered by Google-class server systems.

In the hypothetical scenario the software aggregates executive trades in 2014 and 2015 and finds a strong link between buys and sells of executive stock options, which line up with material non-public estimates of commodity prices that were provided by the specialist system.

For example, in a "Exec Sell and Exec Buys" graph, a green line represents sells, while a black line represents buys. In the corresponding period, one finds a red line represents unrevised prices provided by the specialist system, and green line represents consensus estimates.

During Q1-2014, there was $28M in purchases of executive stock options, while in Q2-2014, there was $25M in sales of executive stock options. The specialist system called for Q3-2014 commodity prices to make a precipitous decline going into the end of 2014. Remember, under this scenario, no revisions were made to the specialist system's price forecast. In this example, executives were afforded a significant advantage using price predictions from the specialist system.

In a final bullet chart, there was a dynamic time warping distance between trades and consensus estimates of 7.23, but this distance is only 2.19 when comparing specialist system estimates and executive trades. Please note, the closer the distance score is to zero, the more similar the trades are to the estimates they are measured against.

We have applied this process to companies well-known for influence buying like, Google, Tesla and Facebook

It's obvious that the tech executives involved did not follow industry standards in their actions and make public the "insider" information they had access to prior to the trades they made. The lobbyists they hired promoted this rigged trend and paid off Senators with perks. These are the kind of violations the SEC and other governing bodies can look to in attempting to protect the trading public and the integrity of financial marketplaces. Artificial intelligence tools are a major factor in assisting the tracking of insider trading.

"Every facet of our everyday lives has been impacted, infiltrated and greatly influenced by artificial intelligence technologies," says Vernon A. McKinley, a multi-jurisdictional attorney, based in Atlanta. "In fact, the U.S. government and its multiple agencies have developed specialized intelligence units to detect, track, analyze and prosecute those unscrupulous individuals seeking to profit from the use of such tools, specifically in the financial industry, and to protect the integrity and strength of the U.S. economy and its investors." Now these tools are being turned against the corrupt!

The public can now detect trading anomalies in financial situations using this artificial intelligence software on their desktop computers. No public official will ever be able to do these kinds of corruptions, again, without getting caught.

This approach has already had an impact on how political insider trade on Wall Street and in financial markets around the world.

This technology can end this corruption forever!

A module of the software uses data from The Center for Responsive Politics, ICIJ Panama Leaks records, Swiss Leaks records and FEC files to reveal covert routes. Famous politicians own part of Tesla Motors, Facebook, Google, Netflix, YouTube and other companies they helped get government money for. All of their competing constituents have suffered for it or been put out of business by exclusive deals that only Tesla Motors, Facebook, Google, Netflix and YouTube got. That is a crime and charges have been filed with federal law enforcement.

A large volume of forensic research proves that Silicon Valley Cartel tech firms receive benefits from politicians and politicians, at the same time, benefit from these firms.

This evidence on the exchange of benefits between politicians and firms proves an agreement between the politicians and the companies. This agreement, however, cannot be in the form of a written contract as writing direct fee-for-service contracts between a politician and a firm is considered bribery (Kroznor and Stratmann 1998; 2000). In addition, either party to this agreement might renege on its promise and the other party cannot resort to the courts.

Procon.org, for example, reports: â Less than two months after ascending to the United States Senate, and before becoming President, one Senator bought more than $50,000 worth of stock in two speculative companies whose major investors included some of his biggest political donors. One of the companies was a biotech concern that was starting to develop a drug to treat avian flu. In March 2005, two weeks after buying thousands of dollars of its shares, this Senator took the lead in a legislative push for more federal spending to battle the disease. The most recent financial disclosure form this Senator . . . shows that he bought more than $50,000 in stock in a satellite communications business whose principal backers . . . had raised more than $150,000 for his political committees.â See more examples from the Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington (CREW) report (2009).)

The literature and eye-witness experience proves that politically-connected Silicon Valley tech firms monthly obtain economic favors, such as securing favorable legislation, special tax exemptions, having preferential access to finance, receiving government contracts, or help in dealing with regulatory agencies. The evidence proves that Google's support, for example, can help in winning elections. For example, firms can vary the number of people they employ, coordinate the opening and closing of plants, and increase their lending activity in election years in order to help incumbent politicians get re-elected. (See Roberts 1990; Snyder 1990; Langbein and Lotwis 1990; Durden, Shorgen, and Silberman 1991; Stratmann 1991, 1995, and 1998; Fisman 2001; Johnson and Mitton 2003; Ansolabehere, Snyder, and Ueda 2004; Sapienza 2004; DinÃ§ 2005; Khwaja and Mian 2005; Bertrand, Kramarz, Schoar, and Thesmar 2006; Faccio 2006; Faccio, Masulis, and McConnell 2006; Jayachandran 2006; Leuz and Oberholzer-Gee 2006; Claessens, Feijen, Laeven 2008; Desai and Olofsgard 2008; Ramanna 2008; Goldman, Rocholl, and So 2008, 2009; Cole 2009; Cooper, Gulen, and Ovtchinnikov 2009; Correia 2009; Ramanna and Roychowdhury 2010; Benmelech and Moskowitz 2010.)

The software can see that the share ownership of politicians serves as a mechanism to quid-pro-quo their relationships with big tech firms, is as follows: The ownership of politicians plays multiple distinct (but not necessarily independent) roles; one that relies upon the amount of ownership and one that does not. First, as investors in firms, politicians tie their own interests to those of the firm. Thus, harming (benefiting) the firm means harming (benefiting) the politician and vice versa. By owning a firm's stock, politicians commit their personal wealth to the firm and reduce a firm's uncertainty with regard to their actions toward the firm. This will, in turn, enhance the firm's incentive to support the politician-owner during both current and future elections in order to prolong the incumbency period for as long as possible. Firms have their lobbyists push to be able to know the amount of ownership likely to be material to politicians. This knowledge, in turn, enables them to judge whether the politician's interest is aligned with the firm's interest and optimize quid-pro-quo.

The Political Action Committee (PAC) contribution of firms (which is a direct measure of benefits flowing from firms to politicians) is a significant determinant of ownership allocations by members of Congress. The ownership of Congress members in firms that contribute to their election campaigns is roughly 32.8% higher than their ownership in noncontributing firms even after accounting for factors that are associated with both ownership and contribution (such as familiarity, proximity and investor recognition).

The committee assignments of politicians is a proxy for whether their relations with firms are enforced (Kroznor and Stratmann 1998). Silicon Valley tech firms like Facebook, Tesla and Google obtain private benefits out of their mutual relations with politicians. When the strength of the association between ownership and contributions at the firm level increases, the provision of government contracts to those firms increases.

Members of Congress, candidates for federal office, senior congressional staff, nominees for executive branch positions, Cabinet members, the President and Vice President, and Supreme Court justices are required by the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 to file annual reports disclosing their income, assets, liabilities, and other relevant details about their personal finances.

Personal financial disclosure forms are filed annually by May 15 and cover the preceding calendar year. The Center for Responsive Politics (CRP) collected the 2004–2007 reports for Congress members from the Senate Office of Public Records and the Office of the Clerk of the House. The Center then scanned the reports as digital images, classified the politicians' investments into categories including stocks, bonds, and mutual funds, and built a database accessible via a web query.

Using CRP's data, you can use the software to collect the shares in S&P 500 firms held by members of Congress between 2004 and 2007, for example. You can collect the stock ownership data for every firm that joined the S&P 500 Index any time between January 2004 and April 2009; regardless of when it joined the index, and the software can obtain all the available stock ownership data for that firm between 2004 and 2007. Likewise, if a firm dropped out of the index at any time during 2004–2008, the software, nevertheless, will retain the firm in a sample for the target period. As such, the sample would include stocks in hundreds of unique firms owned by politicians between 2004 and 2007, for example.

Politicians are required to report only those stocks whose value exceeds $1,000 at the end of the calendar year or that produce more than $200 in income. They are CURRENTLY not required to report the exact value of the holding, but instead must simply check a box corresponding to the value range into which the asset falls. The CRP then undertakes additional research to determine the exact values of these stocks. When the Center makes these determinations, it reports them instead of the ranges and I use these values in my study. When only the range is available, you should use its midpoint as the holding's value. You would, thus have data on the stock holdings of hundreds of politicians for that time period.

Using the software, you can search for all Political Action Committees (PACs) associated with tech firms. It then collects data on each contribution these PACs made to candidates (both the winners and losers) running for the Senate and House elections. Tricky corrupt Silicon Valley firms establish several PACs, each in a different location, and each of these PACs can contribute to the same candidate. In such cases, the software would total, for each candidate, every contribution he or she received from PACs affiliated with the same firm. To parallel the investment data sample period, for example, the software collects every contribution made from the 2003–2004 cycle up to and including the 2007–2008 cycle. Many Silicon Valley tech firms use deeply covert Fusion GPS, Perkins Coie, BlackCube, Psyops-type service to make very hidden additional payola payments to California politicians.

For sources, for example, the software collects government contract data from Eagle Eye Publishers, Inc., one of the leading commercial providers of Federal procurement and grant business intelligence and <http://www.usaspending.org>. Eagle Eye collects its contract data from Federal Procurement Data System—Next Generation (FPDS-NG), the contract data collection and dissemination system administered by the U.S. General Services Administration (GSA). FPDS-NG provides data on procurement contracts awarded by the U.S. Government. When these contracts are awarded to company subsidiaries, Eagle Eye searches for the names of their parent companies and assigns each subsidiary to its appropriate parent. The software collects both the number and aggregate value of government contracts that were awarded to sample firms between 2004 and 2007 in this example time-frame.

The software reveals, for example, that one Representative is a ten-term member of Congress and a senior member of the House Financial Services Committee. They arranged a meeting between the Department of Treasury and One United Bank, a company with close financial ties to themselves, involving both investments and contributions.

â In September 2008, the Representative asked then-Secretary of the Treasury Henry Paulson to hold a meeting for their friends in banks that had suffered from Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac losses.

The Treasury Department complied and held a session with approximately a dozen senior banking regulators, representatives from those banks, and their trade association. Officials of One United Bank have close ties to the Representative and attended the meeting along with the Representative's chief of staff. Kevin Cohee, chief executive officer of One United, used the meeting as an opportunity to ask for bailout funds.

... Former White House officials stated they were surprised when One United Officials asked for bailout funds. ... In December 2008, the Representative intervened again, asking Treasury to host another meeting to ensure their banks received part of the $700 billion allocated under the Troubled Asset Relief Program. ... Within two weeks, on December 19, 2008, One United secured $12.1 million in bailout funds. ... This was not the first time the Representative used their position to advance the interests of the bank. the Representative's spouse became a shareholder in One United in 2001, when it was known as the Boston Bank of Commerce. In 2002, Boston Bank of Commerce tried to purchase Family Savings, a friend of the Representative in Los Angeles. Instead, Family Savings turned to a bank in Illinois. The Representative tried to block the merger by contacting regulators at the FDIC. The Representative publicly stated they did not want a major bank to acquire a bank that the Representative was friends with.

When the Representative's efforts with the FDIC proved fruitless, the Representative began a public pressure campaign with other community leaders. Ultimately, when Family Savings changed direction and allowed Boston Bank of Commerce to submit a winning bid, the Representative received credit for the merger. The combined banks were renamed One United. ... In March 2004, the Representative acquired One United stock worth between $250,001 and $500,000, and the Representative's spouse purchased two sets of stock, each worth between $250,001 and $500,000. In September 2004, the Representative sold their stock in One United and their husband sold a portion of his. That same year, the husband joined the bank's board. ... One United Chief Executive Kevin Cohee and President Teri Williams Cohee have donated a total of $8,000 to the Representative's campaign committee. ... On October 27, 2009, less than two months before One United received a $12 million bailout, the bank received a cease-and-desist order from the FDIC and bank regulatory officials in Massachusetts for poor lending practices and excessive executive compensation ... the bank provided excessive perks to its executives, including paying for Mr. Cohee's use of a $6.4 million mansion ... Thanks to Crony quid-pro-quo revelations by an earlier version of the software, you can also see that Fisker Automotive, Inc.'s $529 Million U.S. Taxpayer Loan Approval by the Department of Energy was dirty. Fisker Automotive's Chief Operating Officer Bernhard Koehler pleaded with the Department of Energy in a panicked Saturday midnight hour email to receive a $529 million loan as the company was 2 weeks from Chapter 7 liquidation, that it was laying off most of its employees, that no private sector investors would fund the company without DOE guarantees, and that Fisker was unable to raise any further equity funding from independent private-sector investors given the company's financial condition. These statements were made to a Loan Officer at the DOE. No private sector Loan underwriting (approval) committee would ever grant a low interest loan to a desperate buyer that had just confessed it was in a state of insolvency and was about to lay off most of its staff. Yet within a few weeks the DOE would approve a $529 Million Credit Facility to Fisker. Despite the DOE Loan Officer official's sworn testimony at April 24th's House Oversight Committee that the DOE used "same private sector underwriting standards when approving Fisker and other approved Taxpayer Funded Loans" - likely perjury based in documents.

In a 'U.S. GOVERNMENT CONFIDENTIAL EMAIL': FISKER AUTOMOTIVE: August 2009: Co-Founder Bernhard Koehler emails U.S. Dept. of Energy Loan Officer in Sat. midnight Panic admitting VC Firms all declined to invest, and company is out of cash. Weeks later the U.S. Department of Energy approves $529M U.S. Taxpayer Funded Loans to FISKER. NO PRIVATE SECTOR Lender would ever authorize a Loan for even $5 Million let alone $529 Million after receiving this email stating private sector investors had examined the company and declined equity investments, that they might loan money as more secure Debt, and the Chief Operating Officer of the company further stating that the borrower is totally insolvent. (Weeks after this email the U.S. Federal Government Dept. of Energy Loan Committee Approves Fisker Automotive as a credit-worthy borrow for $529 Million in U.S. Taxpayer Funded Loans). Fisker got the cash because President Obama said to "give it to them" in order to please his campaign financiers.

The same thing happened with Tesla Motors. Elon Musk and Tesla Motors were broke when DOE gave them the money.

PrivCo CEO Sam Hamadeh stated in an official statement: "The documents obtained by PrivCo paint a picture of how an insolvent, unproven automaker received $192 million in taxpayer funding. The Department of Energy made a loan that no rational lender would have made. This loan was the equivalent of staying execution on a company that was terminally ill to begin with." Tesla and Fisker could not have been taxpayer funded unless bribes and criminal quid-pro-quo was underway by President Obama and the U.S. Senator insider traders.

Since its ruling in Buckley v. Valeo, the U.S. Supreme Court has expressed concern regarding corruption or the appearance of corruption stemming from political quid pro quo arrangements and the deleterious consequences it may have on citizens' democratic behavior. However, no standard has been set as to what constitutes the appearance of corruption, as the Court was and continues to be vague in its definition. As a result, campaign finance cases after Buckley have relied on public opinion polls as evidence of perceptions of corruption, and these polls indicate that the public generally perceives high levels of corruption in government. The present study investigates the actual impact that perceptions of corruption have on individuals' levels of political participation. Adapting the standard socioeconomic status model developed most fully by Verba and Nie (1972), an extended beta-binomial regression estimated using maximum likelihood is performed, utilizing unique data from the 2009 University of Texas Money and Politics survey. The results of this study indicate that individuals who perceive higher levels of quid pro quo corruption participate more in politics, on average, than those who perceive lower levels of corruption.

Quid pro quo is not a difficult concept to understand. Too bad the media doesn't endeavor to investigate and explain it. Your politicians don't work for you, they work for their own insider trading stock market holdings for themselves!

Corruption-finding software, such as that described above, will be used by Plaintiffs, and Plaintiffs' investigative news reporter associates, law enforcement contacts, intelligence agency contacts and regulatory agency contacts on all opposition parties associated with this case.

The facts imply that most public officials are biased towards their friends, business partners and political associates who are sometimes Defendants in these cases and under investigation in active federal criminal cases that have been reported to law enforcement and regulatory agencies.

DOES 1 through 20, as additional Defendants in this case, are thought, by investigators, to include persons friendly with the Judge, in financial investments with the Judge and the leadership of organizations for which the Judge is a spokesperson. If those persons are also under active investigations by SEC, FTC, OGE, OSC, FEC, DOJ, FBI, and other organizations that Plaintiffs reports to, then the potential conflicts of interest are compounded.

EX-CIA LEAKER: GOOD GUY OR BAD GUY?

By Shane Harris Email the author

The U.S. government has identified a suspect in the leak last year of a large portion of the CIA's computer hacking arsenal, the cyber-tools the agency had used to conduct espionage operations overseas, according to interviews and public documents.

But despite months of investigation, prosecutors have been unable to bring charges against the man, who is a former CIA employee being held in a Manhattan jail on unrelated charges.

Joshua Adam Schulte, who worked for a CIA group that designs computer code to spy on foreign adversaries, is believed to have provided the agency's top-secret information to WikiLeaks, federal prosecutors acknowledged in a hearing in January. The anti-secrecy group published the code under the label "Vault 7" in March 2017. It was one of the most significant and potentially damaging leaks in the CIA's history, exposing secret cyberweapons and spying techniques that might be used against the United States, according to current and former intelligence officials.

Schulte's connection to the leak investigation has not been previously reported.

Federal authorities searched Schulte's apartment in New York last year and obtained personal computer equipment, notebooks and handwritten notes, according to a copy of the search warrant reviewed by The Washington Post. But that failed to provide the evidence that prosecutors needed to indict Schulte with illegally giving the information to WikiLeaks.

[\[WikiLeaks: The CIA is using popular TVs, smartphones and cars to spy on their owners\]](#)

Those search warrants haven't yielded anything that is consistent with [Schulte's] involvement in that disclosure," Matthew Laroche, an assistant U.S. attorney in the Southern District of New York, said at a hearing Jan. 8, according to a court transcript.

Laroche said at the time that the investigation "is ongoing" and that Schulte "remains a target of that investigation."

Part of that investigation, Laroche said, was analyzing whether a technology known as Tor, which allows Internet users to hide their location, "was used in transmitting classified information."

In other hearings in Schulte's case, prosecutors have alleged that he used Tor at his New York apartment, but they have provided no evidence that he did so to disclose classified information. Schulte's attorneys have said that Tor is used for all kinds of communications and have maintained that he played no role in the Vault 7 leaks.

Schulte is in a Manhattan jail on charges of possessing, receiving and transporting child pornography, according to an indictment filed in September. He has pleaded not guilty.

A former federal prosecutor who is not connected to the case said that it is not unusual to hold a suspect in one crime on unrelated charges and that the months Schulte has spent in jail do not necessarily mean the government's case has hit a wall. The former prosecutor, who spoke on the condition of anonymity to discuss an open investigation, also said that if government lawyers acknowledged in a public hearing that Schulte was a target, they probably suspect he acted alone.

In documents, prosecutors allege that they found a large cache of child pornography on a server that was maintained by Schulte. But he has argued that anywhere from 50 to 100 people had access to that server, which Schulte, now 29, designed several years ago to share movies and other digital files.

Schulte worked in the CIA's Engineering Development Group, which produced the computer code, according to people with knowledge of his employment history as well as the group's role in developing cyberweapons.

At the time of the leak, people who had worked with that group said that suspicion had mainly focused on contractors, not full-time CIA employees such as Schulte. It is not clear whether the government is pursuing contractors as part of the leak investigation, but prosecutors have not mentioned anyone other than Schulte in court proceedings.

Schulte, who also worked for the National Security Agency before joining the CIA, left the intelligence community in 2016 and took a job in the private sector, according to a lengthy statement he wrote that was reviewed by The Post.

The CIA declined to comment.

Schulte said in the statement that he joined the intelligence community to fulfill what he saw as a patriotic duty to respond to the attacks of Sept. 11, 2001.

Schulte also claimed that he reported "incompetent management and bureaucracy" at the CIA to that agency's inspector general as well as a congressional oversight committee. That painted him as a disgruntled employee, he said, and when he left the CIA in 2016, suspicion fell upon him as "the only one to have recently departed [the CIA engineering group] on poor terms," Schulte wrote.

Schulte said he had also been planning a vacation with his brother to Cancun, Mexico, which may have given the appearance that he was trying to flee the country.

"Due to these unfortunate coincidences the FBI ultimately made the snap judgment that I was guilty of the leaks and targeted me," Schulte said.

Schulte, who has launched a Web page to raise money for his defense, claims that he initially provided assistance to the FBI's investigation. Following the search of his apartment in March 2017, prosecutors waited six months to bring the child pornography charges.

EXCLUSIVE: Transcripts of Lisa Page's Closed-Door Testimonies Provide New Revelations in Spygate Scandal

Jeff Carlson

Transcripts of two closed-door testimonies by Lisa Page, the former assistant general counsel at the FBI, have provided new insights into the actions of the FBI, DOJ, and others—including CIA Director John Brennan—regarding their investigation into Donald Trump.

Included in the transcripts provided to us is information suggesting Brennan was aware of the so-called Steele dossier in early August 2016, and that he included information regarding the dossier in a briefing given to then-Sen. Harry Reid (D-Nev.).

Other key points in Page's testimony before Congress:

- The FBI appears to have considered investigating President Trump for obstruction of justice both before and after FBI Director James Comey was fired.
- Page says the DOJ refused to pursue a gross-negligence charges against Hillary Clinton over her use of a private email server to send classified information.
- FBI agent Michael Gaeta, head of the Eurasian Crime Squad, who received the dossier from former MI6 spy Steele in July 2016 is referred to in the transcript as Steele's handler.
- The FBI maintained a previously unknown verification file for the Steele dossier. Congressional investigators did not previously know of its existence.
- John Carlin, the head of the DOJ's National Security Division, was kept abreast of the FBI's investigative activities through contact with then-Deputy FBI Director McCabe.
- Page worked directly for DOJ official Bruce Ohr for at least five years and had met his wife, Nellie, once.
- The role of FBI Agent Jonathan Moffa and DOJ official George Toscas may have been greater than initially assumed.

The interviews with Page were conducted by Congressional lawmakers on July 13 and 16, 2018, in an unclassified setting, with the appropriate agency counsel present to ensure that classified information did not enter into the unclassified setting.

Page testified that she joined the team of special counsel Robert Mueller around May 18, 2017—and that FBI Agent Peter Strzok was considered for inclusion shortly thereafter. Page's role was to bridge the gap and transition between what we as a team knew and the evidence that we had gathered to date on the collusion investigation and sort of imparting that knowledge to the new special counsel team," she said.

Page, who acknowledged her personal relationship with Strzok at several points during the interview, noted that initially, Strzok was not brought over as the senior executive to run the investigation. Another individual was, and that was not successful. It was not a good match with Mr. Mueller. He did not really have the sufficient counterintelligence background to be effective. That individual would later be identified as John Brown.

Page noted that she only traveled abroad once while she worked for McCabe, in December 2016, on official business in London. Strzok traveled with her, as did three other unnamed individuals. One individual that Page specified as not being part of the trip was Bill Priestap, the FBI's head of counterintelligence. Page was prohibited by FBI counsel for detailing the purpose of her visit.

Prior to her work for Deputy FBI Director McCabe, Page worked within the DOJ where Bruce Ohr was her direct supervisor for five to six years. Page also met Nellie Ohr, Bruce Ohr's wife, at a summer barbeque that Ohr held for the office in 2011.

One particularly interesting bit of information is that Page read the memos written by then-FBI Director James Comey almost in real time. As she stated in testimony, "I reviewed most of them within a day or on the same day that they were created."

According to Page, others who were privy to Comey's memos included four additional FBI officials, "Jim Rybicki, Mr. McCabe, Mr. Ghattas, maybe Mr. Bowdich."

Strzok did not have access to Comey's memos. McCabe also kept memos which Page reviewed, including "one or two" that pertained to meetings with President Donald Trump. During questioning, it became apparent that the McCabe memos were "relevant to the matters that the special counsel is investigating."

Page Denies Bias, But Says FBI Focussed More on Trump Than Clinton

Page steadfastly maintained there was no bias present in either the Clinton-email investigation or the Trump-Russia investigation on the part of anyone within the FBI or the DOJ and went to some lengths to illustrate that, in general, FBI personnel don't like most of the people they tend to investigate.

At the same time, Page repeatedly and openly admitted to placing a greater emphasis and weight on the Trump-Russia investigation than the Clinton-email investigation:

"If you were weighing resources with respect to which poses a graver threat to national security, which is more, frankly, important, there is no doubt at least in mine or anybody else's mind that I know that the Russia investigation posed an incredible threat to national security, and whether we got into the Weiner laptop simply did not."

Page returned to this topic several times:

"The notion that there might be more emails that have not previously been seen that existed on Hillary Clinton's email server just simply don't even enter into the realm of the same room of seriousness. The Clinton investigation involved activities that had taken place 3 years prior. It's an entirely historical investigation."

"In the assessment of the Counterintelligence Division, they still don't even come close to the threat posed if Russia had co-opted a member of a political campaign."

Although Page admitted to a personal dislike for Trump, she also admitted to a less-than-favorable view of Hillary Clinton, noting that while she did not like then-candidate Trump, she â wasnâ t particularly fond or favorable toward Secretary Clinton. Page summed her position up thusly: â I mean, given a Trump-Clinton race, yes, I was supporting Clinton, but I was not a particularly big fan of hers.â

The role of FBI agent Jonathan Moffa, currently a deputy assistant director at the Federal Bureau of Investigation, may have been greater than previously understood. Page noted that most of the FBI personnel involved in the Clinton and Trump-Russia investigations were separate from each otherâ they worked on one investigation or the other.

Strzok and Moffa, both from the FBIâ s Counterintelligence Division, worked on both investigations, as Page noted:

â Really itâ s the people that met with Jim Comey. Those are the only people that were really the same with respect to both teams. So itâ s the same general counsel, the same deputy general counsel, me, Mr. McCabe, Dave Bowdich. The EAD for National Security Branch changed, but that was just because of regular personnel turnover.

â Bill Priestap was the same. Pete was the same. Jon Moffa was the same. But other than that, all of the rest of the personnel were, to the best of my knowledgeâ there could have been one or twoâ but all of the rest of the personnel on the Clinton team and the Russia team were different.â

DOJ Influence

Page also repeatedly noted a tension between the FBI and DOJ, noting that the DOJ was far more cautious in their approach to matters and was ultimately responsible for the decision not to prosecute in the Clinton Case.

Another aspect that developed in the dynamic between the DOJ and the FBI was pressure from the department to place additional people into the FBIâ s investigation. Page noted that â as soon as the planning started to begin to interview some of the more high-profile witness, not just Mrs. Clinton but also Huma Abedin, Cheryl Mills, Jake Sullivan, and her sort of core team, the Department wanted to change the sort of structure and the number of people who were involved.â

In particular, David Laufman, a Deputy Assistant Attorney General and head of counterintelligence for the DOJâ s National Security Division at the time, pushed extensively to be present for the higher profile interviews. As Page noted, this quickly spiralled into a problem for the FBI:

â Once we started talking about including David, then the U.S. Attorneyâ s Office also wanted to participate in the interviews, although they had participated in virtually none by that point. And so then the U.S. Attorneyâ s Office was pushing to have the AUSAs [Assistant U.S. Attorney], who were participating in the Clinton investigation, also participate.â

â And so now, all of a sudden, we were going from our standard two and two to this burgeoning number of people.â

Apparently, Laufman felt so strongly that he went to his boss, George Toscas, the Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the National Security Division, who then approached Deputy FBI Director Andrew McCabe directly.

The DOJâ s ongoing influence was felt in other ways as well. Cheryl Mills and Heather Samuelson, both fact witnesses, were allowed to attend Clintonâ s interview as her attorneys. As Page admitted, â I would agree with you that it is not typically appropriate or operationally necessary to have fact witnesses attend the interview.â

The decision to allow attendance of fact witnesses during Clintonâ s interview came from the DOJ, although Page said she was not certain who had made the decision. She noted that the FBI protested the move but were overridden, so the decision must have come from a senior level within the DOJ.

Disagreements Between the FBI and DOJ

As Page noted during her testimony, â there were lots and lots and lots of disagreements between the FBI and the Department.â One issue of ongoing contention was Clintonâ s actual email server:

â There was a great deal of discussion between the FBI and the Department with respect to whether to proceed, obtain the server which housed the bulk of Secretary Clintonâ s emails, pursuant to consent or pursuant to a subpoena or other compulsory process.â

Additionally, access to the laptops of Clintonâ s aides and personal lawyers was an area of particular contention:

â There were, I think, months of disagreement with respect to obtaining the Mills and Samuelson laptops. So Heather Mills andâ Cheryl Mills and Heather Samuelson were both lawyers who engaged in the sorting. Once it had been identified that Secretary Clinton had these emailsâ Iâ m guessing itâ s pursuant to the FOIA request, but I donâ t really knowâ sheâ well, our understanding is that she asked her two lawyers to take the bulk of the 60,000 emails and to sort out those which were work-related from those which were personal and to produce the work-related ones to the State Department.

â They did so. That 30,000 is sort of the bulk of the emails that we relied on in order to do the investigative technique, although we found other emails a jillion other places. We, the FBI, felt very strongly that we had to acquire and attempt to review the content of the Mills and Samuelson laptops because, to the extent the other 30,000 existed anywhere, that is the best place that they may have existed.â

â And notwithstanding the fact that they had been deleted, you know, we wanted at least to take a shot at using, you know, forensic recovery tools in order to try to ensure that, in fact, the sorting that occurred betweenâ or by Mills and Samuelson was done correctly.â

According to Page, the ongoing dispute with the DOJ ran from â February/March-ish of 2016â to June of 2016. Page also noted one other critical factor in the investigation: â the FBI cannot execute a search warrant without approval from the Justice Department.â

Notably, Page, an experienced lawyer, thought the legal case could be made that the Mills and Samuelson laptops should be made available for forensic examination. As she noted, the frustration within the FBI came, in part, from the DOJâ s â unwillingness to explain their reasoning.â

Page noted that this issue regarding the laptops rose to â the head of the OEO, the Office of Enforcement Operations, which is the unit at the Justice Department who would have to approve a warrant on a lawyerâ because, of course, these were all lawyer laptops. It rose to that individual, it rose to George Toscas, over the course of this 3 months or so.â

Toscas will also come up in the section below relating to his boss, John Carlin.

Equally important, the issue, at least once, rose even higher:

â I think that even the Director [Comey] may have had a conversation with Sally Yates, the DAG [Deputy Attorney General], about it.â

Page was also critical of the State Departmentâ s handling of the affair, noting, â rather than the State Department itself conducting that analysis of whether or not there wasâ or whether these emails were work-related or not, deferred to Secretary Clinton to do that.â

Emails to a Third Party

During one exchange, one of the Representatives questioning her noted, â we have information from the inspector general of the intelligence community â l that there were anomalies that would suggest that there was copies of every email going to a third party â l Is this news to you today?

Page admitted it was and noted it was â completely baffling to me.â

She was then asked the obvious question: â why would the investigative team not have had multiple interviews with Mr. Rucker, who brought it to the FBIâ s attention originally?â

â My understanding is that the IC IG [Intelligence Community Inspector General] did refer the existence of the server to the FBI, but that was because of the existence of classified information on that server, not because of any anomalous activity, not because of potential intrusion activity. Because itâ s not my understanding that the IC IG conducted any sort of forensic analysis like that.â

â So what youâ re telling me, it would surprise you to know today that, if there were anomalies, that the inspector generalâ s forensic team found those before it was referred to the FBI?â

â To the extent that a foreign government or even a criminal outlet had had access to Secretary Clintonâ s private email server, that would have been something we cared very much about. And itâ s my understanding that there was no evidence that would have supported that kind of conclusion.â

Pageâ s Commentary on the DOJ

Page, while never actually accusing the DOJ of direct wrongdoing, also appeared to be no fan of the department. Some commentary from her testimony:

â We all felt that we [the FBI] were more credible than the Justice Department to close this investigation out.â

â We, the whole team, really, felt that the Justice Department, being led by Democrats, would be to essentially absolve the Democratic candidate.â

â She is so loathed, she is a very polarizing figure, Secretary Clinton, and so we all knew it was 100 percent consistent and universal that she wasâ there was not a prosecutable case. And we, the FBI, thought that that message was more credible coming from the FBI, who is independent and is not a political sort of body, in the same way that the Justice Department is being headed by political appointees who have closer relationships with the White House.

Page also discussed the DOJ's reaction to Comey's decision to hold his solitary press conference:

I don't honestly have the sense that the Attorney General was ultimately disappointed, because it really did let the Justice Department off the hook. Everybody talks about this as if this was the FBI investigation, and the truth of the matter is there was not a single step, other than the July 5th statement, there was not a single investigative step that we did not do in consultation with or at the direction of the Justice Department.

In relation to then-Attorney General Loretta Lynch, Page had a notable observation:

I am not sure she ever formally recused herself. She sort of, I think, did a half step, which I think she's been criticized for, which was that she didn't fully sort of step away from the investigation following the tarmac incident. She said that she would defer to the sort of judgment of the career prosecutor. So I don't think I wouldn't we can call that a recusal if that's how you want to frame it, but I don't know that that legally would be considered one.

Gross Negligence and Intent

Of particular note throughout the interview was the discussion of intent. Page noted that what they were looking for was an intent to mishandle classified information. She continued, I cannot point to anything with respect to what the team uncovered that spoke to her having an intent to mishandle classified information.

Page spent a fair amount of time describing the legal aspects of the term gross negligence and why that specific language was removed from Comey's July 5, 2016, exoneration memo of Clinton:

We neither had sufficient evidence to charge gross negligence, nor had it ever been done, because the Department viewed it as constitutionally vague.

The reference to the Justice Department would be repeated multiple times with Page noting, we had multiple conversations with the Justice Department about bringing a gross negligence charge. And that's, as I said, the advice that we got from the Department was that they did not think that it was constitutionally vague and not sustainable.

This was the rationale as to why every single person on the team, whether FBI or DOJ, knew far earlier than July that we were not going to be able to make out sufficient evidence to charge a crime.

As to whether a charge could be brought under the gross negligence statute, Page noted that that's a determination made by the Department [DOJ]. Notably, this determination was made before Clinton or anyone else had been interviewed by the FBI.

One Representative pointed out that the subject might be able to provide the missing element of intent during a yet-to-be had interview, but Page made clear the full impact of the DOJ's position:

Let's assume things are going swimmingly and, in fact, all 17 of those witnesses admit, We did it, it was on purpose, we totally wanted to mishandle classified information, gross negligence would still have been off the table because of the Department's assessment that it was vague. We would have other crimes to now charge, but gross negligence would not have been among them.

Page admitted that it was not entirely clear what the DOJ decision was based on, noting, “I presume they looked at case law in which it had been applied. I really don’t know. I don’t have personal knowledge about what the Department did in order to come to that conclusion.”

When pressed, Page attempted to clarify the FBI’s position as investigators, saying that “at the end of the day, this is the Department’s determination. It is up to the Department to determine whether we have sufficient evidence to charge a case.” Later she was a bit more direct:

“The Justice Department brings charges, and it was the Justice Department’s assessment that they did not have—whether they had—I don’t know whether they had evidence or not of gross negligence but that gross negligence was not available as a statute to bring because it’s of its constitutional vagueness and its untestedness in court.”

John Carlin’s Role

John Carlin was an assistant attorney general and head of the DOJ’s National Security Division (NSD). He had previously served as chief of staff to then-FBI Director Robert Mueller.

Carlin announced his resignation the day after he filed the Government’s proposed 2016 Section 702 certifications. This filing would be subject to intense criticism from the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court (FISC) following disclosures made by NSA Director Mike Rogers. Significant changes to the handling of raw FISA data would result.

Carlin was replaced with Mary McCord—who would later accompany Acting AG Sally Yates to see White House Counsel Don McGahn regarding Trump’s National Security Adviser General Michael Flynn.

Page was asked at several points regarding influence from political appointees. At one point in the discussion, she singled out Carlin—and what she had to say proved interesting:

“I do know that at least John Carlin, for example, who is a political appointee was kept abreast of the sort of investigative activity that was going on. And the only reason I know this is because when there was conflicts between us and DOJ, John might call over to—John Carlin might call over to Andy McCabe, and sort of make his team’s pitch, and then Andy would, you know, sort of the back and forth would go on. So it is clear that John had, was getting some sort of briefing, but he was not, it was, it never occurred by the FBI, which is, in my view, atypical.”

In response to a question asking who was McCabe’s direct counterpart at the DOJ on the investigation, Page responded, “it would have been John. It was either John Carlin or George Toscas who would have, who would have reached out to Mr. McCabe.”

The Congressional staffer who was doing this particular line of questioning appeared to attempt to mitigate the information just revealed by Page:

“Numerous witnesses have confirmed to us that George Toscas, a career prosecutor, was in charge of the day-to-day operation of DOJ on this investigation. And that Carlin and other political folks above him had briefings certainly, so they had knowledge but didn’t have input in the investigation.”

“Do you have any personal knowledge of John Carlin, Loretta Lynch, Sally Yates, or other political appointees at the DOJ issuing orders on how to conduct the Midyear investigation?” Page was asked.

Page answered that she had “no personal knowledge of that.” Despite the attempts to shift the conversation, these admissions are notable.

Carlin was a very senior official within the DOJ. He was also Toscas's boss. It was Toscas who was contacted by New York prosecutors (possibly Preet Bharara) involved in the Anthony Weiner investigation regarding the Clinton emails found on Weiner's computer. In response, Toscas contacted McCabe, his counterpart at the FBI, ultimately forcing McCabe to inform Comey of the existence of Clinton emails on Weiner's laptop.

Brennan's Role

Page staunchly maintained that any briefings given to the White House were always about the Russian active measures effort and were not in relation to Crossfire Hurricane, the FBI's name for their counterintelligence investigation into the Trump-Russia allegations.

Brennan has admitted during congressional testimony that his intelligence helped establish the FBI counterintelligence investigation:

"I was aware of intelligence and information about contacts between Russian officials and U.S. persons that raised concerns in my mind about whether or not those individuals were cooperating with the Russians, either in a witting or unwitting fashion, and it served as the basis for the FBI investigation to determine whether such collusion [or] cooperation occurred."

This admission is important, particularly since Rep. Devin Nunes (R-Calif.) had previously disclosed that no official intelligence was used to open the FBI's investigation.

Brennan's role was highlighted again during testimony, as one Representative questioning Page questioned her in relation to an Aug. 25, 2016, text message: "What are you doing after the CH brief?" CH almost certainly referred to Crossfire Hurricane.

Page was asked specifically about an event that occurred on the same day:

"It's the same day that Director Brennan is briefing Harry Reid, is why I ask. And so what you're saying is you were unaware that Director Brennan was briefing Harry Reid that same day?"

Page said she was unaware of Brennan's briefing to Reid. She was then asked the following:

"You give a brief on August the 25th. Director Brennan is giving a brief. It's not a Gang of Eight brief. It is a one-on-one, from what we can tell, a one-on-one briefing with Harry Reid at that point. And it becomes apparent, based on your text messages and based on Director Comey's emails, that you all are aware that that conversation took place. Were you aware that Director Brennan had a briefing with Harry Reid and that you expected a letter from Harry Reid?"

Page noted that she remembered the letter sent by Reid, but seemed confused as to Brennan's involvement and possible knowledge of the Steele dossier. Worth noting is that while some within the FBI likely had parts of the dossier in July, the Counterintelligence investigative team did not receive it until mid-September during a trip to Rome where they met personally with Steele.

The Representative, who was clearly aware of the disparity in timing, focused on precisely how Brennan might have been aware of the dossier in August:

Rep.: So what you're saying is, is that you had no knowledge of these potential unverified memos prior to the middle part of September in your investigation?

Page: That is correct, sir.

Rep.: Okay. So on August 30th, you and Peter are going back and forth, and you go, âHere we go.â If youâll look at 9:44:50 on August the 30th, you go, âHere we go.â And itâs referencing âHarry Reid Cites Evidence of Russian Tampering in the U.S. Vote and Seeks FBI.â Now, what happens is, and what I guess gives me a little bit of concern is, if you drop down, that if you drop down to the same day, August 30th, 9:45, it says: âThe Dâ which I assume means Directorâ âsaid at the a.m. brief that Reid had called him and told him that he would be sending the letter.â

Page: Okay.

Rep.: So you get a brief that says, well, we got the letter, but itâs almost like itâs a coordinated effort between Harry Reid and the FBI Director, because obviously, heâs briefing you.

After a bit of back and forth, Page responded, âI donât know what Harry Reid was told or why or what the purpose of Brennan [was.]â

The Representative pressed on:

âWhy would Director Brennan be aware of things that the FBI was not aware of at this particular point when it actually would potentially involve, according to Peter Strzokâs word on January 10th of 2017, an unverified salacious set of memos?â

And then the big reveal:

Rep.: We have documents that would suggest that in that briefing the dossier was mentioned to Harry Reid and then obviously weâre going to have to have conversations. Does that surprise you that Director Brennan would be aware [of the dossier]?

Page: Yes, sir. Because with all due honesty, if Director Brennanâs so we got that information from our source, right? The FBI got this information from our source. If the CIA had another source of that information, I am neither aware of that nor did the CIA provide it to us if they did, because the first time we Rep.: We do know there are multiple sources.

Page: I do know that. I do know that the information ultimately found its way lots of different places, certainly in October of 2016. But if the CIA as early as August, in fact, had those same reports, I am not aware ofâ Iâm not aware of that and nor do I believe they provided them to us, and that would be unusual.

Rep.: Were you aware that Christopher Steele had conversations or multiple conversations with Fusion GPS and others outside of just working special intel for you?

Page: As of August of 2016, I donât know who Christopher Steele is. I donât know that heâs an FBI source. I donât know what he does. I have never heard of him in all of my life. So let me just sort of be clear. When the FBI first receives the reports that are known as the dossier from an FBI agent who is Christopher Steeleâs handler in September of 2016 at that time, we do not know whoâs we donât know why these reports have been generated. We donât know for what purpose.

A bit later in the discussion, the representative asked another question:

âSo you donât know whether itâs a coordinated effort to get you those documents or not at that point in September?â

Page responds, “Coordinated by whom, sir?”

Rep.: Anybody, other than a confidential human source saying, “Listen, I’ve got reason to be concerned and bring it to you.” It could be coordinated by the CIA. It could have been coordinated by Fusion GPS. You don’t know.

Page: At the time that we received the documentation, no. What we have is the preexisting relationship with the source and the reliability of his prior reporting.

FISA Briefings & White House Knowledge

At several points, Page noted a frustration on the part of the FBI in relation to the speed with which the DOJ was moving in the FISA spy warrant application process.

When questioned about the need to move swiftly, Page noted, “there was an operational reason that we were pushing to get the FISA up, which I am not at liberty to discuss.” Upon further questioning Page tried to provide slightly more clarity, “we had an operational reason that we wanted to get this thing up quickly with respect to the subject himself.”

According to Page’s testimony, she first learned of plans to obtain a FISA warrant on Trump campaign adviser Carter Page approximately a month before the FISA was granted on Oct. 21, 2016.

Page disclosed that Deputy Assistant Attorney General Stu Evans was the person within the DOJ who was in charge of the entire FISA process, but notably, the FBI chose not to tell Evans that they had opened a counterintelligence investigation:

“We were so concerned about the fact that we were opening this investigation and we were so concerned about leaks that we were literally individually making decisions about who to tell and who not to tell, because we were trying to keep it so closely held.”

According to Page, the only DOJ official they told was George Toscas, the Deputy Assistant Attorney General in the National Security Division. Without forewarning to the FBI, Toscas informed Evans in August 2016 “possibly earlier” of the FBI’s newly opened investigation.

The text in question was from Aug. 10, 2016, and was paraphrased by one of the congressional representatives:

“I remember what it was, Toscas already told Stu Evans everything. Sally called to set up a meeting.”

“Sally” is affirmed in the conversation as Deputy AG Sally Yates.

Page was emphatic that this discussion did not have anything to do with the actual FISA but instead reflected the FBI’s concern that increasing numbers of people were learning of their investigation.

Notably, Toscas reported to John Carlin, the head of the NSD, whose actions before the FISA Court in relation to his presentation of the Government’s proposed 2016 Section 702 certifications, strongly suggest he was also aware of the FBI’s investigation. Carlin appears to have been aware of the FBI’s later FISA preparations as well.

The congressional representative then asked the following question:

What you're saying is when the Director briefed the White House 2 days prior to that, on August the 8th, or prepared for it, actually briefed him on the 10th, that it had nothing to do with any campaign. Even though George Toscas and Stu Evans knew about it.

Normally, when a member of the FBI uses the word Director they would be referring to the FBI Director. In this case, while not made absolutely clear in the transcript, it appears Director refers to CIA Director John Brennan, who had been discussed in the preceding comments relating to Brennan's briefing of Reid.

From Brennan's congressional testimony, we know that he had briefed the White House at some point in early August 2016, prior to Aug. 11:

In consultation with the White House, I personally briefed the full details of our understanding of Russian attempts to interfere in election to congressional leadership, specifically Senators Harry Reid, Mitch McConnell, Dianne Feinstein and Richard Burr; and to Representatives Paul Ryan, Nancy Pelosi, Devon Nunes and Adam Schiff between 11, August and 6, September.

Page responded to the question: Sir, I would be shocked. I would truly be stunned to discover that the Director had briefed the President on the substance of our investigation or even the existence of our investigation. I would be I can't say it didn't happen, I wasn't there, but I would be stunned to discover that.

Steele's FBI Handler

Page had earlier referenced Steele's handler:

When the FBI first receives the reports that are known as the dossier from an FBI agent who is Christopher Steele's handler in September of 2016 at that time, we do not know who we don't know why these reports have been generated.

Steele's handler is almost certainly Michael Gaeta, head of the FBI's Eurasian Crime Squad. Gaeta, an FBI agent and also assistant legal attaché at the U.S. Embassy in Rome, has known the former MI6 spy since at least 2010, when Steele provided assistance in the FBI's investigation into the FIFA corruption scandal over concern that Russia might have been engaging in bribery to host the 2018 World Cup.

On July 5, 2016, Gaeta traveled to London and met with Steele at the offices of Steele's firm, Orbis. For this visit, the FBI sought permission from the office of Victoria Nuland, the assistant secretary of state for European and Eurasian affairs. Nuland, who had been the recipient of many of Steele's reports, gave permission for the more formal meeting.

Nuland provided this version of events during a Feb. 4, 2018, appearance on CBS News' Face the Nation:

In the middle of July, when he [Steele] was doing this other work and became concerned, he passed two to four pages of short points of what he was finding and our immediate reaction to that was, this is not in our purview. This needs to go to the FBI if there is any concern here that one candidate or the election as a whole might be influenced by the Russian Federation. That's something for the FBI to investigate.

In September 2016, Steele would travel back to Rome to meet with the FBI Eurasian squad once again. It was at this meeting that Steele gave a copy of his dossier what there was of it at that time to the FBI counterintelligence team investigators.

One individual who had previous involvement with the Eurasian Crime Squad was former FBI Deputy Director McCabe:

McCabe began his career as a special agent with the FBI in 1996, the FBI states on its website. He first reported to the New York division, where he investigated a variety of organized crime matters. In 2003, he became the supervisory special agent of the Eurasian Organized Crime Task Force.

McCabe remained with the Eurasian squad until 2006, when he was moved to FBI headquarters in Washington.

The question that has yet to be answered was who, exactly, did Gaeta give the dossier to and when. Was it transmitted to FBI leadership? If so, why did the counterintelligence team have to travel to Rome in September to get their first copy from Steele.

And finally, potentially the biggest question: Did Brennan receive a copy of the dossier via Gaeta or whomever he transmitted a copy to in the summer of 2016 following Gaeta's return?

The FBI's Verification File & the Dragon FISA

Page testified that as soon as they received the Steele dossier in September, they set about trying to prove or disprove every single factual statement in the dossier. Page noted that to the best of my knowledge, we were never able to disprove any statement in it.

This seems somewhat odd given that Comey told congressional investigators the Steele dossier still wasn't verified as of May 2017. Additionally, her assertion does not appear to address the generally debunked claim that Cohen was in Prague.

In response to Page's comments, clarification was requested:

Rep.: Ms. Page, are you talking about the Woods file?

Page: I'm not talking about the Woods file. I'm talking about a separate effort that was undertaken in order to try to verify for investigative purposes, not for purposes of the FISA, but a separate effort undertaken to try to validate the allegations contained within the Steele reporting.

It quickly became apparent that this document has not been seen by congressional investigators. One Representative, who noted he has seen the Woods file, was clearly unaware of this file's existence.

This discussion quickly led into another area: an Oct. 18, 2016, email from Strzok containing the subject line: Re: Dragon FISA.

Page quickly noted that she could not discuss the matter in an unclassified setting but would be able to discuss the matter with congressional investigators in a classified setting.

The Dragon FISA was referenced in an article by John Solomon in The Hill:

In one email exchange with the subject line: Crossfire FISA, Strzok and Lisa Page discussed talking points to get then-FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe to persuade a high-ranking DOJ official to sign off on the warrant.

Crossfire Hurricane was one of the code names for four separate investigations the FBI conducted related to Russia matters in the 2016 election.

At a minimum, that keeps the hurry the F up pressure on him, Strzok emailed Page on Oct. 14, 2016, less than four weeks before Election Day.

Four days later the same team was emailing about rushing to get approval for another FISA warrant for another Russia-related investigation code-named Dragon.

At this point, the potential subject of the Dragon FISA remains unknown.

Page's Russia Bias

Perhaps unsurprisingly, Page expressed strong feelings regarding Russia, noting, "I do always hate the Russians," and she singled out the nation as a national security threat far exceeding that of China or North Korea:

"Russia poses the greatest threat certainly to Western ideals of any of our foreign adversaries. And we have vast foreign adversaries. But even the threats that are posed by China or by Iran or North Korea or others doesn't speak to sort of the core of Western democracy, right?"

"It is my opinion that with respect to Western ideals and who it is and what it is we stand for as Americans, Russia poses the most dangerous threat to that way of life."

Page appeared to be singularly focused on Russia making only one reference to China throughout the entire interview.

Comey's Draft Memo

The end result of the wording in Comey's statement was widely publicized but some of the reporting details were incorrect. The term "gross negligence" was not exchanged for "extremely careless." It was simply removed from Comey's initial draft. Page explained, "extremely careless had already appeared in that draft, and we moved that paragraph up earlier in the draft."

However, a few questionable elements surrounding Comey's draft were highlighted during questioning. On May 2, 2016, Comey drafted his exoneration letter. On May 3, after learning that Trump would be the GOP nominee, Strzok sent a text noting, "Now the pressure really starts to finish the MYE. MYE being a reference to the Mid-Year Exam the FBI's case name for the Clinton email investigation. The "gross negligence" language within Comey's memo was deleted by May 6.

Page claimed this was purely bad timing and bad optics and had nothing to do with Trump's securing of the GOP nomination. By way of reassurance, she noted that the decision to omit the "gross negligence" language was the decision of another lawyer ranked at the level of GS-15.

One Representative noted the discrepancy immediately:

Rep.: Did any of the other folks that you're referencing in connection with making the change have more prosecutorial experience than Jim Comey?

Page: No.

Rep.: As someone that knows Jim Comey, is he a person that chooses his words carefully?

Page: He is, yeah. But I

Rep.: Would he throw around a term like “gross negligence” not really meaning gross negligence?

Page did not have a ready answer to this line of questioning, other than to reiterate that the DOJ had made clear the charge was not supportable. Never clarified, was why did Comey choose to include the phrase in the first place. Given the tight sequence of events, the DOJ had surely made the determination not to pursue gross negligence charges prior to Comey’s decision to use the phrase anyway.

The Insurance Policy

Another issue that was brought up several times was the famous Strzok text regarding the “Insurance Policy”:

“I want to believe the path you threw out in Andy’s office—that there is no way he gets elected—but I’m afraid we can’t take that risk. It’s like an insurance policy in the unlikely event you die before you’re 40.”

Page confirmed that Andy referred to Deputy FBI Director McCabe. Page was reminded that the text was sent just 15 days after the FBI opened its counterintelligence investigation on July 31, 2016. Page attempted to provide an explanation, but it came across as less than convincing:

“What this text reflects is our sort of continuing check-in almost with respect to how quickly to operate, what types of tools to use, trying to be as quiet as possible about it because we knew so little about what—whether this was true or not true or what was going to come, because this is, as you said, so nascent in the investigation, and then ultimately trying to balance that against my view, in this case, which was we don’t need to go at a total breakneck speed because so long as he doesn’t become President, there isn’t the same threat to national security, right.”

Perhaps realizing she’d been less than perfectly clear, Page attempted to clarify her position, noting, “this reflects: Let’s be reasonable, let’s not, you know, throw the kitchen sink at this because he’s probably not going to be elected, and so then we don’t have quite as horrific a national security threat than if we do if he gets elected.”

In fairness to Page, at a later point in the interview, she did manage to provide a somewhat more coherent explanation:

“He’s making an analogy here so my suggestion is, let’s not, you know, throw the baby out with the bath water, let’s sort of be a little bit more cautious with respect to our investigative steps because if he’s not President, this plays a less of a threat to our national security.”

“And he is saying, no, we have to, you know, do what we have to do in order to get to the bottom of this because it is like an insurance policy. There is no actual insurance policy. He is making an analogy.”

Kortan’s Role in Page’s Leaks to the Media

Page said in her testimony that she “was authorized by Deputy Director McCabe and by Mike Kortan to engage with the reporter [Devlin Barrett] on this topic.” This refers to a leak by Page to Barrett, who worked at the Wall Street Journal, regarding the FBI’s investigation into the Clinton Foundation.

Interestingly, Page highlighted the role of Kortan as assistant director of Public Affairs Office at the FBI. Kortan is mentioned nowhere in the IG’s report specific to McCabe, although he is mentioned in the IG’s June report. Kortan, who has since retired, was in place during a lengthy sequence of unauthorized disclosures highlighted by the IG's report and as Page testifies, had full knowledge of her leaks on behalf of McCabe:

â I agree with you that it is curious that there is no reference in the IG report at all to Mr. Kortan, particularly in light of what I reported, which is that both interactions with the reporter were done with Mr. Kortan, in coordination with Mr. Kortan and with Mr. Kortan at my side. So I cannot explain why there is noâ there is no reference to Mr. Kortan in any testimony, if he did give any, in the IG report.â

Kortan's involvement in Page's authorized leaks to Barrett had not been previously known.

A Possible Obstruction Case

Still another issue mentioned with some frequency were two potentially related texts:

â And we need to open the case weâ ve been waiting on now while Andy is acting.â

â We need to lock in,â redacted, â in a formal, chargeable, way.â

Again, Page confirms that Andy is indeed a reference to McCabe. Notably, that text was sent the day after Comey had been fired by Trump. Unfortunately, a certain level of clarity remains lacking as FBI counsel was limited to noting that â the decision to open the case was not about who was occupying the Director's chair.â She continued in a somewhat confusingly with, â if I was able to explain in more depth why the Director firing precipitated this text, I would.â

One Representative kept pursuing the question from multiple angles, asking, â Was that a fear that someone other than McCabe would eventually be put into that slot?â Page again consulted with counsel and noted she could not answer that question.

The Representative made the logical observation, â Well, that leads at least some of us to conclude that it may have been an obstruction of justice case.â Page responded, â thatâ s a reasonable inference, sir, but I cannot, sort of, confirm that thatâ s what we are referring to.â The dialogue continued:

Rep.: So the firing of Jim Comey was the precipitating event as opposed to the occupant of the Director's office?

Rep.: Well, other than obstruction, what could it have been?

Page: I canâ t answer that, sir. Iâ m sorry.

Rep.: Is there anything other than obstruction that it could have been?

Page maintained that the second text was a separate matter from the firstâ but time may have been a factor as it occurred in the days preceding Mueller's appointment as special counsel. Page also claimed not to know exactly what it pertained to:

â My suspicion is, we have either been interviewing some witness or have been getting kind of closer to some target, either weâ ve already had interviews or we havenâ t.â

What this is suggesting is, like, we need to start thinking about locking in whomever in a way that might be able to support charges. My suspicion is that we have somebody who we think is lying. To the extent we want to be able to charge them for lying, we need to lock them in in a formal way, in a way in which we will be able to support those charges.

The issue of obstruction came up several times, including a notable exchange that took place during the second day of testimony:

Rep.: Were there discussions about opening an obstruction of justice case or any other case against Donald Trump prior to the firing of Jim Comey on May 9th of 2017, as reflected in the Comey memos?

FBI legal counsel: Congressman, to the extent that goes into the equities of the ongoing investigation that the special counsel is now conducting, I will instruct the witness not to answer.

Normally this line of questioning ends with inferences having to be made, but in this case what appears to be an honest error on the part of Page hinted firmly at the true answer:

Rep.: I don't want any of the details. I just want to know whether there was a discussion about the possibility of opening that prior to the firing of the Director.

Page: Obstruction of justice was not a topic of conversation during the timeframe you have described.

Rep.: Okay. Then

[Discussion off the record.]

Page: Sir, I need to I need to take back my prior statement.

Rep.: Which one?

Page: Whatever the last thing I just said was. Sorry. That there were no discussions of obstruction, yeah. That is I need to take that statement back.

Rep.: So there were?

Page: Well, I think that I can't answer this question without getting into matters which are substantively before the special counsel at this time.

Rep.: Well, I think you've just answered it by not answering it. Was Andy McCabe privy to those same conversations?

Page: I can't answer this substantively, sir. I'm sorry.

Rep.: Well, were these related to some charges, whether obstruction or other charges, potentially against Donald Trump?

Page: I can't I can't answer that question, sir, without getting into the substance of matters that are now before the special counsel.

Rep.: Again, I think you're answering it by not answering it.

At a later point in testimony, this issue was potentially further clarified:

Rep.: Comey has admitted that he told the President, I think, that he wasn't under investigation during that timeframe.

Page: That is not inconsistent, sir. Somebody could not be under investigation, but there still could be discussions about potential criminal activity, and that is totally consistent with FBI policies and would not be unusual with respect to any investigation.

This provides a perfect explanation as to why Comey refused to tell the press that President Trump was not under investigation and the nature of the text messages.

The FBI had not placed Trump under any formal investigation but they were keeping their ability to do so open, and interim FBI Director McCabe may have been planning to initialize a formal investigation before a permanent director could be appointed.

A question worth asking: What happens if an interim FBI Director opens a formal investigation into a sitting president during a highly politically charged time? Is it then difficult, perhaps impossible, to appoint someone other than McCabe as a new FBI Director, especially given Comey's recent firing?

HOW TO DESTROY ANY CORRUPT COMPANY OR PERSON ON EARTH

YOU can fight back and destroy dirty oligarchs!

The tech Cartel is evil because they steal any technology they desire; they run a prostitution ring and sexually extort young women and interns in Silicon Valley; they are misogynists, ageists and racists as their history of abuses has proven; their Palo Alto Cartel operates AngelGate-type collusion and stock market insider trading schemes that harm independent business and the public; Their Cartel ran the "no poaching" CEO ring which was class-action sued by DOJ and tech workers; 90% of their divorce court files reveal horrific abuses and sex trafficking; They have an army of lobbyists that pay cash, stock market and revolving door bribes to U.S. Senators; They can even evade FBI & SEC investigations; They hire women to act as 'trophy wives' and 'beards'; they have lobbyists rig the U.S. Patent Office in order to block inventor patent rights because they are using stolen technologies; they have been caught on video and recordings beating, kicking and harming women hundreds of times; They have bought up all of the Tier-One tech law firms and order them to never help those who seek equal tech rights; they collude to abuse your privacy and make databases on the public for political control; they have to cheat to compete because they are only good with spread sheets instead of innovation; They run black-lists, character assassination attacks, collusion and other anti-trust violating acts in violation of RICO laws.

When the bad guys, and their lap-dog politicians, attack you because your products are better than theirs they are proving that they are frat boy scumbags, from Stanford and Yale, that operate in a little pack, like dogs! Their Sandhill Road operation should be raided by the FBI! The best thing that could come from the COVID pandemic is that they all are forced into bankruptcy!

When your Senator holds stock market shares in companies that exist to profit on the backs of consumers, then it is impossible for that Senator to ever do anything but be corrupt!

Navy Seal Erik Prince Outs â Disgustingâ Clinton Evidence, NYPD Warrant Info Shocks

According to sources inside the NYPD, the overwhelming amount of sickening activity found on the laptop was enough to justify arrests.

When District Judge Denise Cote issued the order last Wednesday to unseal Anthony Weinerâs laptop search warrant, she re-opened Pandoraâs Box for Bill and Hillary Clinton. A comparison of the city warrant with the federal one shows crucial differences that put the spotlight squarely on Federal Bureau of Investigation Director James Comey.

The husband of Huma Abedin, Hillaryâs most intimately close aide, got caught texting inappropriate pictures to a 15-year-old girl, so on September 26, 2016, just before the big election, New York City Police went to Magistrate Judge Ronald Ellis asking for permission to search Anthony Weinerâs laptop. The warrant spelled out that they were going to toss the whole thing to see what fell out.

According to â a very well-placed source at the NYPD,â besides 650,000 State Department emails, police found many personal messages detailing â really damning criminal information.â

Besides laundering money through the Clinton Foundation in a batch of Uranium One related messages, several reveal that Hillary occasionally went with Bill to the â sex islandâ owned by â convicted pedophile Jeffrey Epstein.â Messages prove â Bill Clinton went there more than 20 timesâ and Hillary â at least sixâ

Erik Prince, former Navy SEAL and the founder of Blackwater Security, can hardly believe â the amount of garbage that they found in these emails, of criminal activity by Hillary, by her immediate circle, and even by other Democratic members of Congress.â

Only five weeks before the big election, NYPD's blue blood was boiling. What they saw was so disgusting, that when they gave it to the FBI they threatened to go public themselves if the FBI didn't reopen the investigation and do the right thing with timely indictments.

They were chomping at the bit to do a press conference announcing the [arrest] warrants and the additional arrests they were about to make. The Justice Department assured them it would be taken care of.

The whole fiasco forced Attorney General Lynch and Director Comey into a corner. Only weeks before the election, Comey had no choice but to reopen the email investigation after they had managed to sweep it neatly under the carpet. That kept the New York police happy for the moment.

Comey's crew in the Hillary Clinton Fan Club immediately got damage control underway.

Blatantly biased head of counterintelligence at the FBI, Peter Strzok, was in charge of the original investigation into Clinton's improper email abuse. He was the one who finalized the language clearing Hillary Clinton of any illegal activity as Comey announced in early July.

Two days after the New York search warrant was executed, Strzok sent a text off to his adulterous lover in the Justice Department, Lisa Page, on September 28.

Got called up to Andy's earlier. Hundreds of thousands of emails turned over by Weiner's attorney to SDNY, includes a ton of material from spouse. Sending team up tomorrow to review. This will never end.

Andy is Deputy Director of the FBI Andrew McCabe. That proves he knew about the emails at the end of September.

Comey claims that McCabe, Strzok and the rest of the conspiracy didn't tell him about what they found in the emails until October 27. Until then, they had been ignoring everything except the metadata.

Even by limiting what they looked at to subject, sent date, and addressee, McCabe's unit found things they had to report whether they wanted to or not.

To make things worse, just three days before, on October 24, 2016, the press reported that immediately after McCabe was appointed to run the Clinton investigation, his wife got a $675,000 campaign donation from Clinton bag-man Terry McCauliffe.

Comey issued a fresh and tightly limited subpoena on October 28. Anything other than possibly mishandled classified government emails was strictly off limits. Law enforcement personnel will make reasonable efforts to restrict their search to data falling within the categories of evidence specified in the warrant.

As for the mutinous NYPD officers who were itching to slap on some cuffs, they've gotten huge pushback, to the point of coercion, from the Justice Department. Barack Obama's DOJ went as far as threatening one officer with conveniently trumped-up criminal charges.

McCabe and Lisa Page, who was acting as his legal counsel, both had to recuse themselves from the investigation.

Meanwhile, in a Tony Podesta style public relations coup of the century, the Pizzagate scandal was unleashed.

By salting the core tidbits that Erik Prince had dangled to the public into the wildest and most horrific horror story they could think of, the Washington D.C. spin doctors fed the press manufactured stories. Just like the Russians did to Christopher Steele.

By dangling outrageous misinformation in front of salivating, Clinton-hating, Trump supporters about the Clintonsâ cavorting on a not so Virgin Island with sex maniac Jeffrey Epstein, they easily diffused the truth into a â McMartin Preschoolâ illusion.

Clinton minions cooked up an evil pizzeria, then mercilessly destroyed the false planted narrative in public, managing to clear away all the scandal through made up fiction. Now, nobody can even talk about related facts because they look like a fool. â Oh, you mean pizzagate, thatâ s been debunked.â However, NYPD officers know better.

There is one simple way to clear up all the confusion. â This kind of evil, this kind of true dirt on Hillary Clinton â look, you donâ t have to make any judgments. Just release the emails,â Prince suggests. â Just dump them. Let them out there. Let people see the light of truth.â

Everything Your Corrupt Senator Does Is Based On A Secret Investment Bank "Waterfall Chart" For Their Personal Profits

By Deacon Cain

Senator Dianne Feinstein is pushing for a glut of Mexican immigrants because her covert Goldman Sachs bankers showed her their "Waterfall Chart that says that THREE MILLION NEW MEXICANS IN CALIFORNIA WILL ADD SIX MILLION DOLLARS INTO HER HUSBAND RICHARD BLUM'S BANK ACCOUNT!

How does that work?

Does that sound like dirty politics at the deepest darkest level? It is!

Here is the science behind it. In lay person terms: It is a graph about how complicated things can ending up making a given corrupt Senator, personally, rich. In political corruption, it assumes that the public are just pawns and sheep to be used to get to your personal profit goal. In science-speak:

"A waterfall chart is a form of data visualization that helps in understanding the cumulative effect of sequentially introduced positive or negative values. These intermediate values can either be time based or category based. The waterfall chart is also known as a flying bricks chart or Mario chart due to the apparent suspension of columns (bricks) in mid-air. Often in finance, it will be referred to as a bridge.

Waterfall charts were popularized by the Democrat's strategic consulting firm McKinsey & Company in its presentations to political clients.^{[1][2]}

Complexity can be added to waterfall charts with multiple total columns and values that cross the axis. Increments and decrements that are sufficiently extreme can cause the cumulative total to fall above and below the axis at various points. Intermediate subtotals, depicted with whole columns, can be added to the graph between floating columns.

The waterfall, also known as a Bridge or Cascade chart, is used for understanding how an initial value is affected by a series of intermediate positive or negative values. Usually the Initial and the Final Values (End Points) are represented by whole columns, while the Intermediate Values are shown as floating columns that begin based on the value of the previous column. The columns can be color-coded for distinguishing between positive and negative values.

A waterfall chart can be used for analytical purposes, especially for understanding or explaining the gradual transition in the quantitative value of an entity which is subjected to increment or decrement. Often, a waterfall or cascade chart is used to show changes in revenue or profit between two time periods.^[3]

Waterfall charts can be used for various types of quantitative analysis, ranging from inventory analysis to performance analysis.

Waterfall charts are also commonly used in financial analysis to visually track how a net value is arrived at through gains and losses over time. It is also common to show the line items from an Income Statement or Statement of Cash Flows as a Waterfall or Cascade chart. Other non business applications include tracking demographic changes over time, human resource management, and tracking of historical legal activity.

Inventory analysis using waterfall chart

There are several sources for automatic creations of Waterfall Charts (PlusX , Origin, etc.)

It is easy to manipulate a viewer's opinion on the current situation by changing the order of the different categories. Comparing two different waterfall charts (for example for two different months) is very hard."

Goldman Sachs professional political manipulators fund waterfall charts to be useful when you are interested in visualizing a starting quantity, positive and negative changes to that quantity, and the resulting ending quantity. For example, it's sometimes useful to visualize changes in the number of voters in a given state over a period of time, say, over the course of a year. The starting quantity is the beginning of period (e.g. beginning of year) headcount. In terms of changes, there are some things that increase voter headcount (fake issues, racial uprisings, abortion controversy, etc.) and some things that decrease voter headcount (boring news cycles, good economy, etc.). When all of these changes are applied, we are left with the ending (end of year) voter headcount that will push insider trading and government contract opportunities to deals owned by the Senator.

The public is totally irrelevant to a crooked Senator like Feinstein or Pelosi.

They will screech about abortions, polar bears, immigration, etc. all day long as much as it will get voter emotions riled up.

The more people vote for things that their husbands pown the stocks in, the more trips to the Post Ranch Inn they get to take.

NY POST: Explosive â Secret Empiresâ Book Uncovers Joe Biden, John Kerry Billion-Dollar China Bombshell

New York Post, Lintao Zhang/Getty, Nicolas Asfour/Getty

by NEWS6879

On Thursday, the New York Post published an exclusive excerpt of the soon-to-be-released investigative blockbuster Secret Empires: How the American Political Class Hides Corruption and Enriches Family and Friends by Government Accountability Institute President and Breitbart News Senior Editor-at-Large Peter Schweizer.

In this excerpt, Schweizer reveals that former Vice President Joe Bidenâ s son Hunter Bidenâ s firm scored a $1 billion deal with the Bank of Chinaâ s Bohai Capital just 10 days after Vice President Biden and his son Hunter Biden returned from their 2013 trip to China.

From the New York Post:

Joe Biden and John Kerry have been pillars of the Washington establishment for more than 30 years. Biden is one of the most popular politicians in our nation's capital.

advertisement

His demeanor, sense of humor, and even his friendly gaffes have allowed him to form close relationships with both Democrats and Republicans. His public image is built around his "Lunch Bucket Joe" persona. As he reminds the American people on regular occasion, he has little wealth to show for his career, despite having reached the vice presidency.

One of his closest political allies in Washington is former senator and former Secretary of State John Kerry. "Lunch Bucket Joe" he ain't; Kerry is more patrician than earthy. But the two men became close while serving for several decades together in the US Senate. The two "often talked on matters of foreign policy," says Jules Witcover in his Biden biography.

So their sons going into business together in June 2009 was not exactly a bolt out of the blue.

But with whom their sons cut lucrative deals while the elder two were steering the ship of state is more of a surprise.

Congressional investigators learned from a new batch of text messages between anti-Trump FBI investigators that a "secret society of folks" within the Department of Justice and the FBI may have come together in the "immediate aftermath" of the 2016 election to undermine President Trump, according to Rep. John Ratcliffe (R-TX) who has reviewed the texts.

John Ratcliffe

@RepRatcliffe

The thousands of texts @TGowdySC and I reviewed today revealed manifest bias among top FBI officials against @realDonaldTrump. The texts between Strzok and Page referenced a "secret society."

The new texts were included in a 384-page DOJ document release to Congressional investigators last Friday - during which Congress was notified in the cover letter that that five months of text messages from December 14, 2016 to May 17, 2017 have gone missing (If only the NSA had copies).

Ratcliffe was joined by Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-SC) to discuss the latest developments with Fox News host Martha McCallum, when Ratcliffe said:

What we learned today in the thousands of text messages that we reviewed that perhaps they may not have done that (checked their bias at the door). There's certainly a factual basis to question whether or not they acted on that bias. We know about this insurance policy that was referenced in trying to prevent Donald Trump from becoming president.

We learned today from information that in the immediate aftermath of his election that there may have been a secret society of folks within the Department of Justice and the FBI to include Page and Strzok to be working against him.

Watch:

Rep. Gowdy deflected a question over a second special counsel, but mentioned "a text about not keeping texts," and "more manifest bias against President Trump all the way through the election into the transition," and finally Gowdy said he saw a text that "Director Comey was going to update the President of the United States about an investigation" which would have been Obama - and may, Gowdy speculates, have been about the Trump team.

Regarding the "secret society," Gowdy said "You have this insurance policy in Spring 2016, and then the day after the election, what they really didn't want to have happen, there is a text exchange between these two FBI agents, these supposed to be fact-centric FBI agents saying, 'Perhaps this is the first meeting of the secret society.' So I'm going to want to know what secret society you are talking about, because you're supposed to be investigating objectively the person who just won the electoral college. So yeah -- I'm going to want to know."

As we have been reporting over the last two days, the FBI "lost" five months of text messages between anti-Trump FBI agents Peter Strzok and Lisa Page.

The explanation for the gap was "misconfiguration issues related to rollouts, provisioning, and software upgrades that conflicted with the FBI's collection capabilities."

The missing texts conveniently span the period between Dec. 14, 2016 and May 17, 2017 - the day Robert Mueller was appointed to take over the FBI's probe of alleged Trump-Russia collusion, and during the period in which the FBI would ostensibly have been hard at work on their "insurance policy" against a Trump victory - and during the period in which the "secret society" Rep. Ratcliffe referred to would have been hard at work.

A controversy also emerged following the revelation over the missing "textgate" - in that the DOJ's internal investigative unit, the Office of the Inspector General (OIG) wrote a letter in December of last year specifically stating that they had obtained text messages from Strzok and Page covering the "missing" period revealed last Friday.

Alas, it appears the Inspector General Michael Horowitz made this statement in error, as Attorney General Jeff Sessions said in a Monday statement that Horowitz was in fact the one who "discovered the FBI's system failed to retain text messages for approximately 5 months," which was confirmed by Fox News.

A Justice Department spokesperson told Fox News that the Departments Office of Inspector General also does not have any text messages between the two during that time period.

Not to worry - the DOJ, known for its honesty, will leave "no stone unturned."

Former Deputy FBI Director About To Be Torched For Misleading Inspector General, Signing Off On Improper Media Disclosure

Remember Andrew McCabe, the former Deputy Director of the FBI who was forced out last January? Well, there's a DOJ report that's about to be released that details how the top FBI official misled investigators and signed off on an 'improper media disclosure' that detailed the warring state of affairs between the bureau and the Department of Justice concerning the investigation into the Clinton Foundation (via WaPo):

The Justice Department inspector general is preparing a damaging report on former FBI deputy director Andrew McCabe, alleging he was responsible for approving an improper media disclosure, two people familiar with the matter said. One of the people said McCabe will also be accused of misleading investigators about his actions.

The report is a part of Inspector General Michael Horowitz's broad review of the FBI and Justice Department's handling of the investigation into Hillary Clinton's use of a private email server while she was secretary of state.

During that work, inspector general's investigators found that McCabe had authorized the disclosure of information to the Wall Street Journal for an October 2016 story that examined feuding inside the FBI and Justice Department around the handling of a separate investigation into Clinton's family foundation, two people familiar with the case said.

Those probing the matter believe that McCabe, who stepped down in January, misled them when they initially inquired about the subject, though one person familiar with the forthcoming report said McCabe disputes that he intentionally misled investigators.

It is unclear how McCabe is said to have misled investigators.

Guy wrote previously about what caused McCabe to leave prior to his pre-determined retirement in March. It was the DOJ inspector general, who found something disconcerting, which prompted FBI Director Chris Wray to order McCabe into another office. It would have been a demotion, so McCabe decided to exit early.

McCabe has been a controversial figure at the bureau. He's directly mentioned in the text messages between FBI agent Peter Strzok and bureau attorney Lisa Page. The number of messages are in the tens of thousands, but they're pro-Hillary and explicitly anti-Trump. This is not something you can tolerate during a counterintelligence investigation into Russia-Trump collusion, which Strzok signed off on in July of 2016. It's not something that's tolerable when you're investigating Hillary Clinton's email server, which Strzok was also apart of and there's even a text from Page wondering if the FBI was going too hard on the former first lady. The allegation of the fix being in is palpable. When Special Counsel Robert Mueller, who now heads the FBI's collusion probe, found out about the texts last summer, he removed Strzok and transferred him to human resources in August of 2017. Strzok was a top counterintelligence agent.

The other eyebrow raising text was one sent by Strzok to Page on August 15, 2016, where the former mentions meeting with Andy, McCabe, and mentions an insurance policy. That insurance is alleged to be the Trump dossier, compiled by a British ex-spook who was contracted by Fusion GPS after their services were retained by the Hillary Clinton campaign. It was opposition research that looks like was used to secure a FISA warrant to spy on former Trump adviser Carter Page. The two also discussed ways to skirt federal records regulations, so why are they still at the FBI? That's a tale for another time. For now, we await the DOJ's report on McCabe and how this is part of a long and sad story about how the nation's preeminent law enforcement and domestic intelligence agency become engulfed in politics, damaging its reputation for professionalism and impartiality on its investigations. Last December, McCabe also drew the ire of House Republicans on the Intelligence Committee after he said he didn't know where the dossier's funding came from, despite signed documents by him showing that he knew how this document was financed.

It has been a scorched earth weekend in the PR war between Donald Trump and the FBI.

In the aftermath of the report that the FBI's top lawyer - and suspected FBI leaker - James Baker, had been reassigned, and at the same time as news hit that FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe was set to retire as a result of the "Trump Insurance Policy" debacle (but only once he becomes eligible for pension benefits), Trump lashed out at top FBI officials on Saturday and Sunday, his latest in a stream of criticism aimed at an agency that has seen a sudden spike in high profile departures after Peter Strzok's publicly disclosed text message revealed a stunning climate of extreme anti-Trump bias at the FBI - including one still to be determined "Trump Insurance Policy" - just as Trump had suggested all along.

Trump swiped at multiple agency officials in a string of tweets Saturday afternoon, suggesting that FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe may have been compromised by political donations and ripping former FBI Director James Comey as a leaker.

"How can FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe, the man in charge, along with leaker James Comey, of the Phony Hillary Clinton investigation (including her 33,000 illegally deleted emails) be given $700,000 for wife's campaign by Clinton Puppets during investigation?" Trump tweeted.

The tweets Saturday from Trump, who has repeatedly jabbed at McCabe by citing his wife's ties to prominent Democrats, came after the FBI deputy testified for many hours behind closed doors on Capitol Hill this week, responding to questions from lawmakers on three congressional panels probing the Trump campaign's ties to Russia and the bureau's work. As we reported, Congressional investigators said that McCabe dodged questions on the "Trump-Russia" dossier, and his testimony "contained numerous conflicts with the testimony of previous witnesses" so much that the House Intelligence Committee is planning to issue new subpoenas next week to Justice Department and FBI Personnel.

It's hard to know who's telling us the truth, said one House investigator after McCabe's questioning - which was reportedly spearheaded by Rep. Trey Gowdy (R-SC). When asked about funding for the "Trump dossier", McCabe claimed he could not recall whether or not the Clinton campaign and the DNC funded the report - despite the alleged existence of documents which McCabe signed establishing his knowledge of its financing and provenance. Curiously, ahead of McCabe's Thursday appearance in front of the House Judiciary Committee for a "transcribed interview," the DOJ announced that FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe "will not be in a position to discuss matters that are within the scope of the investigation of Special Counsel Robert S. Mueller III."

On Sunday, Trump's feud with the FBI resumed, when the president used a tweet to quote Fox, stating that that FBI's Andrew McCabe, in addition to his wife getting all of this money from M (Clinton Puppet), he was using, allegedly, his FBI Official Email Account to promote her campaign. You obviously cannot do this. These were the people who were investigating Hillary Clinton.

To be sure, Democrats argue that the Republican criticisms of McCabe and the FBI are an effort to undermine Mueller as his investigation ramps up, and to give Trump cover should he try to remove Mueller, a step the White House insists is not on the table. Adam Schiff, the ranking Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee, responded to Trump's criticisms Saturday afternoon. "FBI would set a dangerous precedent if it forced out dedicated career public servants in capitulation to Trump and (White House) pressure," Schiff tweeted. "President has already removed one top FBI leader - Comey - over Russia; McCabe would be another."

None other than James Comey, now in active marketing mode for his upcoming book, tweeted that "Sadly, we are now at a point in our political life when anyone can be attacked for partisan gain. James Baker, who is stepping down as FBI General Counsel, served our country incredibly well for 25 years & deserves better. He is what we should all want our public servants to be" to which some twitter commentators had a sarcastic response...

As a reminder, what really happened according to the Washington Post, Baker, the FBI's general counsel, communicated with Mother Jones reporter David Corn in the weeks leading up to the November 2016 election. Corn was then the first to report the existence of the Trump dossier on Oct. 31.

Meanwhile, some Republicans have called for McCabe's ouster, accusing him of political bias, particularly over the fact that his wife received hundreds of thousands of dollars in contributions to her 2015 Virginia state Senate campaign from a super PAC led by a Clinton ally. At the same time, Benjamin Wittes, a fellow at the Brookings Institution and friend of Comey, cautioned in a tweet on Saturday that the deputy director's exit from the FBI may not be part of any kind of larger "purge" at the bureau. Then again, if more evidence of FBI collusion against Trump emerges, the "purge" - or the draining of the FBI/DOJ swamp as some have dubbed it - may just be getting started.

Further stoking the PR war between Trump and the FBI, a number of Republican lawmakers have questioned the FBI's objectivity and fairness in recent months, particularly regarding McCabe's work at the agency, while recent revelations that FBI Peter Strzok - who was in charge of the FBI's probe into Hillary's email server and was leading the investigation into Trump's Russian collusion - had sent text messages critical of Trump during the presidential race, only served to underscore speculation that the FBI may have been the critical cog in the "deep state's" plan to avoid a Trump presidency.

FBI Continues to Skirt Court Order to Turn Over McCabe Communications

Judicial Watch says bureau refusal shows contempt for rule of law

For more than two months, the FBI has failed to abide by a judge's order to turn over all of former FBI Deputy Director Andrew McCabe's text messages, emails and SMS phone messages to a government watchdog group that has filed a lawsuit on behalf of a former senior FBI special agent. The communications in question are related to McCabe's wife's unsuccessful run for Virginia State senate and might also contain invaluable information on McCabe's role in the Bureau's investigation into Hillary Clinton's private email server used to send classified information, several former FBI sources and a government official told this reporter.

In January, Judicial Watch, a formidable conservative watchdog group based in Washington D.C., filed a lawsuit against the FBI for the communications on behalf of retired FBI Supervisory Special Agent Jeff Danik. Danik spent more than 28 years with the bureau as a supervisor in the counter-terrorism division and special overseas advisor. Danik filed his original Freedom of

â They have not produced one text of McCabe's, not oneâ

Information Act (FOIA) request in October 2016 for McCabe's communications. After Danik filed his original FOIA the FBI responded on November 8 and 9, 2016 denying his request. Danik appealed to the Justice Department and in June of 2017 the DOJ wrote that the FBI should search for and turn over any pertinent documents. The FBI still refused to turn over the documents and in January he filed a joint lawsuit with Judicial Watch for the documents.

â They have not produced not one text of McCabe, not one,â said Danik, referencing the bureau. â The government is out of control and it's astonishing. Do you know what would happen if the government subpoenaed you for information and you didn't produce records that you had in your possession? You'd go to jail for contempt.â

FBI officials could not be reached immediately for comment.

Michael Horowitz, Inspector General of the U.S. Department of Justice

It's been months and the FBI continues to stonewall," said Danik.

The DOJ's Inspector General Michael Horowitz is expected to produce a report before the end of the month on the bureau's handling of the Clinton investigation and according to IG's mandate, McCabe is a significant part of that probe. According to several government sources and a former senior law enforcement official McCabe will not only be criticized by Horowitz for authorizing a leak to the Wall Street Journal on October 2016 but has also been under investigation for allegedly intervening to shut down part of the investigation into the Clinton server.

"McCabe had the authority to shut down investigations but if it's discovered that he stopped an investigation for political reasons based on his own bias that will be a significant problem for him," said a former senior government official, with knowledge of the investigation.

Danik said McCabe's communications are essential to unraveling how the bureau's leadership handled Clinton's investigation into the former presidential candidate, adding that it is more poignant after text messages between FBI special agent Peter Strzok and his paramour FBI lawyer Lisa Page revealed extreme bias against President Trump in the alleged Russia collusion investigation, as reported earlier. Strzok was removed from Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into Trump after the text messages were discovered.

Judicial Watch's president Tom Fitton expressed concern after his organization uncovered communications showing McCabe, despite massive contributions from Clinton ally Terence McAuliffe to his wife Jill McCabe in the 2015 political campaign, did not recuse himself from the Russia investigation until a week before the November 2016 election. It was originally believed that McCabe had recused himself much earlier in the investigation.

â The FBI has been playing games with text messages for some time,â said Fitton. â The arrogance in refusing to provide any text messages of Mr. McCabe shows a contempt for transparency and the rule of law.â

Danik, who spent his career at the FBI building cases, said the failure of the bureau to adequately investigate Clintonâ s use of a private server to conduct government business was an â astonishing failureâ to the American people and was criticized by many former and current agents.

â If I was allowed to conduct the investigation into who knew what, when regarding the Hillary Clinton email server, I could put that timeline together very quickly,â said Danik, in an earlier interview.

â Thereâ s a huge electronic footprint nowâ lin the FBI between text and email and instant messaging. The way that the documents are prepared in the official system. This is a large footprint that is left on an investigation and it can be quickly retrieved. You can tell very quickly the efficiency, the speed at which investigation was taken or not undertaken. I donâ t know if they donâ t want those records out because it pulls back the curtain and lets you see the framework of these investigations or maybe they are afraid of what it actually says and who it reflects on.â

The FBI has asked retired Australian policeman-turned investigative journalist, Michael Smith, to provide information he has gathered detailing multiple allegations of the Clinton Foundation receiving tens of millions of mishandled taxpayer funds, according to LifeZette.

â I have been asked to provide the FBI with further and better particulars about allegations regarding improper donations to the CF funded by Australian taxpayers,â Smith told LifeZette.

Of note, the Clinton Foundation received some \$88 million from Australian taxpayers between 2006 and 2014, reaching its peak in 2012-2013 - which was coincidentally (we're sure) Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard's last year in office.

Smith names several key figures in his complaints of malfeasance, including Bill and Hillary Clinton and multiple Australian government officials - including senior diplomat Alexander Downer, whose conversation with Trump aide George Papadopoulos that Russia had 'dirt' on Hillary Clinton allegedly launched the Trump-Russia investigation (as opposed to the Fusion GPS dossier, of course).

Within hours of the NYT publication, the paper was immediately shredded as the information Papadopoulos told Downer was already public.

The materials Smith is giving to the FBI focus on a 2007 memorandum of understanding (MOU) between the Clinton Foundation's HIV/AIDS Initiative (CHAI) and the Australian government.

Smith claims the foundation received a $25M financial advantage dishonestly obtained by deception as a result of actions by Bill Clinton and Downer, who was then Australia's minister of foreign affairs.

Also included in the Smith materials are evidence he believes shows corrupt October 2006 backdating of false tender advertisements purporting to advertise the availability of a $15 million contract to provide HIV/AIDS services in Papua New Guinea on behalf of the Australian government after an agreement was already in place to pay the Clinton Foundation and/or associates. -Lifezette

- The FBI raided the home of a whistleblower who was in possession of documents regarding the Clinton Foundation and Uranium One, according to the whistleblower's lawyer, Michael Socarras.
- The whistleblower, Dennis Nathan Cain, had turned the documents over to the Department of Justice's inspector general and both the House and Senate Intelligence committees, according to the lawyer.
- The FBI rummaged through Cain's home for six hours, even after the whistleblower handed over the documents, according to Socarras.

FBI agents raided the home of a recognized Department of Justice whistleblower who privately delivered documents pertaining to the Clinton Foundation and Uranium One to a government watchdog, according to the whistleblower's attorney.

The Justice Department's inspector general was informed that the documents show that federal officials failed to investigate potential criminal activity regarding former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, the Clinton Foundation and Rosatom, the Russian company that purchased Uranium One, a document reviewed by The Daily Caller News Foundation alleges.

The delivered documents also show that then-FBI Director Robert Mueller failed to investigate allegations of criminal misconduct pertaining to Rosatom and to other Russian government entities attached to Uranium One, the document reviewed by TheDCNF alleges. Mueller is now the special counsel investigating whether the Trump campaign colluded with Russia during the 2016 election.

â The bureau raided my client to seize what he legally gave Congress about the Clinton Foundation and Uranium One,â the whistleblower's lawyer, Michael Socarras, told TheDCNF, noting that he considered the FBI's raid to be an â outrageous disregardâ of whistleblower protections. \(RELATED: FBI Takes Aim At The Clinton Foundation\)

Sixteen agents arrived at the home of Dennis Nathan Cain, a former FBI contractor, on the morning of Nov. 19 and raided his Union Bridge, Maryland, home, Socarras told TheDCNF.

The raid was permitted by a court order signed on Nov. 15 by federal magistrate Stephanie A. Gallagher in the U.S. District Court for Baltimore and obtained by TheDCNF.

A special agent from the FBI's Baltimore division, who led the raid, charged that Cain possessed stolen federal property and demanded entry to his private residence, Socarras told TheDCNF.

On Nov. 19, the FBI conducted court authorized law enforcement activity in the Union Bridge, Maryland area, a bureau spokesman Dave Fitz told TheDCNF. At this time, we have no further comment.

Cain informed the agent while he was still at the door that he was a recognized protected whistleblower under the Intelligence Community Whistleblower Protection Act and that Justice Department Inspector General Michael Horowitz recognized his whistleblower status, according to Socarras.

U.S. Department of Justice Inspector General Michael Horowitz. REUTERS/Joshua Roberts

Cain further told the FBI agent the potentially damaging classified information had been properly transmitted to the Senate and House Intelligence committees as permitted under the act, Socarras said. The agent immediately directed his agents to begin a sweep of the suburban home, anyway.

Frightened and intimidated, Cain promptly handed over the documents, Socarras told TheDCNF. Yet even after surrendering the information to the FBI, the agents continued to rummage through the home for six hours.

After asking and getting my approval to do so, DOJ IG Michael Horowitz had a member of his staff physically take Mr. Cain's classified document disclosure to the House and Senate Intelligence committees, a Socarras told TheDCNF.

For the bureau to show up at Mr. Cain's home suggesting that those same documents are stolen federal property, and then proceed to seize copies of the same documents after being told at the house door that he is a legally protected whistleblower who gave them to Congress, is an outrageous disregard of the law, he continued.

Cain came across the potentially explosive information while working for an FBI contractor, Socarras told TheDCNF.

Cain met with a senior member of Horowitz's office at a church close to the White House to deliver the documents to the IG, according to Socarras.

Cain sat in a pew with a hoodie and sun glasses, Socarras said. Cain held a double-sealed envelope containing a flash drive with the documents. The IG official met him and, without saying a word, took the pouch over Cain's shoulder and left.

Former U.S. Secretary of State and 2016 Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton. REUTERS/Joshua Roberts

The law protects whistleblowers who are government contractors and requires the IG to share such potentially damaging information with the attorney general who at the time was Jeff Sessions.

The two law enforcement officials directed the documents be sent to the Senate and House Intelligence committees for their examination, according to Socarras, who said that a high-level IG official hand-delivered the documents to the the two intelligence committees.

I cannot believe the Bureau informed the federal magistrate who approved the search warrant that they wanted to search the home of an FBI whistleblower to seize the information that he confidentially disclosed to the IG and Congress,â Socarras told TheDCNF.

The whistleblower act is intended to protect whistleblowers within the intelligence community, which includes the FBI.

â The [intelligence community] is committed to providing its personnel the means to report violations of law,â according to a 2016 intelligence community directive.

â The [whistleblower act] authorizes employees of contractors to take government property and give it to the two intelligence committees confidentially,â Socarras told TheDCNF.

The FBI has yet to talk to Cainâ s attorney despite the raid, according to Socarras.

â After the raid, and having received my name and phone number from Mr. Cain as his lawyer, an FBI agent actually called my client directly to discuss his seized electronics,â Socarras told TheDCNF.

â Knowingly bypassing the lawyer of a represented client is serious misconduct.â

The Justice Department and the IG both declined to comment.

FBI Releases Docs Showing Hillaryâ s State Department Shopped Benghazi Story to Compliant WSJ Reporter One Week After Attack

The FBI released new documents Friday showing Hillaryâ s State Department pitched a Benghazi story to a Wall Street Journal reporter who enthusiastically complied.

Hillary Clinton's State Department gave stand down orders to Special Ops forces ready to go in and help Americans who were surrounded by hundreds of Islamic insurgents in Benghazi, Libya on September 11-12th, 2012.

The movie "13 Hours" gives personal accounts from eyewitnesses who were in Benghazi when Islamic terrorists attacked the US State Department Special Mission Compound.

We lost FOUR Americans that night. Tyrone Woods, Sean Smith, Ambassador Christopher Stevens and Glen Doherty. Never forget.

To add insult to injury, the Obama administration lied about the Benghazi attack by blaming it on a YouTube video.

Hillary Clinton also lied straight to the parents of the victims of Benghazi. The parents of two of the Americans killed sued Hillary in federal court claiming she is liable for their deaths, the Washington Times reported.

Hillary's State Department shopped a Benghazi story to then-Wall Street Journal reporter, Adam Entous about a week after the horrific terrorist attack which claimed the lives of four Americans.

Adam Entous enthusiastically complied.

It is important to note that Adam Entous is now with the Washington Post and behind many â Trump-Russiaâ hit pieces using â anonymous sources.â

Based on what I've read, it is highly likely that Entous was communicating with then State Dept spox Philippe Reines, a trusted and close aide to Hillary.

Begs the question:

Did Philippe have a major role in spreading "Trump-Russia" conspiracies?

Unfortunately for Hillary, the FBI Was Able to Recover Some of the Emails Her Staff Tried to Destroy and Judicial Watch Has Obtained Them

by Elizabeth Vaughn

In 1996, the late William Safire called Hillary Clinton â a congenital liar.â His label was to become even more apropos over time.

In response to a Freedom of Information Act request filed in May 2015, Judicial Watch received 756 pages of Clintonâs emails on Thursday which had been sent or received over her private server. Unfortunately for Hillary, the FBI had been able to recover some of the emails her staff had tried to delete and/or destroy after she had received a congressional subpoena to turn them over.

The subpoena was sent on March 4, 2015 and the emails were destroyed sometime between March 25-31st.

Contrary to Hillaryâs denials, there were both work-related and classified emails among those obtained by Judicial Watch.

Here are a few examples (obtained from Judicial Watch):

January 16, 2009 â January 24, 2009: A classified email exchange between Blair and Clinton with the subject â Re: Gaza.â

On January 16, 2009, Blair relayed information he learned from Middle East leaders and noted that he wanted to get something â resolved before Tuesdayâ (when Obama would be sworn in as president). Clinton responded to Blair on January 19, 2009, writing â Tony â We are finally moving and I am looking forward to talking w you as soon as Iâm confirmed, tomorrow or Wednesday at the latest. Your emails are very helpful so pls continue to use this address,â hr15@att.blackberry.net. Blair followed up by saying â It would be great if we could talk before any announcements are made.â

On January 16, 2009, Hillary had not yet been sworn in as Secretary of State. Yet she, like Michael Flynn, was communicating with a foreign government. Although itâs reasonable for members of a transition team to interact with their foreign counterparts, why were Flynnâs contacts with then-Russian Ambassador Sergey Kislyak monitored and recorded while Hillaryâs were unquestioned? A rhetorical question only.

January 29, 2009: Blumenthal emailed Clinton. The subject is âGood Cop, Bad Cop.â

Blumenthal informs Clinton that his sources tell him that an âattackâ on the appointment by Obama of former Sen. George Mitchell as Special Envoy to the Middle East was âcoordinated by Jewish institutional leaders and carefully scripted.â Also cited is Mitchellâs âArab descentâ as making him âpolitically vulnerable.â Blumenthal told Clinton that any conversations she had with Netanyahu âflows directly and instantly back to top (U.S.) Jewish leadership.â Further on in his memo, Blumenthal says that Netanyahu and âJewish leadershipâ should âbe expected to use political means, including outsourcing personal attacksâ to counter Obama administration moves and said Netanyahu was âdeeply connected to political networks in the U.S.â âmedia, Jewish groups, Republican leaders, and right-wing Christianâ organizations. To provide a âheat shieldâ from Netanyahuâs attacks, Blumenthal advises Clinton that Obama should hire a âbad copâ who is âorganically tied to the Presidentâ and a âpolitical appointee, Jewish, considered a true friend of Israelâ âClinton responded by saying, âThanks for these. And I will call you in the next few days.â

Early 2009: Retired Army Gen. Jack Keane sent Clinton classified information. The subject line of the email is redacted. The text contained a discussion about Iraq.

October 29, 2009:

A Clinton Foundation employee and close Clinton adviser Sid Blumenthal forwarded a proposal for a commercial contract related to improvised explosive devices (IEDs) from retired CIA officer-turned-contractor Gary Berntsen, to Clinton (copying Cheryl Mills), saying that Berntsen had been âunable to break through the bureaucracy with it.â Mills then forwarded the email to Jake Sullivan. Blumenthal noted that âCody [Shearer] and I are following up.â Blumenthal and Shearer were both implicated in the creation of the Obama administrationâs anti-Trump Russia âcollusionâ counterintelligence operation by providing âreportsâ relating to Trump-Russia collusion to the U.S. Government.

September 2, 2010:

In an email exchange marked classified, longtime Clinton confidante Lanny Davis tells Secretary Clinton that he could serve as a private channel for her to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, saying he had a âprivate and highly trusted communication line, unofficial and personal, to PM N[etanyahu].â Davis goes on to say â[N]o one on the planet (other than your wonderful husband) can get this done as well as you.â Secretary Clinton responds with classified information, saying â I will reach out to you directly and hope you will continue to do the same w me. The most important issue now is [Redacted B1].â

April 27, 2011: Former British Prime Minister Tony Blair sent classified information discussing Palestinian issues.

On May 19, 2011: Blair sent classified information about a speech.

On five occasions Clintonâs secretary, Lauren Jiloty, sent Clintonâs sensitive daily itinerary to her on her unsecure email account.

This is not a complete list, but it shows that Clinton used her private email server in the same way she would have used a secure one.

The emails speak for themselves. This is simply more confirmation that Hillary has lied and/or intentionally tried to mislead the press, lawmakers and the American people. There is ample evidence for the DOJ to open an investigation or to appoint a special counsel. Recall that the FBI had no evidence when they opened their counterintelligence investigation of candidate Donald Trump in July 2016 and no evidence when Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein appointed Robert Mueller to the special counsel in May 2017.

If Attorney General William Barr takes no action against Hillary Clinton, then Americaâs current two tier system of justice will stand. She must be held accountable.

FBI official says bureau leaked stories, then used them to get FISA warrants

FBI documents show Russia dossier author deemed 'not suitable for use': Judicial Watch Judicial Watch President Tom Fitton on how the FBI released 70 pages of heavily redacted records, which showed that ex-British spy Christopher Steele was admonished and deemed unsuitable as a confidential human source.

An FBI intelligence analyst admitted to House committees last week that bureau officials were known to leak information to the press and then use the resulting articles to help obtain surveillance warrants, according to a source with knowledge of his testimony.

Jonathan Moffa, who worked with controversial former FBI officials Peter Strzok and Lisa Page, testified last Friday behind closed doors before the House Judiciary Committee and House Oversight Committee.

The source with knowledge of his statements confirmed to Fox News that Moffa said FBI personnel would use media reports based on information they leaked to justify applications for Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act warrants.

The source told Fox News that Moffa acknowledged this â had been a practice in the past.â

Republicans have long questioned to what extent leaked information, related to the unverified anti-Trump dossier, was used as a basis for surveillance warrants against former Trump adviser Carter Page in 2016 -- when the bureau was led by James Comey and deputy Andrew McCabe.

The source told Fox News that Moffa did not specifically confirm the practice of using leaked information to bolster warrant applications was employed with regard to the dossier.

But, when pressed by the committees on whether this was common practice at the FBI, Moffa acknowledged the FBI had at least engaged in this activity in other cases.

The FBI did not immediately respond to Fox News's request for comment.

House Freedom Caucus Chairman Mark Meadows, R-N.C., told Fox News on Tuesday that the committee had evidence of the FBI's practice that would be "hard to refute."

"We know that some people at the Department of Justice and the FBI actually gave information to the media, then the stories were reported. Then they used those reports to justify further investigations," Meadows said on "America's Newsroom" Tuesday. "You know, that's like saying, we're going to incriminate on one hand, and be the jury on the other. It just doesn't work that way."

Meadows had tweeted late Monday night in reference to the Moffa statements, without naming him: "We've learned NEW information suggesting our suspicions are true: FBI/DOJ have previously leaked info to the press, and then used those same press stories as a separate source to justify FISA's."

The Daily Caller first reported on the specifics of Moffa's claims.

The Trump dossier, which contained salacious allegations about the then-presidential candidate, was compiled by ex-British spy Christopher Steele. Steele, who was also working as an FBI source, had been hired by research firm Fusion GPS to compile details for the dossier, which was funded by the Clinton campaign and Democratic National Committee.

The source familiar with Moffa's testimony told Fox News that his statements raise concerns that the bureau indeed used this practice with the dossier, referencing an article written by Yahoo! News's Michael Isikoff.

The Isikoff article was published on Sept. 23, 2016, focusing on Page's July 2016 trip to Moscow. According to a House GOP memo earlier this year, the Isikoff article did "not corroborate the Steele dossier" as the article was "derived from information leaked by Steele himself to Yahoo News." Yet the subsequent FISA application to spy on Page cited the Isikoff article, among other pieces of evidence.

"The [Carter] Page FISA application incorrectly assesses that Steele did not properly provide information to Yahoo News," the memo read. "Steele has admitted in British court filings that he met with Yahoo News and several other outlets in September 2016 at the direction of Fusion GPS."

Moffa served on the FBI's Mid-Year Exam, the code name for the bureau's investigation into Hillary Clinton's handling of classified information and use of a private email server while secretary of state.

Moffa's name often appeared in text message conversations between former FBI officials Strzok and Page, who came under scrutiny for their anti-Trump and politically charged exchanges. One text message exchange between the two on July 24, 2016 discussed their need to read Moffa's thing, referencing an FBI 302 which is an interview or witness deposition in an FBI investigation.

DOCUMENTS SUGGEST POSSIBLE COORDINATION BETWEEN CIA, FBI, OBAMA WH AND DEM OFFICIALS EARLY IN TRUMP-RUSSIA PROBE: INVESTIGATORS

Another reference was on Aug. 8, 2016.

Hey no update yet, waiting on Moffa, he's in with Dina at mtg scheduled to end at 11, Strzok texted Page. An hour later, he added: Hey, talked to him, will let him fill you in. Internal joint cyber cd Intel piece for D, scenesetter for McDonough brief, Trainor [head of FBI cyber division] directed all cyber info be pulled. I'd let Bill and Jim hammer it out first, though it would be best for D to have it before the Wed WH session.

In the texts, Dâ referred to former FBI Director James Comey, and McDonoughâ referred to former chief of staff for former President Barack Obama, Denis McDonough, according to GOP investigators.

Page left the bureau in May, and Strzok was fired earlier this month.

On Tuesday, House lawmakers have the chance to question Justice Department senior official Bruce Ohr on the same FBI practice, as Ohr testifies behind closed doors.

Ohr had frequent contact with Steele before and after the publication of the dossier, and the FBI's ultimate decision to cut ties with the ex-British spy. Ohr's wife, Nellie Ohr, worked for Fusion GPS at the time of the creation of the dossier.

FBI's handling of alleged Feinstein spy spurs claims of double standard with Trump campaign

The FBI told Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., left, that a member of her staff was under investigation for allegations that he was providing intelligence to the Chinese government, but did not notify then-candidate Donald Trump, right, that members of his campaign were under investigation. (AP/Reuters)

Revelations that Sen. Dianne Feinstein's former driver and aide was probed by the FBI for allegedly acting as a Chinese spy have spurred claims of a double standard concerning how the bureau handled suspicions of Russian coordination with the Trump campaign.

The California Democrat, in a statement last week, said the FBI informed her of its concerns regarding the staffer in her San Francisco office five years ago. Feinstein said she then ousted the staffer â€” immediately.â€”

But this has renewed questions among President Trump's allies about the bureau's approach in 2016 to suspicions regarding his campaign aides' potential Russian ties. In one case, the FBI briefed Feinstein; in the other, the bureau proceeded to use an informant and surveillance warrants to get information on Trump campaign figures.

House Intelligence Committee Chairman Devin Nunes, R-Calif., who has been a staunch Trump defender throughout the federal probe into Russian meddling and potential collusion with his campaign, complained that Feinstein and Trump were handled differently.

â€” Providing a defensive briefing, like the one given to Senator Feinstein, is a typical response to these kinds of situations,â€” Nunes said in a statement to Fox News. â€” The refusal to give the Trump campaign a defensive briefing, and instead opening a sprawling counter-intelligence investigation of American citizens, is one of many alarming ways that intelligence leaders drastically diverged from normal procedures in their Trump campaign investigation.â€”

The FBI reportedly informed Feinstein, then-chairwoman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, about the spy allegations. The suspected spy served as Feinstein's driver in California, but also took on additional responsibilities in the office, such as working as a liaison to the Asian-American community in California.

The staffer reportedly attended Chinese consulate events on behalf of the senator, and reportedly was recruited after being befriended by someone from China's Ministry of State Security.

Five years ago the FBI informed me it had concerns that an administrative member of my California staff was potentially being sought out by the Chinese government to provide information," Feinstein said in a statement. "He was not a mole or a spy, but someone who a foreign intelligence service thought it could recruit."

Feinstein said the FBI reviewed the matter and shared its concerns with her. The staffer was removed.

He never had access to classified or sensitive information or legislative matters," Feinstein said.

The FBI never informed me of any compromise of national security information."

The Wall Street Journal editorial board wrote this week that the issue is what the FBI told Mrs. Feinstein but didn't tell Mr. Trump."

The question Mr. Trump should ask is why the bureau didn't treat him as a potential President with the same customary courtesy," the editorial said. "The FBI claims it had concerns beginning in spring 2016 that low-level Trump campaign staffers Carter Page and George Papadopoulos were colluding with Russians. Yet rather than give the Trump campaign the usual defensive briefing, the FBI launched an unprecedented counterintelligence investigation into a president's campaign, running informants against it and obtaining surveillance warrants."

The FBI declined to comment on why Trump was not given the same kind of briefing as Feinstein when the investigation began and when Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act warrants were obtained against Page.

But retired FBI special agent and former national spokesman John Iannarelli, who worked at the FBI at the time of the investigation into the Feinstein staffer but not specifically on the case, explained that the difference in bureau procedure could have been based on the narrow scope of the case.

The Feinstein investigation was very narrow, in terms of who their target was, whereas the Trump investigation appears to be much broader," Iannarelli told Fox News, listing Page, Papadopoulos, former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort and former campaign staffer Rick Gates.

He also suggested the FBI trusted Feinstein with the information. "When you're conducting a public corruption investigation, if you're looking at someone who's working for the official but have nothing to indicate that the official is involved, you may notify the official to prevent the investigation from being compromised," Iannarelli said.

Over the weekend, Trump blasted Feinstein for having a Chinese spy in her office for 20 years."

The leader of the Russia investigation, Dianne Feinstein, had a Chinese spy as her driver for 20 years," Trump said during a rally in Ohio. "And she's leading the Russian witch hunt. Isn't that something? And then she says to me, 'What did you know about this and that?' Give me a break."

It is unclear what Trump meant when referring to Feinstein as “the leader” of the Russia probe, but the Senate Judiciary Committee, where Feinstein serves as ranking member, is running its own investigation into Russian collusion.

The president also blasted Feinstein on Twitter last week, questioning whether the senator would “investigate herself.”

Feinstein fired back.

“The FBI told me 5 years ago it had concerns that China was seeking to recruit an administrative member of my Calif staff (despite no access to sensitive information),” Feinstein tweeted. “I took those concerns seriously, learned the facts and made sure the employee left my office immediately.”

She added: “Compare that to your actions: attacking the FBI and refusing the advice of your national security team. SAD! I appreciated then and now the diligent work of our law enforcement and intelligence agencies and acted in the best interests of the country. Give it a try!”

FBI's Comey Had Special Agents Retaliate Against Field Agents Who Spoke Out Against Comey's cover-ups of DNC crimes!!!

Fired FBI Director James Comey had Special Agents in Charge (SACs) retaliate against field agents who spoke out against his mishandling of the Clinton email investigation.

In fact, some of the outspoken agents had Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR) investigations opened on them as punishment.

A few weeks ago, Sean Hannity told his audience 28 FBI agents have asked to testify against the corrupt Deep State.

Sean Hannity: We have an IG report coming out and Iâ€™m told as many as 28 people that have knowledge of the Clinton email server want to be subpoenaed so that they can tell the story of corruption at the highest levels of the bureau at that love.

John Giacalone, who preceded Steinbach as the bureauâ€™s top national security official and oversaw the first seven months of the Clinton probe testified a few weeks ago as witness.

The word is that Giacalone quit the FBI in protest over how the higher ups were killing the investigation.

Giacalone resigned from the Hillary Clinton case and retired from the FBI because he felt the case was going â€˜sidewaysâ€™; thatâ€™s law enforcement jargon for â€˜nowhere by design.â€™

Crooked cop Comey drafted Hillary Clintonâ€™s exoneration letter before interviewing 17 witnesses, including Hillary Clinton; he also handed out immunity like candy.

Inspector General Michael Horowitz recently revealed in a Congressional hearing the FBI never named a target or even a subject in the Clinton email probe!

So neither Hillary or her aides were officially under FBI investigation at any time during 2015-2016. Sickening!

FEDS DROP BOMBHELL: Comey & Lynch Colluded with Clinton Campaign to Entrap, Wiretap Trump; Illegal Scheme Involved Entire U.S. Intel Community

by Investigative Bureau

Loretta Lynch's Justice Department and James Comey's FBI worked together with the Hillary Clinton campaign to entrap Donald Trump and associates — including his eldest son — prior to the 2016 presidential election, according to records and testimony of federal law enforcement insiders.

One high ranking official in the Justice Department called it a sweeping — highly illegal — scheme to ensure Hillary Clinton's election to the White House.

— This was clearly a scheme using Justice (Department) resources and State (Department) resources to get the Russian lawyer into the United States, — one Justice Department insider said. — Who has the power to do this? Only the people at the very top. —

Lynch. Comey. Andrew McCabe. Preet Bhahara. Sally Yates.

And according to high ranking FBI sources, the Bureau played a definitive role in plotting this sweeping privacy breach. But the FBI had much help from the NSA, CIA, the Office of the Director of National Intelligence, Treasury financial crimes division under DHS, and the Justice Department, federal law enforcement sources confirmed.

John Brennan. James Clapper. Jeh Johnson.

That places the Barack Obama administration directly into this illegal soup, led by Lynch, Yates, Comey and the FBI's McCabe and associates.

In fact, Hillary Clinton along with the DNC bankrolled Fusion GPS to set up Donald Trump Jr. in the large scheme to undercut his father's path to the presidency, sources said.

The Russian lawyer who set up Donald Trump Jr. - Natalia Veselnitskaya - was paid by Fusion GPS. Fusion GPS was paid by Hillary Clinton and the DNC.

Veselnitskaya and Fusion GPS worked together on another caper in 2014, two years before the Trump Jr. operation. In Russia.

Veselnitskaya was barred from entering the United States. Federal law enforcement sources said Lynch and Comey - using Preet Bhahara's clout in the U.S. Attorney's Office in the southern district of New York - ensured she was granted a special visa for entry, just to set up the Trump inner circle.

A Justice Department official said Clinton likely never expected her campaign's role and finances to be uncovered and broke a host of federal laws while trying to get elected in 2016, including bringing Veselnitskaya - who was previously barred from entering the United States - into Manhattan for the Trump sit down.

Using research firm Fusion GPS as a buffer, Clinton and associates are now linked to financing a scheme to set up the controversial Trump Jr. meeting at Trump Tower before the 2016 presidential election.

Fusion GPS is already on the legal hot seat for commissioning the Dodgy Dossier on Trump, hiring former British spy Christopher Steele to compile the bogus manifesto with the financial backing of the DNC and Hillary Clinton campaign, as well as the FBI.

But these new revelations - that Fusion GPS played a key role in setting up President Trump's elder son to make it look like he was colluding with the Russians to beat Hillary - pushes this scandal into a new and more troubling orbit.

Soon after the meeting, Clinton and her campaign flunkies began slamming Trump for his links to Russia and Vladimir Putin, a chorus that continues to this day.

But it appears now this loud chorus was a manufactured arrangement of lies from a paid choir.

Especially since this scheme was backed by Hillary-Clinton dollars which implicates Clinton and her campaign in helping orchestrate the Russian sit down to entrap members of the Trump family.

Perhaps even more alarming, it is now alleged Barack Obama's Justice Department and FBI helped sneak the Russian lawyer into the United States for the Trump Tower meeting, the insider said. She was previously banned from entering the country (more on that below).

If you are paying attention, this scandal is shaping up into a serious and disturbing criminal plot.

The Democrats and Clinton herself lambasted Trump Jr. for meeting with Russian lawyer. The Democrats alleged Trump Jr. was working a backroom and illegal deal at the behest of his father. The meeting has been part of U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller's criminal investigation and Trump Jr. has testified at the Senate level to explain the meeting. Trump Jr., corroborated by evidence since the investigation began, met with the Russian delegation for anything but illegal reasons.

No collusion, as the Democrats have cried out for, has been proven on Trump Jr.'s part or that of his father. Nor does it appear it ever will be.

Fusion GPS has been fighting Congress in federal court to keep its banking records private, battling a federal subpoena to turn over the details of money coming in and flowing out of the Virginia-based research firm.

Following the Trump Tower sit down with Russian lawyer Natalia Veselnitskaya, investigators began digitally wiretapping Paul Manafort, Trump Jr., and Jared Kushner who were also at the meeting.

Federal agents previously disclosed to True Pundit that after the concocted Russian meeting, the British spy agency GCHQ could officially justify wiretapping Trump associates as an intelligence front for NSA because Russian lawyer Veselnitskaya was considered an international security risk and prior to the June sit down was not even allowed entry into the United States or the UK, federal sources said.

Veselnitskaya, the Russian lawyer who spearheaded the Trump Tower meeting with the Trump campaign trio, was previously barred from entering the United States due to her alleged connections to the Russian FSB (the modern replacement of the cold-war-era KGB).

Yet mere days before the June meeting, Veselnitskaya was granted a rare visa to enter the United States from Preet Bharara, the then U.S. Attorney for the southern district of New York. Bharara could not be reached for comment and did not respond to a Twitter inquiry on the Russian's visa by True Pundit.

Now, according to new Intel gems from a White House insider, Fusion GPS may have played a role in paying Veselnitskaya's way into the United States as well as a possible stipend, travel expenses and accommodations.

Veselnitskaya returned to Russia after the meeting, sources confirmed.

Federal law enforcement sources said Bharara was simply following the orders of Attorney General Loretta Lynch, who lobbied the State Department to issue the disavowed Russian a B1/B2 non-immigrant visa. This permitted Veselnitskaya entry into the United States for the sole purpose of entrapping Trump associates to use as fuel to commission wiretaps, federal sources said.

Veselnitskaya may have been paid as well by the U.S. government, FBI sources said. It was reported previously by True Pundit that Steele, who compiled the Trump dossier was paid at least $100,000 from FBI funds as well. But that came later, after the wiretapping was well underway.

The illegal eavesdropping started long before Steele's dossier. Federal sources said the wiretaps on Trump insiders began in late 2015, almost a year before the 2016 election. The targets then were Flynn and Page, sources confirmed. When no smoking gun was recovered from those initial taps, U.S. intelligence agencies moved to broaden the scope through their newly-formed alliance.

Intelligence garnered from the British eavesdropping, which again was merely a front for the NSA, was then used in August 2016 to secure a legitimate FISA warrant on Manafort, Trump Jr. and Kushner. That warrant was issued on or about September, 2016, federal sources confirm.

It was the third time the cabal of U.S. intelligence agencies sought a FISA warrant for the Trump associates and this time it was approved.

FBI sources said finally obtaining the FISA warrant was important because it provided the agencies cover for previous illegal wiretapping which they believed would never be discovered.

Here is what we now know, per intelligence gleaned from federal law enforcement sources with insider knowledge of what amounts to a plot by U.S. intelligence agencies to secure back door and illegal wiretaps of President Trump's associates:

- Six U.S. agencies created a stealth task force, spearhead by CIA's Brennan, to run domestic surveillance on Trump associates and possibly Trump himself.
- To feign ignorance and to seemingly operate within U.S. laws, the agencies freelanced the wiretapping of Trump associates to the British spy agency GCHQ.
- The decision to insert GCHQ as a back door to eavesdrop was sparked by the denial of two FISA Court warrant applications filed by the FBI to seek wiretaps of Trump associates.
- GCHQ did not work from London or the UK. In fact the spy agency worked from NSA's headquarters in Fort Meade, MD with direct NSA supervision and guidance to conduct sweeping surveillance on Trump associates.
- The illegal wiretaps were initiated months before the controversial Trump dossier compiled by former British spy Christopher Steele.
- The Justice Department and FBI helped set up the meeting at Trump Tower between Trump Jr., Manafort and Kushner with controversial Russian officials to make Trump's associates appear compromised.
- Following the Trump Tower sit down, GCHQ began digitally wiretapping Manafort, Trump Jr., and Kushner.
- After the concocted meeting by the Deep State, the British spy agency could officially justify wiretapping Trump associates as an intelligence front for NSA because the Russian lawyer at the meeting Veselnitskaya was considered an international security risk and prior to the June sit down was not even allowed entry into the United States or the UK, federal sources said.

- By using GCHQ, the NSA and its intelligence partners had carved out a loophole to wiretap Trump without a warrant. While it is illegal for U.S. agencies to monitor phones and emails of U.S. citizens inside the United States absent a warrant, it is not illegal for British intelligence to do so. Even if the GCHQ was tapping Trump on U.S. soil at Fort Meade.
- The wiretaps, secured through illicit scheming, have been used by U.S. Special Counsel Robert Mueller's probe of alleged Russian collusion in the 2016 election, even though the evidence is considered "poisoned fruit."

Manafort was wiretapped. Carter Page was wiretapped. Trump Jr. was wiretapped. Kushner was wiretapped. Gen. Michael Flynn was wiretapped. And likely there were others.

And none of it was very legal.

In fact, most of it was very illegal, according to federal law enforcement sources who are blowing the whistle on a sweeping scheme to undermine the Executive branch and the electorate's choice for president of the United States.

Perhaps this all helps explain the nervous Tweets and public tantrums from the compromised former leaders of the U.S. intelligence agencies.

FEinsteins CHINA STEALS $600 BILLION FROM AMERICAN IP YEARLY; TARIFFS CAN STOP THEM

5:27 PM 09/24/2018

Spencer P. Morrison | Editor-in-Chief, National Economics Editorial

â Consumers are paying the priceâ for President Trumpâs tariffs, CNN claims. Millions will feel the pinch; many thousands will lose their jobs.

What CNN fails to mention is that millions of Americans already feel the pinch, and millions more have already lost their jobs. Why? Chinese consumers wonât pay the price for American exports: China steals up to $600 billion in American intellectual property (IP) every year.

Trump understands that tariffs are a powerful political tool that can â and should â be used to force China to pay for their crimes.

Most Americans have only a fuzzy understanding of what constitutes IP. Basically, IP are ideas; the products of human creativity such as art, branding or inventions that can be owned and legally protected by registering copyrights, trademarks or patents. Examples of IP include Beethovenâs Sixth Symphony, the Daily Callerâs logo, and Teslaâs battery designs. Needless to say, IP is incredibly valuable â and incredibly easy to steal.

A 2017 report from the Commission on the Theft of American Intellectual Property estimates that IP theft costs American individuals and businesses between $225 and $600 billion annually. Most of this loss is caused by the theft of American trade secrets ($540 billion), although software piracy ($18 billion) and counterfeiting ($41 billion) are likewise significant drains.

Furthermore, the report notes that the preponderance of this theft is committed by China. For example, 87 percent of all counterfeit goods entering America originate in either China or Hong Kong. This is echoed in a report published by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, which found that 60 percent of all counterfeit goods originated in China. The value of Chinese counterfeits deprived other nations â particularly America â some $291 billion in income.

A 2018 report compiled by the United States Trade Representative likewise found that IP theft deprived Americans of significant revenue. For example, theft perpetrated on Chinese e-commerce markets â cause[s] great losses for U.S. Right holders involved in the distribution of a wide array of trademarked products, as well as legitimate film and television programming, music, software, video games, books and journals.â

Although this loss cannot be specifically stated, we know itâs high. In 2016, Chinese e-commerce transactions valued $752 billion. Meanwhile, 40 percent of the products were pirated. Thus, these sales may represent up to $300 billion in lost revenue for Americans.

Finally, Obamaâs director of the Counterintelligence and Security Center William Evanina estimated back in 2015 that cyber-espionage cost Americaâs economy some $400 billion annually. This number was extrapolated from voluntary reporting from 140 American companies operating in China.

Evanina also claimed that China's government itself was responsible for 90 percent of all cyberattacks — not rogue companies or lone-wolf hackers. This is textbook economic warfare.

Economic costs aside, IP theft also undermines the rule of law — particularly at the international level. China's theft sets a bad example, while America's hitherto weak-kneed response sets a bad precedent: there are no consequences for stealing American property.

President Trump not only has the power to impose tariffs on China; he is morally obligated to do so. After all, the president is ultimately responsible for protecting American copyrights, trademarks, and patents both here and abroad. If tariffs help to do this, then they are justified.

Both Congress and the Media misunderstand tariffs — they are not simply taxes, they are political tools. Tariffs are a means to an end that can help secure reciprocity from our trading partners and protect our IP from foreign theft.

CNN says consumers will pay the price for Trump's tariffs. Hopefully they're right, and Chinese consumers start paying Americans for our stolen art and technology. Until then, Trump is right to continue building a tariff wall.

"Fact Checking Sites" like Snopes, seem to all be fake political biased propaganda operations covertly paid for by either Soros or Koch money!

The American political civil war which began in earnest once Donald J. Trump was elected to the presidency has spawned dozens of skirmishes — some are obvious and bloody, and others are taking place surreptitiously behind enemy lines. Wars are rarely fought on the spur of the moment, and it is often the choice of the battlefield that can prove decisive. Thus, today, we have soldiers, in the guise of professional — fact-checkers — being deployed to blast reputations and cast aspersions upon the conservative media. The hope is to stick the bayonet in, twist it, and pray for a long, slow death. Such is the case with Media Bias/FactCheck — a website that engages in reputational assassination as part of a larger campaign to undermine and ultimately destroy the many and varied voices of the conservative movement.

Making Facts Matter

At Liberty Nation, we aim to provide top news and analysis without the spin. All our articles, podcasts, TV programs, and radio shows go through a rigorous editorial process where the driving ethos echoes President Ronald Reagan's old Russian proverb: Trust but Verify.

LN sources are carefully checked, and links are provided to bolster any facts that may need more verification. On Christmas Day 2017, we published the Media Bias/FactCheck review of our site. Here's what they had to say:

â In review, Liberty Nation produces articles and information that strongly favors conservative politics. There is low to moderate use of loaded language that favors the right. Liberty Nation sources their information to credible sources, and in general, the articles are very well written. Overall, we rate Liberty Nation Right Biased based on story selection and High for factual reporting due to proper sourcing of information.â

Fast forward to 2019, and now it seems all our stellar sourcing and attention to the facts have been thrown into the political dumpster. Media Bias/ Fact Check (MBFC), the self-styled â most comprehensive media bias resource on the internet,â now alleges we are engaged in writing â propaganda.â

â In review, Liberty Nation produces articles and information that strongly favors conservative politics. There is moderate use of loaded language that favors the right such as this: DEMS ON SOCIALISM: IGNORANCE AND ANGER. Liberty Nation utilizes poor sources that are on our questionable list such as CNS News, which has a very poor track record with fact checkers. In general, all stories favor the right and are highly opinion based (propaganda).â

Fake changing to fact with wooden cubes. (3d render)

Iâm sure the folks over at CNS News will be glad to hear that they are nothing more than a â questionable source.â Founded by L. Brent Bozell, CNS has long been regarded as one of the top sources of conservative news in the country and plays host to some of the most respected conservative writers of our time.

While Liberty Nation is not so thin-skinned as to take offense at media catcalling, itâs still worthwhile to point out some obvious flaws in the Media Bias/Fact Check modus operandi.

The founder and owner, David Van Zandt, set up the site in 2015. Is Mr. Van Zandt a journalist himself? Well, no. According to their website, this self-styled arbiter of all things real or fake completed a â Communications Degree before pursuing a higher degree in the sciences. Dave currently works full time in the health care industry.â

What? The health care industry?

But Surely â

But surely, Mr. Van Zandt has a team of experts to evaluate the veracity of news sources? Well, maybe not. Media Bias touts a mix of graduate students and chartered accountants, who appear to make up their frontline.

But surely, they use an unbiased, scientific methodology to determine who gets placed in the naughty seat? From the organizations About page:

â Disclaimer: The methodology used by Media Bias Fact Check is our own. It is not a tested scientific method. It is meant as a simple guide for people to get an idea of a sourceâs bias.â

Blind Trust

Declaring a news outlet â poorly sourcedâ because other fact checkers claim it so, is not fact-checking: It is repetition in an echo chamber. While the motivation behind MBFC may be a noble one â after all, who wants to read Fake News â this seven-degrees-of-separation methodology is open to abuse.

There is something sinister going on here: The discrediting of news outlets is part of a larger scheme to control the flow of information to a voting public; it is politically motivated and underhanded. By first declaring a news source questionable they give tacit permission for other so-called fact checkers to jump on the bandwagon. Then, when tech giants are encouraged to limit the spread of Fake News, they head straight to the lists produced by companies and organizations like MBFC.

Then these â questionableâ sites can be blocked, shadow banned, or demonetized. Yes, victory on the battlefield is claimed. What we are witnessing is nothing less than political warfare for the hearts, souls, and minds of Americaâs free thinkers. Itâs time to call the Fact Checkers to account, call them out, and call them what they are: a bunch of political partisans.

We face today the very dangers cautioned by Roman poet Juvenal in his work Satires: Quis Costodiet Ipsos Custodies? When unwanted and uninvited fact checkers dwell in their ivory palaces and proclaim themselves the watchmen of all things right and true, who will guard us against the guards themselves?

Federal Government Arrests 120 Mexicans For Illegal Abuse Of Their Cocks

ICE HSI Texarkana arrests 120 people during illegal event

On March 17, 2018, U.S. Immigration and Custom Enforcementâs (ICE) Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) Texarkana worked jointly with the Sevier County Sheriff's Office, Arkansas State Police, Arkansas Fish and Wildlife, U.S. Customs and Border Protection (CBP) â Air and Marine Operations and other state and local partners to execute a state search warrant involving an illegal cockfighting organization.

The search warrant was the culmination of an 18-month investigation. Based on previous investigative work, agents expected 30-40 individuals to attend the event and suspected a portion of those attendees to be illegal aliens. Upon execution of the state search warrant, agents encountered an overwhelming 134 people attending the event, 120 were taken into custody. Numerous people attempted to flee the scene on foot which made the assistance of CBP Air an integral part in apprehending suspects.

HSI Texarkana special agents are in the process of positively identifying all 120 individuals, as well as checking immigration records.

Due to the unexpected number of attendees, other agents and administrative personnel from HSI offices within Arkansas traveled across the state to provide assistance. HSI Texarkana issued call-in letters and detainers as needed to those with identified immigration violations. Additionally, interviews of those arrested have resulted in several worksite enforcement leads and Worksite I-9 audits are being planned because of information and evidence gained from this event.

HSI Texarkana will seek federal criminal or administrative charges as appropriate.

â I am extremely proud of the work by Special Agent Jeremy Ridenour, Resident Agent in Charge J.P. Moseley and the quick response by the HSI personnel in Arkansas to this event,â said Assistant Special Agent in Charge Nick Nelson. â This collaborative effort not only provided prompt federal law enforcement support to our state and local partners but it also resulted in investigative leads that align with HSI priorities. It was a win-win situation.â

Federal abuses on Obama's watch represent a growing blight on his legacy

BY MONICA CROWLEY, THE HILL 5.471

In all of the discussions about the political weaponization of the Department of Justice (DOJ) and the FBI, alleged corruption at the highest echelons of those agencies and serial abuse of the secret FISA process surrounding the 2016 election, one name has been conspicuously absent: President Barack Obama.

High-ranking officials and other major players in those agencies â which Obama oversaw â are increasingly embroiled in the growing scandal: James Comey, Loretta Lynch, Andrew McCabe, Andrew Weissmann, Sally Yates, Peter Strzok, Lisa Page, Bruce Ohr.

Given the tight control Obama exercised over every part of his administration and agenda, the idea that any of these appointees and loyalists freelanced their activities without at least his tacit approval or that of his White House strains credulity.

ADVERTISEMENT These kinds of abuses of power were nothing new, given the Obama teamâs long history of this type of misconduct on everything from the Benghazi terror attack to the political misuse of the IRS. They weaponized the most fearsome government agencies to target, monitor and presumably illegally unmask political opponents, including members of Congress, journalists reporting unfavorable stories, Trump allies and average Americans.

These dark institutional offenses didnât just materialize out of thin air. One of the criticisms of President Nixon was that even though he wasnât aware of the Watergate break-in, he had created an environment in which such an action was acceptable.

Decades later, Obama created a climate in which the potentially criminal misuse of the DOJ and the FBI, as currently being unraveled, was not just acceptable but perhaps encouraged, thereby giving rise to what could be the most dangerous scandal in American history.

Itâs increasingly apparent that these recently exposed abuses of power served two ostensible purposes: to secure Hillary Clintonâs candidacy by shielding her from prosecution stemming from the use of her unauthorized private server, and to derail the candidacy and presidency of Donald Trump.

But something else, something more profound, drove their efforts: their urgency to preserve what Obama once called âthe fundamental transformation of the nationâ â a grand project much bigger than Obama himself or any other single figure. He largely fulfilled the long-held progressive ambition of changing the nationâs course, only to see Trump threaten to change it once again: not to return it to where it was pre-Obama, but to smash the corrupt existing order that had made their progressive advances possible.

Obama and the leftist movement over which he has presided could not tolerate a reversal of their gains (by Trump, no less!), so they got to work.

On the offensive side, these Obama officials â who obviously loathe Trump, as demonstrated by the glaring antipathy in the StrzokâPage texts and othersâ communications â set out to damage him. Trump, they thought, gave them much material with which to work, plus they enjoyed a compliant media that stood ready to amplify spoon-fed narratives, regardless of their veracity. The acquisition of multiple FISA warrants â now known to be largely based on an unverified dossier prepared by a foreign spy, using anonymous Russian and close Clinton associates and paid for by her campaign and the Democratic National Committee â to subvert and impair Trump and his associates, succeeded beyond their wildest dreams.

On the defensive side, Herculean efforts were made by the Obama DOJ and FBI to stonewall the Clinton investigation, not out of any real love for Hillary but because they needed to ensure a Democratic win and the continuance of their âtransformativeâ agenda. Further, with Clinton at the helm, evidence of all of their previous abuses would never see the light of day.

Thus, the forward march to safeguard her.

In October 2015, Obama told â60 Minutesâ that, while Clinton made a âmistakeâ using a private server, âthis is not a situation in which Americaâs national security was endangered.â The signal to his law enforcement lieutenants to back off could not have been clearer.

As the National Reviewâs Andrew McCarthy has reported, Obama knowingly and repeatedly sent communications to Clinton via her nongovernment, unsecured email and server. One assumes those emails involved classified information, not yoga schedules. That meant if Clinton were guilty of committing felonies, so was Obama. Because they were joined at the hip over this and other toxic controversies, such as Benghazi, she required protection in order to protect him. To this day, they survive or fall together. Hence, Obamaâs support of her candidacy over his preferred choice, Joe Biden, and the necessity of the email cover-up.

He and his allies have never taken their eyes off the prize. They cannot allow their progressive gains to be erased (and replaced by far more successful economic and national security policies) and their history of abuses to be exposed. Having never expected a Trump victory, the Obama and Clinton squads have been throwing the kitchen sink at him in an effort to protect themselves â and to try to backstop their hard-won âtransformativeâ achievements.

Restoring the progressive revolution is also why loyal Obama soldiers such as Biden and Eric Holder are considering White House runs. In the meantime, they must try to destroy Trump, his agenda, and the investigations that are quickly turning against them. After all, if Trump doesnât just endure but succeeds, Obama, Clinton, their brigades and the larger decades-long radical movement have everything to lose.

The Death Of The Obama Wing Of The Democratic Party

by Rep. Julio Gonzalez, M.D., J.D.

The past few weeks have been devastating for the Democratic Party, its reputation and its standing among the American people.

As a result of an endless stream of news reports and congressional actions, the American people have learned that the Democratic Party, in collusion with Hillary Clinton and Russian operatives, fabricated a dossier as a guarantee to keep an American citizen from being elected President of the United States. They learned that the FBI and the Department of Justice, while under the leadership of President Obama, promoted those fabricated misrepresentations while simultaneously protecting Clinton from prosecution of her gross violations of federal secrecy laws in her mishandling of classified electronic information.

And as the milieu of corruption and malfeasance revealed itself, no evidence of the collusion Democrats claimed to have taken place between Russian operatives and the Trump Campaign appeared. On the contrary, the deeper Congress peeled into the issue, the more it appeared that the Democrats were colluding with the Russians to defeat Trump rather than the obverse.

On another front, Democrats worked to oppose a tax cut that would place millions of dollars back into the pockets of average Americans and their businesses. More offensively, they recurrently minimized the importance of those newly found cash savings. Even as the Democrats foolishly decried the effects of the tax package as inconsequential, or painful to America's middle class, the nation's largest employers announced bonuses and increases in entry level wages. In response, Democrats took to the airwaves and social media, decrying the magnitude of those bonuses as "crumbs," while the middle class they so adamantly claimed to defend considered those crumbs hugely significant.

Try Our Youtube Channel

The Democrats did not have to take such contrarian positions on any of these issues. In so doing, however, they positioned themselves as defenders of the Deep State and of its corruption. Worse yet for the Democrats, they showed themselves to be the very elitist ultra-rich against whom they claim to be advocating.

The fact is that the positions recently taken by Democrats are the result of a faction that has taken control of the Party's direction and has steered it well away from the views of mainstream America; the Obama Wing of the Democrat Party. And what we are witnessing with every misguided Democratic argument, every attempt at stopping corruption because of its own protectionism, and every demeaning slight at the intelligence of the American people is the slow, protracted, and howling death cries of that Obama Wing.

The Obama Wing of the Democratic Party is a decidedly anti-American faction that has conflated its calls for workers' rights and social mobility with a rabid anti-capitalistic position that disparages self reliance. It is a Wing claiming that nothing you can do is achievable on your own, ("It takes a village"), but rather is facilitated and made possible only by the presence of government. It is a faction that effortlessly moves beyond the constraints of the law to suit its own self-propagation, doing so for two reasons. First because the law ought not apply to them since they know whatâs best for the rest of us, and second, because above all, it is important that they protect themselves against attacks from their political enemies.

You say these views are antithetical to the United States Constitution and to those foundational principles giving rise to the most exceptional nation in the history of earth? Why, yes! But since when are those documents and principles more important than the self-righteousness of the positions espoused by Obama Democrats?

From this attitude, we get a President who believes it is within his authority to decide when the Senate is or is not in session just so he can make a recess appointment. We get a President who shamelessly says that if Congress doesnât solve a particular policy problem, he will â even though the Constitution never gave the President of the United States the authority to pass this nationâs laws. And we get a faction believing it is okay for the federal government to force people to purchase a product, even if the people donât want it or believe they need it.

So far, the Obama Wing of the Democratic Party merely sounds like a typical liberal faction. But thereâs more! This faction believes the United States is the source of great evils in the world rather than its most hopeful solution. In its Orwellian stance, it believes there is such a thing as leading from behind, and that such a thing ought not to be construed as cowardice. And it believes it is okay to abandon America's allies in an attempt to appease its most rabid enemies.

It is also a faction believing that every social strife ought to be properly seen through the lens of blacks versus white. There can be no justice, says the Obama Wing of the Democratic Party, unless the white people are struck down at the expense of the people of color. The concepts irreconcilably antithetical to human rights and civil justice.

Strangely, ever since the rise of the Obama Wing of the Democratic Party, the rank and file Democrat has felt it necessary to defend these espoused concepts. Instead of acknowledging the misguided and inherently hateful positions of this terrible epoch in American politics, they instead continue to defend it, hastening their descent into the quicksand of their amorality.

There is only one outcome for this wing and the path it has charted. But as long as the Democrats continue to defend it, we will continue to see its demise as a party of influence in the United States. Oh yes, it may make some progress in a midterm election here and there, and it will continue to make noise. But overall, its sphere of influence will continue to shrink, and its voice will become increasingly shrill.

The only question is, how painful and protracted will this stubborn and egoistic demise be. Maybe we can ask Congressman Gutierrez.

U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein fired a staffer who was allegedly part of an effort to spy and pass on political intelligence to the Chinese government.

The staffer, based in the Democrat's San Francisco office, was suspected of delivering political intelligence, though nothing top secret, to officials based at the local Chinese Consulate, Politico reported.

The FBI informed Feinstein, the then-chairwoman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, about five years ago about the staffer and allegations that the staffer was a spy. The source who confirmed the incident to the San Francisco Chronicle said â Dianne was mortifiedâ upon learning about it.

The suspected spy served as the lawmakerâs driver in California, but took on other roles as well, including helping out in her San Francisco office and being Feinsteinâs liaison to the Asian-American community in the state. He attended Chinese Consulate events on behalf of the senator.

A former official said that the spyâs handler â probably got an award back in Chinaâ for his efforts to penetrate Feinsteinâs office and pass on intelligence.

Ex-CIA officer suspected of spying for China

The driver was reportedly recruited years ago after he being befriended on one of the trips to Asia by someone from China's Ministry of State Security, the country's intelligence and security agency, the Chronicle reported.

â He didn't even know what was happening â that he was being recruited,â a source told the publication. â He just thought it was some friend.â

The FBI wasn't able to charge the individual, possibly because he was passing on political intelligence rather than classified materials â making the prosecution nearly impossible.

â They interviewed him, and Dianne forced him to retire, and that was the end of it,â the Chronicle's source said. â None of her staff ever knew what was going on. They just kept it quiet.â

Feinstein, Pelosi, Escobar sending paid staff to Mexico to teach illegals how to cheat their way into the US in order to rig national elections?

By Monica Showalter

If there's any question left about Democrats having a political interest in fuelling the border surge, read no farther than this shocking straight news item in the Washington Examiner:

A Democratic congresswoman is sending staff to Mexico's northern border town of Ciudad Juárez to find migrants returned from El Paso, Texas, under the "remain in Mexico" policy, then coaching them to pretend they cannot speak Spanish to exploit a loophole letting them to return to the U.S.

The National Border Patrol Council's El Paso chapter and several Customs and Border Protection personnel told the Washington Examiner aides to Rep. Veronica Escobar, who took over 2020 Democratic presidential candidate Beto O'Rourke's district, and the local Catholic diocese have interviewed thousands of migrants in Juarez over the past few weeks to find cases where Department of Homeland Security officials may have wrongly returned people.

"What we believe is happening is Veronica Escobar's office is going ... to basically second-guess and obstruct work already done by the Border Patrol," said one senior union official, who shared evidence with the Washington Examiner from concerned CBP managers and rank-and-file members. Those documents have been held to protect identities.

The Examiner report notes an accidentally left file from the congresswoman's office as evidence that the coaching has been happening. This isn't anything like Sen. Cory Booker's stunt in escorting would-be asylum-seekers across the border, which, however questionable, was nevertheless a legal process. This is out-and-out fraud, by a member of Congress sworn to uphold U.S. law, but now using U.S. taxpayer dollars, via her staff, to teach migrants to give false statements to immigration officials to ensure that they can stay in the States. People go to jail for that â marriage fraud, Social Security fraud...now language fraud.

The Examiner notes that the fraudy language claims are based on a loophole in asylum law, which states that if someone can't speak Spanish, he doesn't have to remain in Mexico to wait out his asylum claim in his first country of refuge. Such people, and whatever illnesses they may be bringing with them â hello, ebola â can stay here instead. If someone can't speak Spanish, say, as a Haitian Creole-, or a Mexican Nahuatl- or South American Quechua Indianâ speaker, he gets to come up here, where undoubtedly the English will be just as incomprehensible, but the welfare benefits will be rich, given that he won't be able to make a living.

Fraud doesn't bother Escobar, whose legislative work amounts to advocating for the interests of foreigners. The ends always justify the means. The ends? A foreign border surge where everyone surging is able to get in.

That if nothing else shows how Democrats benefit from the border surge, through padded census numbers in "dead" low-turnout districts where practically no one can vote legally to illegally cast ballots to the expanded welfare state in their districts, which means more dollars.

This is clearly a crime that the congresswoman must be held to account for. If illegals can't be held responsible for crimes they commit, then maybe holding their sponsors to account should send the message.

Did You Know That Scammer Democrats Are Packing Congressional Seats Via Millions Of Non-Citizen Votes?

by DCWhispers

Itâs another dirty little secret that, for the first time, is being called out openly by some even as the far-left media continues to work to hide the truth from the American people.

Congressional districts are allocated by CITIZEN population based upon the 10-year census. Thatâs why Democrats and the media are now so opposed to having a citizen question included in the census. They donât want Americans to know how many illegals are directly influencing the U.S. government. These millions of illegals are canceling out the votes of citizens and reshaping Congress, meaning those illegals are creating a Congress that works for them and not for you. If youâre okay with this go ahead and move on. If you think this is a serious breach of representative democracy then you would do well to share this information with others. Remember how much the Democrats and far-left media cried foul over some Russian social media election cycle posts? They called it an attack on America. And yet these same Democrats and far-left media openly advocate for millions of illegals voting in our elections and influencing seats in Congress.

Thatâs insane.

Filipina immigrant who became hotshot Chicago DNC judge sentenced to jail for $1.4m mortgage fraud

By Lukas Mikelionis | Fox News

Jessica Arong Oâ Brien, 51, broke down into tears after the judge sent her to prison after the federal jury convicted her in February of two counts alleging that she took part in a scheme in which several lenders were scammed. (Facebook)

The first Filipina judge in Cook County, Chicago, who came to the U.S. with almost nothing and no education, was sentenced on Thursday to a year in prison after being found guilty to participating in a $1.4 million mortgage fraud scheme a decade ago.

Jessica Arong Oâ Brien, 51, broke down into tears after the judge sent her to prison following her February conviction of two counts alleging that she took part in a scheme in which several lenders were scammed, the Chicago Tribune reported.

She was convicted of lying to lenders to obtain more than $1.4 million in mortgages on two investment properties that she sold while she owned a real estate company.

Oâ Brien reportedly made money by selling the two homes in 2007 after paying kickbacks to a straw purchaser. Personally, she made a profit of at least $325,000 from the sales, prosecutors said.

The lenders, meanwhile, lost money as the straw purchaser defaulted on payments and properties were foreclosed.

Prior to the sentencing, Oâ Brien said she was â an embarrassmentâ and said the scheme was a mistake. â Of course, I have remorse as to my stupidity,â Oâ Brien said.

Her lawyer Steve Greenberg argued for probation, pointing to her true American dream story, where a Filipina immigrant, who came to the U.S. without anything, educated herself and became a judge.

According to the Tribune, after Oâ Brien came to the U.S., she earned degrees in culinary arts and restaurant management. She later went to John Marshall Law School, graduating in 1998.

With a law degree, she went on to become the first Asian elected president of the Women's Bar Association of Illinois and served on the board of governors for the Illinois State Bar Association. She also co-founded a group in 2008 that gives scholarships to law students from diverse backgrounds.

"It is an inspirational story. She has fallen as far as she can fall. She has lost everything. â ï There is absolutely no reason to send this poor lady to jail."

â Lawyer Steve Greenberg

â It is an inspirational story,â Greenberg said. â She has fallen as far as she can fall. She has lost everything. â ! There is absolutely no reason to send this poor lady to jail.â

But U.S. District Judge Thomas Durkin denied the request for probation, arguing that her fraud scheme wasnâ t just a mistake but a rather elaborate fraudulent scheme.

â This wasnâ t stupid,â Durkin said, according to the newspaper. â This was a crimeâ ! You really didnâ t need to do this.â

"This wasnâ t stupid. This was a crime. â ! You really didnâ t need to do this."

â U.S. District Judge Thomas Durkin

Prosecutors, meanwhile, used Oâ Brienâ s story to push for a harsher sentence, saying that she committed fraud despite not having the financial needs to do it.

After sentencing, Oâ Brien blamed family issues that prompted her to get into real estate business and reiterated that she acted foolishly.

â Of all those things that everyone has told you about me, one thing was missing â stupid,â Oâ Brien, according to the Tribune. â I mean, seriously. This whole process is crazy. I canâ t put my hands on it.â

â I hope some day when I am six feet under, they will learn from what happened here,â she added, hoping other lawyers will learn that they will be held to a higher standard.

Former FBI Top Agent Exposes McCabe & Mueller's Unethical, Target & Destroy Coercion Tactics

Via SaraCarter.com.

Former FBI Supervisory Special Agent Robyn Gritz has asked SaraACarter.com to post her letter to Judge Emmet G. Sullivan in support of her friend and colleague retired Lt. Gen. Michael T. Flynn, who will be sentenced on Dec. 18. The Special Counsel's Office has requested that Flynn not serve any jail time due to his cooperation with Robert Mueller's office. Based on new information contained in a memorandum submitted to the court this week by Flynn's attorney, Sullivan has ordered Mueller's office to turn over all exculpatory evidence and government documents on Flynn's case by mid-day Friday. Sullivan is also requesting any documentation regarding the first interviews conducted by former anti-Trump agent Peter Strzok and FBI Agent Joe Pientka -known by the FBI as 302s- which were found to be dated more than seven months after the interviews were conducted on Jan. 24, 2017, a violation of FBI policy, say current and former FBI officials familiar with the process. According to information contained in Flynn's memorandum, the interviews were dated Aug. 22, 2017.

Read Gritz's letter below... (emphasis added)

*The Honorable Emmet G. Sullivan, December 5, 2018 U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia 333 Constitution Avenue, N.W.
Washington D.C. 20001*

Re: Sentencing of Lt. General Michael T. Flynn (Ret.)

Dear Judge Sullivan:

I am submitting my letter directly since Mike Flynn's attorney has refused to submit it as well as letters submitted by other individuals. I feel you need to hear from someone who was an FBI Special Agent who not only worked with Mike, but also has personally witnessed and reported unethical & sometimes illegal tactics used to coerce targets of investigations externally and internally.

About Myself and FBI Career

For 16 years, I proudly served the American people as a Special Agent working diligently on significant terrorism cases which earned noteworthy results and fostered substantial interagency cooperation. Prior to serving in the FBI I was a Juvenile Probation Officer in Camden, NJ. Currently, I am a Senior Information Security Metrics and Reporting Analyst with Discover Financial Services in the Chicago Metro area. I have recently been named as a Senior Fellow to the London Center for Policy Research.

While in the FBI, I served as a Special Agent, Supervisory Special Agent, Assistant Inspector, Unit Chief, and a Senior Liaison Officer to the CIA. I served on the NSC's Hostage and Personnel Working Group and brought numerous Americans out of captivity and was part of the interagency team to codify policies outlining the whole of government approach to hostage cases.

In November 2007, I was selected over 26 other candidates to become the Supervisory Special Agent, CT Extraterritorial Squad; Washington Field Office (WFO) in Washington, DC. At WFO, I led a squad of experts in extraterritorial evidence collection, overseas investigations, operational security during terrorist attacks/events, and overseas criminal investigations. I coordinated and managed numerous high profile investigations (Blackwater, Chuckie Taylor, Robert Levinson, and other pivotal cases) comprised of teams from US and foreign intelligence, military, and law enforcement agencies. I was commended for displaying comprehensive leadership performance under pressure, extensive teamwork skills, while conducting critical investigative analysis within and outside the FBI.

In December 2009, I was promoted to GS-15 Unit Chief (UC) of the Executive Strategy Unit, Weapons of Mass Destruction Directorate (WMDD). While the UC, I codified the WMDD five-year strategic plan, formulated goals and objectives throughout the division, while translating the material into a directorate scorecard with cascading measurements reflecting functional and operational unit areas. This was the only time in Washington, DC when I did not work with of for McCabe.

From September to December 2010, I was selected as the FBI's top candidate to represent the FBI, and the USG in a rigorous, intellectually stimulating; 12 week course for civilian government officials, military officers, and government academics at the George C. Marshall Center in Garmisch, Germany, Executive Program in Advanced Security Studies. The class was comprised of 141 participants from 43 countries.

I have received numerous recommendations and commendations for my professionalism, liaison and interpersonal ability and experience. Additionally, I have been rated Excellent or Outstanding for my entire career, to include by Andrew McCabe when I was stationed at the Washington Field Office. Further, other awards of note are: West Chester University 2005 Legacy of Leadership recipient, Honored with House of Representatives Citation for Exemplary record of Service, Leadership, and Achievements: Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, and Awarded with a framed Horn of Africa blood chit from the Department of Defense and Office of the DASD (POW/MPA/MIA) for my work in bringing Americans Out of captivity, a Patriot, Law Enforcement Warrior, and Friend.

Length of Association with Flynn, McCabe, and Mueller

I met Michael Flynn in 2005, while working in the Counterterrorism Division (CTD) at FBI Headquarters (FBIHQ).

I met then Supervisory Special Agent Andrew McCabe, when he reported to CTD at FBIHQ, around the same time. McCabe subsequently was the Assistant Section Chief over my unit, my Assistant Special Agent in Charge at the Washington Field Office, and the Assistant Director (AD) over CTD when I encountered the discrimination and McCabe spearheaded the retaliation personally (according to documentation) against me.

I have known both men for 12-13 years and worked directly with both throughout my career. They are on the opposite spectrum of each other with regard to truthfulness, temperament, and ethics, both professionally and personally.

I regularly briefed former FBI Director and Special Prosecutor Mueller on controversial and complex cases and attended Deputies meetings at the White house with then Deputy Director Pistole. I got along with both and trusted both. Watching what has been done to Mike and knowing someone on the 7th floor had to have notified Mueller of my situation (Pistole had retired), has been significantly distressing to me.

Lt.G. Michael T. Flynn:

Mike and I were counterparts on a DOJ-termed ground-breaking initiative which served as a model for future investigations, policies, legislation and FBI programs in the Terrorist Use of the Internet. For this multi-faceted and leading-edge joint operation, I was commended by Gen. Stanley McChrystal, Gen. Keith Alexander (NSA Director), and LtG. Michael Flynn as well as others for leading the FBI's pivotal participation in this dynamic and innovative interagency operation. I received two The National Intelligence Meritorious Unit Citation (NIMUC) I for my role in this operation. The NIMUC is an award of the National Intelligence Awards Program, for contributions to the United States Intelligence Community.

Mick Flynn has consistently and candidly been honest and straightforward with me since the day I met him in 2005. He has been a mentor and someone I trust to give me frank advice when I ask for his opinion. His caring nature has shown through especially when he saw me being torn apart by the FBI and he felt compelled to write a letter in support of me. He further took the extra step to comment on my character in an NPR article and interview exposing the wrongdoings in my case and others who have stood up for truth and against discrimination/retaliation. Senator Grassley also commented on my behalf. NPR characterized this action against me as a "warning shot" to individuals who stood up to individuals such as McCabe.

The day after I resigned from the FBI, while I was crying, Mike reached out and congratulated me on my early retirement. I really needed to hear that from someone I respected so much. His support for the last 13 years has been unparalleled and extremely valuable in helping me get through the trauma of betrayal, unethical behavior, illegal activity executed against me and to rebuild my life. Additionally, his support has helped my family in dealing with their painful emotions regarding my situation. My parents wanted me to pass on to you that they are blessed that I have had a compassionate and supportive individual on my side throughout this trying time.

Mike has been a respected leader by his peers and by FBI Agents and Analysts who have interacted with him. I personally feel he is the finest leader I have ever worked with or for in my career. Our continued friendship and subsequent friendship with his family has helped all of us cope with the stress a situation like this puts on individuals and families.

It is so very painful to watch an American hero, and my friend, torn apart like this. His family has had to endure what no family should have to. I know this because of the damaging effect my case had on my parent's health, finances, and emotional well-being. Mike and I both had to sell our houses due to legal fees, endured smear campaigns (mostly by the same individual, McCabe). I ended up being deemed homeless by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, was on public assistance and endured extensive health and emotional damage due to the retaliation. Mike kept in touch and kept me motivated. He has always reached out to help me with whatever he could.

The Process is the Punishment

Thomas Fitton of Judicial Watch commented to me that the "Process is the punishment." This is the most accurate description I have heard regarding the time Mike has gone through with this process and the year and a half I was ostracized and idled before I resigned. This process is one which many FBI employees, current, retired and former, feel was brought to the FBI by Mueller and he subsequently brought this to the Special Prosecutor investigation. It also fostered the behavior among FBI leadership which we find ourselves shocked at when revealed on a daily basis. Is this the proper way to seek justice? I say no. I swore to uphold the Constitution while protecting the civil rights of the American people. I believe many individuals involved in Mike's case have lost their way and could care less about protection of due process, civil and legal rights of who they are targeting. Mike has had extensive punishment throughout this process. This process has punished him harder than anyone else could.

Andrew McCabe

I believe I have a unique inside view of the mannerisms surrounding Andrew McCabe, other FBI Executive Management and Former Director Mueller, as well as the unethical and coercive tactics they use, not to seek the truth, but to coerce pleas or admissions to end the pain, as I call it. They destroy lives for their own agendas instead of seeking the truth for the American people. Candor is something that should be encouraged and used by leadership to have necessary and continued improvement. Under Mueller, it was seen as a threat and viciously opposed by those he pulled up in the chain of command.

I am explaining this because numerous Agents have expressed the need for you to know McCabe's and Mueller's pattern of "target and destroy" has been utilized on many others, without regard for policies and laws. I, myself, am a casualty of this reprehensible behavior and I have spoken to well over 150 other FBI individuals who are casualties as well.

I am the individual who filed the Hatch Act complaint against McCabe and provided significant evidentiary documents obtained via FOIA, open source, and information from current, former, and retired Special Agents. The Office of Special Counsel (OSC) asked why my filing of the complaint was delayed from the actual acts. I said I personally thought I was providing additional information to what should have been an automatic referral to OSC by FBI OPR. I was notified I was the only complainant. This illustrates not only a fatal flaw in OPR AD Candice Will not making the appropriate and crucial referral, but also shows the fear of those within the FBI to report individuals like McCabe for fear of retaliation.

While serving at the CIA, detailed by the FBI in January 2012, I was responsible for overseas investigations, as opposed to Continental United States-based (CONUS) cases. Unfortunately, during my assignment at the CIA, I encountered extensive discrimination by two FBI Special Agents and subsequently, in 2012, I filed an Equal Employment Opportunity (EEO) complaint. Instead of addressing the issues, then CTD Assistant Director Andrew McCabe chose to authorize a retaliatory Office of Professional Responsibility (OPR) investigation against me, five days after my EEO contact. The OPR referral he signed was authored by the two individuals I had filed the EEO complaint against. In his signed sworn statement, McCabe admitted he knew I had filed or was going to file the EEO.

Numerous members of my department at the CIA requested to be spoken with by CTD executive management, regarding my work ethic and accomplishments. However, CTD, Inspection Division, and OPR disregarded the list of names and contact numbers I submitted. This is an example of knowing you are being targeted and the truth is not being sought.

Although my time at this position was short, I was commended by my CIA direct supervisor for: â having already contributed more than your predecessor in the short time you have been here.â My predecessor had been assigned to the post for 18 months; I had been there four months.

In contrast and showing lack of candor, McCabe wrote on official documents the following statement, contradicting the actual direct supervisor I worked with daily:

â SA Gritz had to be removed from a prior position in an interagency environment, due to inappropriate communications and general performance issuesâ

This is one of many comments McCabe used to discredit my reputation and to ostracize me. McCabe knew me as someone who told the truth, worked hard, got results, and was always willing to be flexible when needed. He was also acutely aware of the excellent relationships I had formed in the USG interagency due to comments made by individuals from numerous agencies. Yet, he continued to make false statements on official documents. He has done this to numerous other very valuable FBI employees, destroying their careers and lives. He used similar tactics of lies against Flynn. It should be noted, McCabe was very aware of my professional association with Mike Flynn.

In July 5, 2012, I was involuntarily pulled back to CTD from the CIA. I was told McCabe made the decision. A year and a month later, I resigned from the job I absolutely loved and was good at. All because of the lack of candor of numerous individuals within the FBI.

Unethical and dishonest investigative tactics

Throughout the last year, I have kept abreast of the revelations surrounding anything related to Mike's case. I believe, from my years at the FBI and in exposing corruption and discrimination, the circumstances surrounding the targeting, investigation, leaking, and coercion of him to plea are all consistent with the unethical process I and many others have witnessed at the FBI. The charge which Mike Flynn plead to was the result of deception, intimidation, and bias/agenda. Simply, Mike is being branded a convicted felon due to an unethical and dishonest investigation by people who were malicious, vindictive, and corrupt. They wished to silence Mike, like they had once silenced me.

The American people have read the Strzok/Page text messages, the conflicting testimony and lack of candor statements of former Director Comey, the perceived overstepping of the reasonable scope of the Special Prosecutor's investigation, the extensive unethical, untruthful, and outright illegal behavior of Andrew McCabe, to include slanderous statements against Flynn, and the facts found within FOIA released documents and Congressional testimony. As a former/retired Agent, I have combed through every piece of information regarding Mike's case, as if I was combing through evidence in the hundreds of cases I have successfully handled while in the FBI.

The publicly reported Brady material alone, in this case, outweighs any statement given by any FBI Agent (we now know at least one FD-302 was changed), Special Prosecutor investigator report, and any other party still aggressively seeking that this case remain and be sentenced as a felony. Quite simply, I cannot see justice being served by branding LtG. Michael Flynn a convicted felon, when the truth is still being revealed while policies, ethics, and laws have been violated by those pursuing this case.

We now know all FBI employees involved in Mike Flynn's case have either been fired, forced to resign or forced to retire because of their excessive lack of candor, punitive biases, leaking of information, and extensive cover-up of their deeds.

Summation

Michael Flynn has always displayed overwhelming candor and forthrightness. One of the main individuals involved in his case is Andrew McCabe, who used similar tactics against me in my case, of which Mike Flynn defended me by penning a letter of character reference and is a witness. Seeing McCabe was named as a Responding Management Official in my case, he should have recused himself with anything having to do with a character witness on my behalf against him and DOJ.

I am told by numerous people, but have been unable to confirm, that McCabe was asked why he was so viciously going after Flynn; my name was mentioned. I do know, from experience with McCabe, he is a vindictive individual and I have no doubt Mike's support of me fueled McCabe's disdain and personally vindictive aggressive unethical activities in this case. It matches his behavior in my case.

Reliable fact-finding is essential to procedural due process and to the accuracy and uniformity of sentencing. I am unsure if the fact-finding in this case is reliable, nor do I think we currently have all the facts.

The punishment which LtG. Flynn has already endured this past year, due to the nature of the case, legal fees and reputation damage, is punishment enough. He is a true patriot, a loving husband and father, a devoted grandfather, a trusted friend, and has a close knit family made up of compassionate and honest individuals. To be branded a felon, is a major hit to a hero who protected the American people for 33 years. I do not think society would benefit from Mike Flynn going to jail nor being branded as a convicted felon. Not knowing the sentencing guidelines for this charge but if there is any chance that the case can be downgraded to a misdemeanor, this would be an act of justice that numerous Americans need to see to stay hopeful for further justice.

Respectfully yours,

Exclusive: Former Joe Biden Secret Service Agent: We Had to Protect Women From Him, a Weinstein Level Stuff

Guest post by Cassandra Fairbanks at Big League Politics:

A former Secret Service agent assigned to the Vice President Joe Biden residence claims that the Service often had to protect female agents from him.

Speaking on the condition of anonymity, the agent asserted that, “We had to cancel the VP Christmas get together at the Vice President’s house because Biden would grope all of our wives and girlfriend’s asses.” The annual party was for agents and Navy personnel who were tasked with protecting the Biden family.

“He would mess with every single woman or teen. It was horrible,” the agent said.

According to the source, a Secret Service agent once got suspended for a week in 2009 for shoving Biden after he cupped his girlfriend’s breast while the couple was taking a photo with him. The situation got so heated, the source tells Big League, that others had to step in to prevent the agent from hitting the then-Vice President.

Additionally, the agent claims that Biden would walk around the VP residence naked at night. “I mean, Stark naked – Weinstein level stuff,” he added.

He said that the men on duty would frequently stand in front of female agents and Navy women that were present â like a damn guardian.â On some occasions, they would make up reasons to get the women away from where he was.

The agent said he was specifically concerned about women in the Navy.

â They werenâ t allowed to disobey him at all, but weâ d take them away under pretend auspices,â the agent stated.

The official Vice Presidential residence is the Queen Anne style house at One Observatory Circle in Washington, DC, which is located on the northeast grounds of the U.S. Naval Observatory. The property is maintained and cared for by the service branch.

Best-selling author Ronald Kessler wrote about Bidenâ s problem with female agents in his book The First Family Detail.

â Agents say that, whether at the vice presidentâ s residence or at his home in Delaware, Biden has a habit of swimming in his pool nude,â Kessler wrote. â Female Secret Service agents find that offensive.â

Our source confirmed this sentiment, adding that â it was especially an issue at his Delaware house that he would go to every weekend.â

â He would only get naked when Jill was absent,â he added.

Biden has also long been criticized for his contact with women and girls in photos and videos, and was even referred to as â Creepy Uncle Joe Bidenâ by the Washington Post.

In a report from the Washington Examiner titled, â Joe Bidenâ s Woman Touching Habit,â Byron York wrote that he has a tendency to be â particularly affectionate with women in business and social situations, like the 2013 Christmas party at which he embraced reporter Amie Parnes.â

The agent also worked under the Bush administration, and added that Vice President Dick Cheney
â never grabbed any butts or breasts.â

Former Secret Service Agent Files Lawsuit Against The Entire Clinton Machine â The Gang Is All There.â

GARY J. BYRNE served in federal law enforcement for nearly thirty years, in the U.S. Air Force Security Police, the Uniformed Division of the Secret Service, and most recently as a Federal Air Marshal. In his first book, #1 New York Times bestseller CRISIS OF CHARACTER, he shared his experiences as the first Secret Service employee compelled to testify in a criminal case against a sitting U.S. president.â He boldly made the decision to write the book when he became concerned the woman he knew so well could possibly become the next President of the United States.

Although Bill Clinton was the President of the United States during Byrneâs tenure, he was most impressed with Hillary Clinton, the First Lady of the United States. He describes her as two different people.

Most people are at their best in public, but Hillary does not have a best. She is psychotic and treats those under her as if they are mere chattel. People are meant to be used in her estimation, and they are stepping stones for her feet.

As far as her relationship with Bill Clinton, when the cameras are on she smiles and holds his hand. But in reality Hillary Clinton does not like men period, especially her husband.

Byrne says that all the â gossipâ you have heard about the Clintons is absolutely true. He actually attributes the downfall of the FBI to the couple. He said when they left Arkansas for the White House, the White House became Arkansas.

Hillary Clinton does not take â noâ for an answer. She does not respect the process of law in government, as she simply demands what she wants when she wants it. If she does not get it, someoneâ s life will be hell. He even admitted he covered up evidence against the Clintons as their Secret Service Agent.

Byrne went as far as to say that he had discovered tissues in Bill Clintonâ s private study with lipstick and fluid on them. He made it sound as if he spent most of his time cleaning up for Clinton crimes. Also, my take is Hillary was never the long-suffering wife of a philanderer â she only played that part.

He amazingly said that she and Bill turned the FBI into their political machine, and they were determined to do it the minute they stepped into the White House. Bottom line for Byrne is â the Clinton reign ended the rule of law and the Republic of the United States.

Gary Byrne knows more about the Clintonâ s than virtually anyone having served as Secret Service protection during Billâ s Presidency. Earlier this week he has filed a civil RICO suit against the Clintons and their most notorious cronies.

When I said, â the gang is all here,â Byrne is not just suing the Clintons, he is suing the entire Clinton machine of cronies. BOOM!

The plaintiff, Gary John Byrne, has brought the lawsuit, summons have been issued, and the suit is on the court docket as we speak.

As you can see Gary Byrne is suing all the gang, and it makes me most happy. He even mentioned he would like to find the truth about what happened to Seth Rich.

Pray for Gary Byrne, as his life is in danger. Most of all Gary fears for his life and his family's life, and he has asked to court to intervene to stop his own murder.

nypost.com/2016/06/27/the-untold-horrifying-foes-of-hillarys-time-in-the-white-house/

â Hillary Clinton was a White House monster when she was first lady.

Thatâs the assertion in a new book called â Crisis of Characterâ by Gary Byrne, which hits stores Tuesday.

One of Hillary the Monsterâs favorite targets was Vince Foster, according to Byrne, a member of the Secret Service who was stationed in the White House during the Clinton administration.

Foster was the lawyer who relocated to Washington from Arkansas after his childhood pal, Bill Clinton, was elected president.

â Word circulated that (Hillary Clinton) berated (Foster) mercilessly â I knew what it was like to be yelled at by superiors, but Mrs. Clinton never hesitated to launch a tirade,â wrote Byrne.

Byrne doesnâ t know the half of it â which Iâ m now going to tell you.

Foster committed suicide in McLean, Va.â s, Fort Marcy Park on July 20, 1993. The 48-year-old shot himself in the head. Friends later reported that he was very â maybe even clinically â depressed.

At the time, there were suspicions of murder and coverups. Foster had, after all, been involved in many of the Clintonsâ questionable financial transactions, both as their lawyer and as a participant in those deals. And those deals were getting increasingly embarrassing for the Clintons as well as others in Arkansas and Washington.

All of the deals came to be known by the name of just one â Whitewater.

I was investigating the Clintons back then for The Post because this started out mainly as a financial story â a big one. And toward the end of the 1990s, I got to see a large number of documents from the Whitewater investigation, most of which have not been seen by outsiders.

So now Iâ m going to add to Byrneâ s stories about Hillary. Most of this stuff has, until now, been overlooked because the focus has been on Bill Clinton and his sexual shenanigans back then.

Some of you will argue that this is ancient history and shouldnâ t be dredged up. But whenever someone runs for the highest office in the country, their whole life becomes relevant.

Hillary has rightly raised some ancient bankruptcies of Donald Trump, her likely Republican foe. Itâ s relevant.

Before they got to the White House, Hillary and Foster were good friends. Some suspected they were even more than that, evidenced by the fact that Foster was caught slapping Hillaryâ s backside at a birthday party one night at a Little Rock bar.

That story was told to me more than 15 years ago by Arkansas state troopers who witnessed it and thought the two were having an affair, although they didnâ t have any hard evidence.

Lisa Foster, Vinceâ s widow, was even asked by an investigator about the relationship between Hillary and her late husband but she refused to discuss it. The investigator thought that was suspicious, but Lisa threatened to stop talking unless the subject was changed. â Her face got red and she was a little upset,â said the investigator of Foster.

So it must have been a shock to Vince Foster when he got to the White House in an exalted position, thrilled that his old friend had won the presidency and his good pal, Hillary, was also in a position of power â only to be put down by her at every turn.

Lisa Foster told the investigator that Vince â couldnâ t laugh, couldnâ t smileâ during his time at the White House. â He was from a law firm [the Rose Law firm] where they would handle one thing at a time. Suddenly, heâ s got 40 things going on at one time,â the investigator told me.

Among those multiple things on his plate were probes of the Clintonsâ firing of workers in the White House travel office, the Whitewater transaction, other financial transactions of the Clintons and likely testimony before Congress.

Vince Foster even made an appointment with a psychiatrist shortly before he died, but he killed himself before that meeting.

A suicide note was found â but not until six days after he died. And it was suspiciously located in his briefcase, torn to pieces with one piece missing. The briefcase was supposedly searched right after his death and â again presumably â no suicide note was discovered.

The contents of the note were never released and Lisa refused to discuss the matter with an investigator. There were rumors that it wasnâ t even a suicide note â that it was just the ramblings of a disgruntled White House insider written well before he took his life.

People in Whitewater special prosecutor Ken Starrâ s office had a lot of questions about the note.

Specifically, they wanted to know why Bill Clinton was told about the note so much later than Hillary was told. Bernie Nussbaum, counsel to the president, told Hillary about the note and â she had said he should handle it and was emotional,â according to a previously undisclosed document from Starrâ s office.

â Nussbaum did not say whether he had actually shown HRC [Hillary Rodham Clinton] the note,â according to the document.

On July 27 â seven days after Fosterâ s suicide â there was a meeting about the note. Lisa Foster was heading to Washington later that day and â [White House chief of staff Mack] McLarty was present when Lisa came to the White House and saw the note. She was more composed than he expected,â according to the document.

President Clinton was apparently busy that day and still hadnâ t been told of the note. McLarty eventually told him. â Mack does not believe the president knew about the note before he told him,â the Starr document said. McLarty was asked: â Does it puzzle you that the first lady had not told the president about the note? and Mack said, â No.â â â

Hillary has a lot of secrets and others will be coming out over the next few months. As Iâ ve been saying, the Democrats should have picked a better candidate.â

As you can see, Gary Byrne has a reason to fear for his life, and he is an American hero. I thank him for his courage and his honesty.

I hope you watch Jason Goodmanâ s interview with Byrne, as it is very revealing.

FBI's history with Southern Poverty Law Center uncovered

The FBI has a long history of collaborating with the Southern Poverty Law Center. In 2009, an FBI memo described the SPLC as a 'credible' organization. The DOJ tells 'Tucker' the FBI will reevaluate its relationships with similar groups to ensure it doesn't partner with groups that discriminate. #Tucker

A Republican lawmaker is demanding some answers from the FBI after he says the bureau admitted to working with the controversial Southern Poverty Law Center.

In a letter obtained by Fox Newsââ Tucker Carlson Tonight,ââ Rep. Matt Gaetz, R-Fla., says the FBI has â admitted to working with the SPLC,ââ in a development he describes as â surprising and worrisome.ââ â This is surprising and worrisome, as the SPLC is known to use its platform in order to denigrate and disparage certain groups by labeling them â hate groups,ââ he said.

He said that groups such as the Christian Family Research Council (FRC) have been labeled a hate group, while members of â Antifaââ a broad collaboration of left-leaning, anti-fascist activists -- have not been given such a label. He added that Floyd Corkins, who shot an FRC employee, later said he targeted the group as the SPLC had labeled it an antigay group.

â The SPLCââ s conflation of mainstream political advocacy groups with legitimate hate groups and domestic terror groups is absurd, frequently indiscriminate and dangerous,ââ he said.

While details on the alleged relationship were not clear, â Tucker Carlson Tonightââ reported that the FBI had described the group as â a well-known, established and credibleââ organization in 2009, and that the agency has briefed the FBI on alleged domestic terror threats in the U.S.

7-23-18 Letter to FBI Congressional Affairs Re FBI Relationship With SPLC by Alex Pfeiffer on Scribd

Gaetz's letter requests more information on the FBI's alleged ties to the group, including how much weight the FBI gives to SPLC designations of "hate groups" and what information, if any, the bureau provides to the group.

The FBI confirmed to "Tucker Carlson Tonight" in June that it "continues to have a relationship with the SPLC."

This week, when pressed on that relationship, the FBI had this to say: "For many years, the FBI has engaged with various organizations, both formally and informally. Such outreach is a critical component of the FBI's mission, and we welcome information from these organizations on any possible violations of civil rights, hate crimes or other potential crimes or threats. We do, however, evaluate our relationships with these groups as necessary to ensure the appropriateness of any interaction."

A Department of Justice spokesman said that Attorney General Jeff Sessions had ordered that any such relationships be re-evaluated.

"The attorney general has directed the FBI to re-evaluate their relationships with groups like this to ensure the FBI does not partner with any group that discriminates," a spokesperson said in a statement.

The center recently apologized and issued a $3.3 million settlement to Maajid Nawaz and his organization, the Quilliam Foundation, for including them in a list of "anti-Muslim extremists."

"Although we may have our differences with some of the positions that Mr. Nawaz and Quilliam have taken, we recognize that they have made important contributions to efforts to promote pluralism and that they are most certainly not anti-Muslim extremists," the group said in a statement.

Alex Pfeiffer contributed to this report.

Why it's time for Democrats to ditch Nancy Pelosi when you are running as a Democrat in Donald Trump country, the name Nancy Pelosi is even more toxic than the letters CNN.

In one of the more powerful TV ads in the run-up to Tuesday's special House election in western Pennsylvania, the Democrat Conor Lamb earnestly declares: â My opponent wants you to believe that the biggest issue in this campaign is Nancy Pelosi. It's all a big lie. I've already said â that I don't support Nancy Pelosi.â

The Pennsylvania contest is largely symbolic since the district (which Trump carried by nearly 20% points in 2016) will disappear into the mists like Brigadoon when a new statewide redistricting plan takes effect. But from a splenetic Trump rally on Saturday night to a recent appearance by Joe Biden on behalf of Lamb, both parties are treating this race as if it were a dry run for November.

Which brings us back to the Democratsâ Nancy Pelosi problem.

As the House Democratic leader since 2005, Pelosi is unpopular (her approval rating was 29% in a national Quinnipiac University poll in February) and extremely well known (83% of voters in the Quinnipiac survey knew who she was). That twofold familiarity and voter fatigue is why the demonization of Pelosi remains a staple of Republican attack ads.

Even when Democrats try to escape Pelosi, as Lamb has done in his campaign, partisan politics grants limited wriggle room. As the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette put it in a snippy editorial endorsing the Republican, Rick Saccone, in the congressional race: âMr Lambâ attempted to distance himself from ultra-liberal Democratic leader Nancy Pelosi and says he would not vote for her to lead his party. But who would he vote for? An abstention will not win him independence from the Democratic caucus.â

Replacing Pelosi with a little-known Democrat would deprive the Republicans of an easy target in campaign ads

This Pelosi pushback will be repeated across the country in the fall as the Democratsâ road to a House majority follows Trump terrain. But why have Democrats decided that Pelosiâs quest to become the first person in American history to return as House speaker after an eight-year gap is more important than depriving Trump of a rubber-stamp Congress?

After more than 13 years as the House Democratic leader, Pelosi has written enough feminist history to fill the Capitol dome. Any doubts about her stamina as she nears her 78th birthday were dispelled last month as she held the House floor for more than eight hours in support of the young undocumented immigrants known as Dreamers. And she has been a prolific fundraiser for the party, although this year Democrats in tight races probably will spend more money on campaign commercials distancing themselves from Pelosi.

In normal times, the temptation would be to give Pelosi her last-hurrah campaign to win back the speakerâs gavel that she lost in the 2010 Democratic collapse. But for any Rip Van Winkles out there, we live in an era defined by a human temper tantrum in the Oval Office and a Republican Congress torn between paralytic fear of Trump and a partisan urge for sycophancy.

A strong case can be made that the congressional elections this year are the most important off-year contests since at least 1946 â the year when the Republicans took control of Congress for the first time since the Depression and brought a generation of virulent anti-communists like Joseph McCarthy to power.

For all the glib talk of a “blue wave”, there is a sizable risk that the Democrats could fall a few seats short of the 24 they need to win back the House. Even with, say, a three-seat majority, the Republicans would select all the committee chairmen and thwart any investigation into the misdeeds of the Trump administration.

That is why the moment is at hand for Pelosi to cap her congressional career by announcing “for the good of the nation and her party” that she will step down as Democratic leader.

It doesn’t matter if Pelosi is succeeded by the 78-year-old House minority whip Steny Hoyer (who has been waiting to take over almost as long as Prince Charles) or anyone else in the caucus. Replacing Pelosi with a little-known Democrat (regardless of gender or race) would deprive the Republicans of an easy target in campaign ads.

Selfless decisions are rare in American politics these days. But no matter how the Pennsylvania returns come in Tuesday night, Nancy Pelosi needs to accept the reality that the Democrats are stronger without her.

Genocide Games: How Pelosi Reined In Criticism Of 2008 Beijing Olympics While Her Family Was Bagging Cash In China

Senators from both parties BACK setting up a 9/11-style commission to investigate what the White House did wrong in the pandemic - as it's revealed government went through \$265 BILLION in COVID funds via stock market scams!

Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi (D-CA), once a fervent critic of the Chinese Communist Party, changed her tune as ties to Beijing enriched her family, bestselling author Peter Schweizer reveals in his new book Red-Handed: How American Elites Get Rich Helping China Win.

Pelosi’s stance perhaps changed most rapidly during the debate over the 2008 Beijing Summer Olympics, an event human rights activists decried as a travesty given China’s extensive record of atrocities against its own people. Opponents of the Games argued at the time that granting China such a tremendous honor and showcase for the Communist Party would embolden it to commit even greater horrors.

A year later, China sent paramilitary troops to crush a peaceful protest by members of the Uyghur community of East Turkistan, killing dozens and setting in motion the events that would lead to dictator Xi Jinping currently presiding over concentration camps that, at their peak, were estimated to imprison as many as 3 million people.

Early in her career in Congress, Pelosi was one of the most vocal anti-Beijing voices in Washington, Schweizer writes. Pelosi so opposed the Communist Party that she protested against the Tiananmen Square massacre in Tiananmen Square.

â In 1991, as a junior member of Congress, Pelosi found herself in Tiananmen Square. She was part of a congressional delegation visiting Beijing barely two years after the horrific events had unfolded,â Schweizer writes. â Pelosi â l covertly carried a banner into the middle of the square and unfurled it in front of a small crowd and the media. â To those who died for Democracy in China,â it read.â

Schweizer also notes that Pelosi â actually fought against most-favored-nation trade status and bringing Beijing into the World Trade Organization.â

As her husband Paul Pelosiâ s business ties in China grew, however, Pelosiâ s human rights advocacy waned.

Husband Paul became a partner investor in Matthews International Capital Management, a pioneer in the Chinese investment market. He also invested in several other companies whose success depended upon business with the Chinese Communist Party.

â Paul Pelosiâ s classmate from Georgetown, Vincent Wolfington, set up a limousine service called Global Ambassador Concierge, which catered to ultra-high net-worth individuals traveling around the world,â Schweizer documents. â One big market for Global: the Beijing 2008 Summer Olympics.â

â In Congress, Pelosi had initially been critical of China hosting the games, arguing that its human rights record should prevent it from such an honor,â Schweizer writes. â The year after her husband bought shares in Global Ambassador Concierge, she reversed course and opposed a boycott of Beijingâ s hosting of the games.â

Two years later, according to Red-Handed, â the Pelosis held between $5 million and $25 million in a Matthews fund â specializing in Asian investment.â Paul Pelosi received partnership income between $100,000 and $1 million.â

Today, Pelosi faces much the same situation: a session of the Olympic Games in Beijing, opposed by a large contingent of human rights activists who fear that Chinaâ s repression may increase even further after two weeks of global adulation. Unlike last time, the 2008 Summer Games precedent lends heightened credibility to these concerns.

Pelosi has opposed calls to authentically boycott the 2022 Beijing Winter Olympics, asserting, â We must support and celebrate our athletes.â She has instead supported a â diplomatic boycottâ of the event. A â diplomatic boycottâ is not a boycott, as diplomats do not compete in the Olympic Games.

â As one united international community, we have the opportunity and responsibility to hold Beijing to account and to stand up for human dignity and freedom in the region and around the world,â Pelosi said in a statement after the administration of President Joe Biden announced a â diplomatic boycottâ of the 2022 Olympics.

Shortly before the Games began, Pelosi warned athletes not to behave like she once did in Tiananmen Square and keep their criticisms of the regime to themselves.

â I would say to our athletes â you are there to compete,â Pelosi said. â Do not risk incurring the anger of the Chinese government because they are ruthless.â

Pelosi has not commented at press time on the subsequent revelation that Biden administration diplomats have applied for visas to attend the Olympics, contrary to the White Houseâ s vow not to send official representation.

FBI Director: Weâre Investigating Antifa-Linked Individuals for Funding Terrorism. That Means George Soros is under FBI investigation.

At a hearing on global terrorism threats, Director Christopher Wray said they are not investigating the ideology as a whole, but rather individuals for their criminal actions.

FBI Director Christopher Wray, responding to questions from Rep. Scott Perry (R-PA) at a House Homeland Security hearing on global terrorism threats on Thursday, told the committee that the FBI is investigating Antifa-linked individuals for criminal activity.

Perry pointed out that Antifa factored in âinciting riotsâ across the country, probably referring to their violent actions during President Trumpâs inauguration and on college campuses.

âWe do have a very active domestic terrorism program,â Wray responded, hinting that Antifa-aligned individuals could be engaged in terrorist conduct. â[W]eâre not investigating âAntifaâ as âAntifaâ â thatâs an ideology and we donât investigate ideologies.â

âWe are investigating a number of what we would call anarchist-extremist investigations,â he added, saying there are entities looking to commit violence âon kind of an Antifa ideology.â

Wray also told Perry that the FBI is investigating the funding going to Antifa groups that are pursuing violence.

In September, it surfaced that the FBI placed Antifa-linked groups on its terror watch lists, according to Politico.

On Monday, Senate Judiciary Chairman Chuck Grassley (R-IA) called on President Trump to honor whistleblowers in order to â drain the swamp.â

â Whistleblowers know where the skeletons are in government,â said Grassley.

President Trump vowed to â drain the swampâ as part of his campaign promise to the American people.

For too long, the swamp creatures in DC have gone against the American voters with the Deep State bureaucracy continuing to serve special interest groups and lobbyists rather than taxpayers.

Chuck Grassley tweeted: 2day is national whistleblower appreciation day The way to drain the swamp is for the president to honor whistleblowers. whistleblowers know where the skeletons are in govt why not have a rose garden ceremony honoring whistleblowers? @realDonaldTrump

â ChuckGrassley (@ChuckGrassley) July 30, 2018

Plenty of whistleblowers have come forward since President Trump was elected, however; the Justice Department is being held hostage by Sessions and Rosenstein.

William D. Campbell, the FBI informant and whistleblower on the Uranium One scandal broke his silence in an explosive testimony to Congress in February.

Other whistleblowers in the FBI are also ready to speak about the corruption under Comey's directorship.

Another whistleblower told Rep. Ron DeSantis (R-FL) that he witnessed a senior FBI executive suggest the FBI had a personal motive and targeted Flynn with the purpose of ruining his career.

We need to get rid of AG Sessions and appoint an Attorney General who is ready to help President Trump drain the swamp otherwise there's no point in whistleblowers risking their safety coming forward.

US, UK blame Russia for coordinated cyberattacks on internet devices worldwide

The Federal Election Commission (FEC) recently held two days of hearings on proposed internet regulations. While the hysterical media has ginned up a new â red scare,â the FECâ s proposals will do nothing to stop bad actors, but will undermine our First Amendment rights to online political speech.

The FEC used the hearings, at which I testified, to consider different approaches â some more restrictive than others â to â improveâ disclaimers for online political advertising. Yet FEC regulations already require political action committees (PACs) and other online spenders to use disclaimers where they can, or to click through to fully disclaimed pages if they canâ t. PACs are also required to disclose all of their expenditures monthly or quarterly, and file special reports whenever spending more than modestly to support or oppose candidates.

Existing regulations are clear and comprehensive. The law isn't the so-called problem being addressed here, though; it's all that persnickety speech outside the political establishment.

ADVERTISEMENT The FEC's Democrats, most notably Vice Chairwoman Ellen Weintraub, condemn advertising that's paid for by Russia or other foreign countries, urging Congress to regulate political spending on the internet. But that's silly: The law already forbade those bad actors in the first place.

Bad actors won't comply with the law because they're bad actors. For the political elites, who can afford to hire campaign finance lawyers and well-paid vendors, the FEC's proposals will at most be a nuisance as they continue delivering their messages online.

Regulating the internet will only overburden everyone else who would seek to comply with the law, or simply stay silent. The left's quick-trigger response is as aggressively anti-First Amendment as they are to the Second Amendment, and every bit as pointless. Echoing anti-gun activists, anti-speech liberals attempt to punish lawful activity they dislike with rules that won't stop unlawful activity.

If political advertisers violate the regulations on the books, they should be pursued and punished. But the left's vision of a less free internet is little more than ill-considered, knee-jerk reaction to Hillary Clinton's failed presidential bid.

The resonance of President Trump's candidacy and eventual victory led Congress and federal agencies to take a heightened interest in Facebook advertising and other forms of truly open, online speech through which the Trump message flourished. Following the 2016 election, Sen. Mark Warner (D-Va.) warned against political ads "that would drive interest toward stories or groups to sow chaos and drive division in our country." In other words, ideas he doesn't like.

Left-leaning journalists, meanwhile, continue to suggest "fake news" on social media elected President Trump. As NPR reporter Danielle Kurtzleben put it, "Many purveyors of fake news aimed to help Trump win, and lo and behold, Trump won." In other words, ideas they don't approve of.

Of course, such assertions don't hold up to empirical scrutiny. Zuckerberg first came under congressional pressure over \$10,000 worth of Russian-bought Facebook ads. Not all of them were even explicitly political: Of the roughly 3,500 Facebook ads traced back to Russia, only about 100 mentioned support for President Trump or opposition to Clinton.

Are we really supposed to believe that $10,000 and 100 ads felled the billion-dollar Clinton machine "the epitome of political establishment? Or, could it be Americans simply rejected an out-of-touch liberal they didn't like and couldn't trust?

To enact broader internet regulations because of the Democratic Party's sour grapes is the definition of foolishness. Anti-speech Democrats and their establishment enablers assume Americans are mindless simpletons, bought off by the wealthiest candidates and most expensive ad buys.

Have we so quickly forgotten the debacle of Jeb Bush? Or Sen. Marco Rubio (R-Fla.)? Or even Clinton herself? Along with Mitt Romney, these were the candidates with the largest super PACs in U.S. history and they all lost.

President Trump cruised to primary victory after victory running almost no ads. He won the White House after being substantially outspent in the general election.

The bottom line is this: It's up to Americans to decide which ideas to support or oppose. Political advertising only brings them more ideas to consider and broadens the parameters of our political debates.

This is especially true online, where debates are at their most robust. Stifling them with red tape is un-American.

Keep free speech on the internet free from Big Government.

HOLLYWOOD IS GETTING PAID BACK FOR FINANCING POLITICAL CRONYISM

As corporate progressivism vies against Trumpian nationalism for the future of Americaâ€™s Empire, celebrities are inciting their own upheaval within Hollywood.

American Psycho author Bret Easton Ellis warned for years of an impending shift against progressive values in a town long touted as a bastion of liberalism. Following Kanye Westâ€™s controversial break with liberalism over Twitter and TMZ, Ellis is seeing his premonition unfold.

â€œAs someone who considers themselves a disillusioned Gen-Xâ€™er, I think there IS a backlash brewing against leftist hysteria,â€ Ellis told Observer over email. â€œWhat I used to semi-align myself with has no answers for anything right now, just constant bitching and finding ways to delegitimize an election.â€ â€œThat is not a plan for 2020, and if I was a hardcore Democrat Iâ€™d be very worried despite the blue wave of 2018, that may or may not fully arrive,â€ added the controversial novelist.

Though Westâ€™s initial pivot drew from New Right ideologyâ€™ and promoted maligned conservatives with questionable pastsâ€™ the rapper has since sparked debate over the relationship between social movements and groupthink.

â€œI donâ€™t know if Kanye was red pillled exactly,â€ said Ellis, referencing how individuals are converted to conservatism online similar to Neoâ€™s awakening in the Matrix. â€œKanye does not do this in a systematic or literal way: itâ€™s sweeping, metaphorical and inchoate and in the age of digital literal-mindedness.â€

In the age of digital literal-mindedness, Ellis and West, who were reported to be collaborating on a film together during the Obama years, became contrarian thinkers of the entertainment industry by flirting on the edges of the Overton windowâ€™ the range of topics and viewpoints widely viewed as socially acceptable.

As the Overton window in media, academia and Hollywood shrinksâ€™ ejecting conservative voices like Kevin Williamson, while opposing centrists in the vein of New York Times opinion editor Bari Weissâ€™ that on the right grows.

Kanye West's embrace by New Right figures like Turning Point USA's communications director Candace Owens is not predicated on his conservatism, so much as his rejection of the movement's counter-ideology. Any backlash against progressivism, and the culture of political correctness falling underneath its umbrella, is welcomed by conservative operatives as part of a larger culture war.

And such backlash, Ellis warns, has finally come to Hollywood as the city's residents and players break with the corporate hypocrisies of the progressive movement.

Hollywood is both hysterically emotional about its liberalism, but it's locked in a major hypocrisy because it is one of the least inclusive capitalist societies that exists—pure corporate culture with corporate rules," said Ellis. "It's about caving in creatively to the global marketplace and, for example, if that means no gay characters in movies because they won't play in certain territories then so be it. And as I've always liked to point out: Beverly Hills voted for Trump in 2016—one of the only bits of red out here in a sea of blue, and that fact does not fit into a neat narrative about So-Cal Hollywood liberalism."

HOPE HICKS IS WASHINGTON DC'S #1 SEXPOT

VOTED MOST DESIRED WOMAN IN DC

By Geoff Earle, Deputy Political Editor and Nikki Schwab, U.s. Political Reporter For Dailymail.com

Hicks refused to answer most questions pertaining to her work in the Trump Administration, according to members of the House Intelligence Committee.

But she did acknowledge during the closed-door meeting on Tuesday that she has occasionally told a white lie for the president.

However she insisted that she has always told the truth on matters related to the Russia probe, the New York Times reported.

Hicks did not answer questions about her time in the White House or her work during the transition after her boss' election win in November 2016.

She also didn't say whether any other Trump aides lie, nor did she implicate any other senior staff members.

Hicks, who has been at the center of White House scandal in recent weeks because of her relationship with Rob Porter, was then seen leaving the hearing with the Capitol building in the background.

She refused to answer any questions from waiting reporters - and only spoke to warn a cameraman not to fall over.

Rep. Mike Quigley, an Illinois Democrat and House Intelligence Committee member, told CNN earlier on Tuesday that Hicks was not answering questions in the closed-door session.

'I have less hope that we will get to all the answers,' Quigley told reporters, purposely deploying the pun. 'No one is asserting privilege, they are following the orders of the White House not to answer certain questions.'

Quigley suggested that Hicks should be subpoenaed.

Over at the White House, Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders wouldn't say whether Hicks had been instructed to keep her mouth closed.

'As is always the case I'm not going to comment on any individual's interactions with the committee,' Huckabee Sanders told reporters during Tuesday's press briefing.

'We are cooperating because, as the president has said repeatedly, there is no collusion and we're going to continue to cooperate and hopefully they wrap this up soon,' the press secretary added.

When one reporter pointed out that courts have never ruled that the transition period fell under executive privilege, Huckabee Sanders still wouldn't talk about any instructions Hicks might have gotten.

'Just because we asked the question in different ways I'm still not going to comment on any individual's interactions with the committee,' she said. 'I'm also not going to comment on leaks on what's supposed to be a confidential setting.'

President Trump ignored a question about Hicks' performance yelled at him by a reporter during an event Tuesday afternoon in the White House's Roosevelt Room.

Hicks was originally supposed to appear before lawmakers in January, but that trip to the Capitol was postponed.

Her appearance follows a heated clash between the committee and former chief White House strategist Steve Bannon.

The panel's top Democrat, Rep. Adam Schiff of California, said it was 'likely' Bannon would face contempt of Congress after failing to answer numerous questions in his last appearance.

'I think it's likely that he will face a contempt citation,' Schiff said after Bannon only agreed to answer 25 questions authorized by the White House.

White House Press Secretary Sarah Huckabee Sanders wouldn't tell reporters at the briefing Tuesday whether Hope Hicks had been instructed not to tell lawmakers about her time at the White House and the transition

White House lawyers are attempting to declare off-limits questions from the transition, although so far the White House has stopped short of declaring executive privelege.

'I suspect that Mr. Bannon has been informed that [the White House] will only stonewall so far,' Schiff said at the Council on Foreign Relations.

'They will never allow him to be fined or go to jail, but they do wish to draw the process as long as they can,' Schiff added.

Hicks was aboard Air Force One when the White House drafted a statement in response to a New York Times report that Donald Trump Jr. had met in Trump Tower with a Kremlin-linked lawyer.

Additionally, the New York Times reported that Mark Corallo, a former spokesman for the president's legal team, planned to tell Special Counsel Robert Mueller's team that Hicks had said that the emails that Donald Trump Jr wrote about the infamous Trump Tower meeting with Russians 'will never get out.'

Hicks is one of the president's longest-serving political aides, having joined the campaign at its genesis.

Before that, the former teen model handled public relations for Ivanka Trump within the Trump Organization.

Hicks' position in the White House came under additional scrutiny amid the Rob Porter scandal, as she had been dating the White House staff secretary at the time that he resigned in disgrace after DailyMail.com revealed allegations of abuse from two of his ex-wives.

She and Porter are no longer dating, according to people with knowledge of the former relationship.

HOW $21 TRILLION IN U.S. TAX MONEY DISAPPEARED. â FULL SCOPE AUDITâ OF THE PENTAGON

0 COMMENT

POSTED BY GLOBAL RESEARCH

ACCORDING TO THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE INSPECTOR GENERAL AND THE DEFENSE FINANCE AND ACCOUNTING SERVICE, $21 TRILLION IN TAXPAYER FUNDING IS UNACCOUNTED FOR.

To help people comprehend the scale of this, $1 Trillion is $1000 Billion. This means that $21,000 Billion in taxpayer money has gone missing.

How can this be possible?

We outlined the â Unaccountable System of Global War Profiteersâ in detail here.

For further understanding, we are featuring another mind-blowing Department of Defense Inspector General (DOD IG) report.

The following are highlights from the DOD IG â *Summary of DOD Office of the Inspector General Audits of Financial Management*â :

- ◆ The financial management systems DOD has put in place to control and monitor the money flow donâ t facilitate but actually â prevent DOD from collecting and reporting financial informationâ that is accurate, reliable, and timely.â (p. 4)
- ◆ DOD frequently enters â unsupportedâ (i.e. imaginary) amounts in its books (p. 13) and uses those figures to make the books balance. (p. 14)
- ◆ Inventory records are not reviewed and adjusted; unreliable and inaccurate data are used to report inventories, and purchases are made based on those distorted inventory reports. (p. 7)
- ◆ DOD managers do not know how much money is in their accounts at the Treasury, or when they spend more than Congress appropriates to them. (p. 5)18
- ◆ Nor does DOD â record, report, collect, and reconcileâ funds received from other agencies or the public (p. 6),
- ◆ DOD tracks neither buyer nor seller amounts when conducting transactions with other agencies. (p. 12)
- ◆ â The cost and depreciation of the DOD general property, plant, and equipment are not reliably reportedâ !.â (p. 8);
- ◆ â â the value of DOD property and material in the possession of contractors is not reliably reported.â (p. 9)
- ◆ DOD does not know who owes it money, nor how much. (p. 10.)

It gets worse; overall:

- audit trails are not kept in sufficient detail, which means no one can track the money;
- DOD's Internal Controls, intended to track the money, are inoperative. Thus, DOD cost reports and financial statements are inaccurate, and the size, even the direction (in plus or minus values), of the errors cannot be identified, and
- DOD does not observe many of the laws that govern all this.

It is as if the accountability and appropriations clauses of the U.S. Constitution were just window dressing, behind which this mind-numbing malfeasance thrives.

Technically, this is a violation of the Anti-Deficiency Act, a statute carrying felony sanctions of fines and imprisonment.

Congress and the Pentagon annually report and hold hearings on DOD's lack of financial accountability and sometimes enact new laws, but many of the new laws simply permit the Pentagon to ignore the previous ones; others are eyewash.

If you have a system that does not accurately know what its spending history is, and does not know what it is now (and does not care to redress the matter), how can you expect it to make a competent, honest estimate of future costs?

It is self-evident that an operation that tolerates inaccurate, unverifiable data cannot be soundly managed; it exempts itself from any reasonable standard of efficiency.

Recall, also that the errors in cost, schedule and performance that result are not random: actual costs always turn out to be much higher than, sometimes even multiples of, early estimates; the schedule is always optimistic, and the performance is always inflated.

The Pentagon, defense industry and their congressional operatives want need to increase the money flow into the system to pretend to improve it.

Supported by a psychology of excessive secrecy, generated fear and the ideological belief that there is no alternative to high cost, high complexity weapons, higher budgets are easier to justify, especially if no one can sort out how the Pentagon actually spends its money.

The key to the DOD spending problem is to initiate financial accountability. No failed system can be understood or fixed if it cannot be accurately measured.

And yet, there is no sense of urgency in the Pentagon to do anything about it.

Indeed, in the 1990s, we were promised the accountability problem would be solved by 1997. In the early 2000s, we were promised it would be solved by 2007; then by 2016; then by 2017.

The question must be asked: if nothing has been done by the Pentagon to end the accountability problem after more than 20 years of promises, is top management simply incompetent, or is this the intended result of obfuscation to avert accountability?

A spending system that effectively audits its weapon programs and offices would also be one that systemically uncovers incompetent and crooked managers, false promises and those who made them.

It would also necessarily reveal reasons to dramatically alter, if not cease, funding for some programs, which of course would make lots of people in industry, Congress, and the executive branch unhappy.

The current system and its out of control finances mortally harm our defenses, defraud taxpayers, and bloat the Pentagon and federal budgets.

Any reform that fails to address this most fundamental problem is merely another doomed attempt that will only serve to perpetuate a system that thrives on falsehoods and deception.

William Hartung, Director of the Arms and Security Project at the Center for International Policy, summed up the accountability crisis at the Pentagon by saying:

â Call it irony or call it symptomatic of the departmentâ s way of life, but an analysis by the Project on Government Oversight notes the Pentagon has so far spent roughly $6 billion on â fixingâ the audit problem â with no solution in sight.

If anything, the Defense Departmentâ s accounting practices have been getting worse.â

HOW MIDDLE EAST AND RUSSIAN MOBSTERS CONTROLLED OBAMA AND CLINTON

- WND

As I reported yesterday in WND, Khalid al-Mansour's recent appearance on a BlogTalkRadio show, The National and International Roundtable, revived a story that did not deserve to die in 2008 when it first surfaced.

In the introduction to that show, the host summarized what that story was. Khalid al-Mansour, he said, made news in 2008 when it was revealed that he had been a patron of President Barack Obama and had recommended him for admission to Harvard Law School. The host went on to describe al-Mansour as co-founder of the International law firm of al-Waleed, al-Talal and al-Mansour and special adviser to Saudi Arabian prince, his royal highness Prince Al Waleed bin Talal bin Abdulazziz. For the record, al-Mansour entered the world as an African-American by the name of Donald Warden. Thanks to the good work of Frank Miele, editor of the Daily Interlake of Kalispell, Mont., we can begin to see how al-Mansour and bin Talal involved themselves in Obama's ascendancy.

Miele unearthed a November 1979 column \(page 19-A\) written by one Vernon Jarrett, a veteran black columnist then for the Chicago Tribune and later for the Chicago Sun Times. As it happens, al-Mansour was Jarrett's source for the information in that column.

Jarrett begins the column, "What about rumored billions of dollars the oil-rich Arab nations are supposed to unload on American black leaders and minority institutions? It's not just a rumor, al-Mansour assures him. Aid will come from some of the Arab states." After detailing al-Mansour's work defending OPEC against an anti-trust suit, Jarrett observes that al-Mansour had been urging the rich Arab kingdoms to cultivate stronger ties to America's blacks by supporting black businesses and black colleges and giving financial help to disadvantaged students. It is not yet known how al-Mansour knew Jarrett. The fact, however, that he singled Jarrett out to convey information about a program designed to spend $20 million per year for 10 years to aid 10,000 minority students suggests a prior relationship. Miele could find no other reference to this initiative. It may have taken a private turn and, if so, Obama would have made a very likely candidate for the support of rich Arab kingdoms like Saudi Arabia. In addition to his Islamic name and roots, Obama had one very good connection: his mentor Frank Marshall Davis, card-carrying member of the Communist Party USA.

In the late 1940s, Davis, then a prominent journalist in Chicago, took young reporter Vernon Jarrett under his wing. As Paul Kengor relates in his excellent book, The Communist, Davis and Jarrett worked together on a number of projects, most notably the communist-controlled Citizens Committee to Aid Packinghouse Workers.

It so happens that 1979 was the year Obama began college. In his 1995 memoir, Dreams from My Father, he tells how he visited Frank before departing for the mainland, and Davis gave him the lowdown on college life.

Jarrett remained a prominent Chicago player until his death in 2004. Something of a kingmaker, he had much to do with the election of Chicago's first black mayor and Obama's role model, Harold Washington.

In that same year, 1983, his son, Dr. William Robert Jarrett, married Valerie Bowman. As Valerie Jarrett, she would become Obama's most trusted adviser in the White House.

Given this background, it seems altogether likely that venerable African-American entrepreneur and politico, Percy Sutton, told the truth when he said that al-Mansour asked him to help smooth Barack Obama's admission into Harvard Law School 20 years earlier.

Given this background, it is altogether more appalling that the media killed this game-changing story in 2008 through lies, denials and the slandering of Percy Sutton.

More than half a century ago, a professor from Menlo College in Atherton took a vacation to Saudi Arabia, a struggling young country despite recent oil wealth, and spent many an evening telling Saudi dinner companions about the small, private menâs school specializing in business education.

â The next thing you know, we had the royal family there,â chuckled Dorothy Skala, who worked at Menlo for almost six decades, much of that time as an aide to the traveling professor, John â Judgeâ Russell, who was head of the business department.

Since the late 1950s, the little-known campus in the wealthy enclave west of Palo Alto has attracted more than 100 members of the Saudi royal family and that nation's elite: princes, government ministers, bankers and gazillionaires like Alwaleed Bin Talal Al Saud (Class of '79), the 34th person on Forbes' latest list of the world's richest people.

While Menlo College is no household name to most Americans, its attraction to Saudi nationals foreshadowed a boom in Saudi students studying at colleges across the United States. Since 2010, the number has more than doubled to 54,000, propelling Saudis to become the fourth-largest group of foreign college students in the United States today, according to the Institute of International Education, which tracks such statistics.

Saudi government's help

The boom is largely because the Saudi government began paying tuition, room and board a decade ago for students studying abroad. In 2014, the number of Saudi students soared 58 percent in a single year — more than any other country.

Six Saudi students are enrolled at Menlo College this year, more per capita than at the University of California, where there are 74 Saudi students — but 238,700 students overall.

"I knew all the Saudis. Mohammed Faisal — he was a huge, big guy," Skala said of Prince Mohammed bin Faisal Al Saud (Class of '63), who helped develop the Islamic banking system. "We welcomed them with open arms. They picked up the American ways very quickly."

Menlo College opened in 1927 with two dozen students and by 2000 had grown to 500. Today, fewer than 800 students are enrolled. The college went coed in 1971, and administrators were able to identify just one female Saudi Arabian student, who graduated in 2011.

"Big sign of respect"

Menlo charges about $50,000 (including room and board) per year for state residents and nonresidents alike, and Saudi families or future employers typically pay the bill.

The six Saudi students there this year include Abdulaziz Al-Saud, a Saudi prince who says he's just a regular guy trying to figure out his future.

"I am not going to enter politics, that's for sure," he said with a smile.

He and four other Saudi students — brothers Nawaf and Abdullah Alakeel, 21 and 23, Abdulaziz Al-Benyan, 21, and Faisal Al Kabbani, 19 — are majoring in international business management.

"The Bay Area is a great hookup for jobs," said Al-Saud, 21, whose work experience includes managing an estate in Riyadh and looking after a special-needs child. His Menlo College friends wouldn't dream of using his title, which is "His Highness, Prince," and he looks aghast at the suggestion.

"I don't like for them to say prince because they're my friends," he said. "When I talk to my dad, I might call him prince, depending on the situation. If I talk to one of my uncles, I'll say it for sure. It's a big sign of respect."

The students said they like studying in Silicon Valley and prefer Menlo College to Stanford because it offers an undergraduate business major, unlike Stanford. All the Saudi students, including Manhal Elhein, 21, an accounting and entrepreneurship major born in San Francisco who grew up in Saudi Arabia, said they heard of Menlo from family or friends, a plus in the family-centered society.

“At Menlo, you’re able to walk into a class and the professor knows your name. I’m the type of guy who would rather have that student-teacher relationship,” said Al-Benyan, whose education is paid for by an oil company for which he’s agreed to work for four years after graduating.

Intersection of cultures

Seated around a table in the college’s administration building, the friends talked about the intersection of cultures, noting that Saudi Arabia is more Americanized than people know.

“People who grew up in Saudi Arabia are good with the mac-and-cheese thing,” said Abdullah Alakeel.

One graduate, Faysal Alaquil (Class of ’79), uncle of the Alakeel brothers, remembered arriving at Menlo with a letter of introduction from his brother, Youssef Alaquil (Class of ’67) and showing it to Skala.

“She had tears in her eyes when she found out that I am Youssef’s brother, of which she knew very well,” recalled Alaquil, who owns a trading company that bears his name. “She took the introduction letter and walked with me into Judge’s room and said ... ‘Judge, look who is here! It is Youssef’s younger brother, Faysal, just come all the way from Saudi Arabia.’”

“What school will treat their students like the way Menlo did? I felt at home,” Alaquil said. “I felt I am with my family.”

A more recent graduate, Suliman K. Olayan (Class of 2009), whose family owns the Olayan Group investment company, said he found a “friendly and, more importantly, close-knit environment” at the school. It was also, in a sense, exotic. “Menlo College was a far destination and would surely give me the chance to experience and immerse myself in new cultures and situations,” Olayan said.

College President Richard Moran, on the job since September, said he enjoys the diversity of Menlo which includes students from Guam, Guatemala and elsewhere “and appreciates the legacy of Saudi students going back generations.

He said, “Who can argue with a stamp of approval from a member of the royal family?”

When Silicon Valley wants a partner to help them rape young girls and boys as well as U.S. Governments, they turn to foreign butt-plugs from Atherton!

Atherton school’s prominent alumni

Menlo College claims more than 100 Saudi Arabians who attended or graduated. Here is a partial list:

HOW OBAMA BROUGHT BACK MUSLIM SLAVERY OF BLACK PEOPLE

Hope. Change. Slave.

November 21, 2017

Daniel Greenfield

32

Daniel Greenfield, a Shillman Journalism Fellow at the Freedom Center, is an investigative journalist and writer focusing on the radical left and Islamic terrorism.

America's first black president didn't bring a Hope to America, but he did bring slave auctions to Africa. After Obama liberated Libya for the Islamist rebels, Arab Muslims sell black slaves for a few hundred dollars at slave auctions.

While leftists tear down the statues of slave owners from centuries ago, it was the left that brought back the sale of black men as property.

Slavery was always one of Barack Obama's favorite subjects.

It was a favorite subject because it provided him with countless opportunities for tearing down America.

When called upon to disavow the racist, anti-Semitic and anti-American rants of his mentor, he instead denounced the Constitution as â€˜stained by this nation's original sin of slavery.â€˜ At the funeral of the Dallas police officers murdered by a member of the racist hate group he supported, he once again invoked this original sin even while he was justifying Black Lives Matterâ€™s bigotry and violence.

At Hillaryâ€™s DNC convention, Michelle Obama claimed that the White House had been â€˜built by slavesâ€™.

The unifying theme was that Americaâ€™s racist past made its origins, including their constitutional restraints on his power, illegitimate. A Constitution tainted by slavery should not be able to inhibit the actions of the nationâ€™s first black president. His wife had a special moral authority over the White House because it had been built by slaves. Slavery gave the Obamas a unique moral claim on power.

But Barack Obama and his ancestors had never been slaves. They might have been slave owners and sellers. And Americaâ€™s first black president unquestionably helped bring Muslim slavery back to Libya.

After Obama invaded Libya to aid the Muslim Brotherhood, black slaves are being sold there once more.

Videos show black people being put up for sale for as little as $400 by Arab Libyan Muslim slave traders. The black men being sold as slaves are described as â€˜big strong boys for farm work.â€˜

After years of lecturing Americans about the â€˜original sinâ€™ of slavery, Obama brought it back.

The black men being sold as slaves are Nigerians. Islam forbids Muslims to enslave Muslims. Nigeria has a large non-Muslim population. It is likely another case of Arab Muslims selling Christians into slavery.

Unlike President Bush, Obama paid little attention to Africa. When he did pay attention to Africa, it was largely to reward Muslim violence against African Christians in Nigeria, Kenya or CÃ´te d'Ivoire.

And, most prominently, Libya.

Obamaâ€™s Arab Spring encouraged Islamist movements in their bids for power whether they used ballots or bullets. The resulting devastation in the Middle East, with its death toll in the hundreds of thousands, and the rise of ISIS, has captured the worldâ€™s attention. But the Islamist wave spread chaos and terror through Africa. Egypt and Tunisia fell into the hands of Islamist killers who brutalized their own people even as the media cheered these â€˜democratic revolutionsâ€™. Boko Haram allied with ISIS in Nigeria.

And Obama illegally bombed Libya to aid the Muslim Brotherhood and allied Islamist groups in their bid for power. The regime change operation in Libya had been urged on by Hillary Clinton. The former Secretary of State had been encouraged by her associates to use it as a platform for a presidential run. But the Islamist takeover in Libya made for a bad photo op. Our attempts to address the flow of Qatari weapons into the hands of terrorists (after Obama gave a pass to their weapons smuggling scheme during the civil war) led to the Benghazi massacre. And the blackest stain on Hillaryâ€™s record.

But it didnâ€™t stop with Benghazi.

Libya tumbled into a second civil war between Islamists and the Libyan government. Despite the media blackout, the violence touched off by Obamaâ€™s regime change has never really stopped. ISIS has a significant presence in Libya. And until recently had a death grip on parts of Benghazi.

And that isnâ€™t the worst of it.

The Islamist Arab rebels had quickly begun targeting Africans during the civil war in a racist purge. Photos and videos showed beheadings, beatings and mutilations. The false claims of genocide in Benghazi that Obama had used to justify his invasion became real when his invasion led to the actual ethnic cleansing of Africans in Libya.

The first black president, who had allied with hate groups such as Black Lives Matter that accused America of genocide, had made possible an actual genocide of black people by his Arab Muslim allies.

The rebels he had armed and backed would identify themselves as, â The Brigade for Purging Slaves, Black Skinâ .

And then it got even worse.

The Tuaregs, a Berber Islamist people whose leaders claim to trace their â pureâ ancestry back to Mohammed, invaded and captured a large section of Mali. Accompanying them were Al Qaeda Jihadists. The Tuaregs keep slaves and have been at war with the â blacksâ . Their hostilities were motivated in large part by the conviction that â blacksâ were slaves while they were the descendants of Mohammed.

Obama ignored another racist Islamist war caused by his pro-Islamist intervention. Instead it was the French that stepped up. The recent deaths of four American soldiers in Niger however can be traced back to the disaster in Mali.

Sgt. La David Johnson, the African-American soldier whose condolence call by President Trump touched off a storm of leftist outrage, was murdered after being captured and tied up. The Jihadists who murdered Johnson are believed to be from the Islamic State in the Greater Sahara, an ISIS affiliate empowered by the Mali invasion, whose perpetrators are from a group deeming themselves â whiteâ .

While President Trump has been accused of racism by Rep. Frederica Wilson over the death of the African-American soldier, it was Obama who had empowered the racist Islamists that murdered him.

Meanwhile back in Libya, the slave trade has made a comeback. Videos show public slave auctions in Libya where light skinned Arab Libyans sell black Nigerians for a few hundred dollars.

The slave auction, that terrible institution, wasnâ t brought back by the right. It was the left.

Slavery isnâ t new to the Islamic world. And where Islam rules, slavery returns. The leftist-Islamist alliance doesnâ t just mean the burning of churches and the bombing of synagogues, or that Jewish students are hounded out of college campuses while European streets flow with blood.

Muslims immigrants have brought slaves to America. When Islamists took over Egypt, one of their political projects was undoing the ban on slavery. "It's not possible to say that slavery is inherently absolutely categorically immoral in all times and places since it was allowed by the Quran and the Prophet," Professor Jonathan Brown, an Islamic Civilization professor, at Georgetown, insisted.

Brown is an Islamic convert. The Washington Post, and the rest of the left, came to his defense.

The left spends a great deal of time lecturing Americans on the evils of slavery. But it is they and their allies, from Cuba to Libya, who practice slavery today.

The slave auction is ancient history in America. But Obamaâ s Islamist alliance brought it back to Africa.

HOW THE WHITE HOUSE AND SENATORS HIDE THEIR POLITICAL BRIBES

Plaintiff and his peers have charged that â Trillions of dollarsâ were transacted in the crimes, by public officials and the political financier/beneficiaries of those officials, that Plaintiff and his peers reported to regulatory and law enforcement entities. While trillions of dollars may be a difficult concept for anyone to comprehend or visualize, it may be even harder for the average person to understand how one would hide that much money in ill-gotten gains. Thanks to recent massive document leaks and insider whistle-blower disclosures, those criminal methods and routes, employed by government officials and their political financier/beneficiaries, have now been exposed.

The Court will have heard of some of these leaks, such as: The Sony Pictures hacks; The John Podesta Emails; The John Doerr Documents; The Swiss Leaks; The Panama Papers; The Barclays Bank Tax Avoidance Papers; The ProPublica Elitist Tax Records Files; The Bilderberg Group Meeting Reports; The State Department Diplomatic Cables Releases; The Snowden Leaks; The Hacking Team Spy Files; The Stratfor Global Intelligence Files; The Ronan Farrow Black Cube Files; The Hunter Biden Emails; The Australian Bribery Case Suppression Orders; The CIA Vault 7 and 8 Tools Leaks; The Bank of America Files; Google's Banking and Political Finance Records; The FINCEN files and thousands more...

When a federal official and their political financier/beneficiaries are planning to profit from a criminal enterprise, one of the most important things to have in place is a way of laundering the money.

Laundering money is the process of taking dirty money - the proceeds of crimes such as drug dealing or corruption - and getting it into an account at a respected bank where it will not be linked with the crime.

The same process is needed if you are a Russian oligarch whom Western countries have taken sanctions against to stop you getting your money into the West.

Banks are supposed to make sure they don't help clients to launder money or move it around in ways that break the rules.

By law, they have to know who their clients are - it's not enough to file SARs and keep taking dirty money from clients while expecting the authorities to deal with the problem. If they have evidence of criminal activity they should stop moving the cash.

Fergus Shiel from the International Consortium of Investigative Journalists (ICIJ) said the leaked files were an "insight into what banks know about the vast flows of dirty money across the globe".

He said the documents also highlighted the extraordinarily large amounts of money involved. The documents in the FinCEN files cover about $2tn of transactions and they are only a tiny proportion of the SARs submitted over the period.

What has been revealed?

HSBC allowed fraudsters to move millions of dollars of stolen money around the world, even after it learned from US investigators the scheme was a scam.

JP Morgan allowed a company to move more than $1bn through a London account without knowing who owned it. The bank later discovered the company might be owned by a mobster on the FBI's 10 Most Wanted list.

Evidence that one of Russian President Vladimir Putin's closest associates used Barclays bank in London to avoid sanctions which were meant to stop him using financial services in the West. Some of the cash was used to buy works of art.

The husband of a woman who has donated Â£1.7m to the UK's governing Conservative Party's was secretly funded by a Russian oligarch with close ties to President Putin.

The UK is called a "higher risk jurisdiction" and compared to Cyprus, by the intelligence division of FinCEN. That's because of the number of UK registered companies that appear in the SARs. Over 3,000 UK companies are named in the FinCEN files - more than any other country.

Chelsea owner Roman Abramovich once held secret investments in footballers not owned by his club through an offshore company.

The United Arab Emirates' central bank failed to act on warnings about a local firm which was helping Iran evade sanctions.

Deutsche Bank moved money launderers' dirty money for organised crime, terrorists and drug traffickers. More details (BuzzFeed News)

Standard Chartered moved cash for Arab Bank for more than a decade after clients' accounts at the Jordanian bank had been used in funding terrorism.

There have been a number of big leaks of financial information in recent years, including:

2017 Paradise Papers - A huge batch of leaked documents from an offshore legal service provider Appleby and corporate services provider Eстера. The two operated together under the Appleby name until Eстера became independent in 2016. They revealed the offshore financial dealings of politicians, celebrities and business leaders

2016 Panama Papers - Leaked documents from the law firm Mossack Fonseca showed more about how wealthy people were using offshore tax regimes to their benefit

2015 Swiss Leaks - Documents from HSBC's Swiss private bank showed how it was using the country's banking secrecy laws to help clients avoid paying tax

2014 LuxLeaks contained documents from the accountancy firm PricewaterhouseCoopers showing that big companies were using tax deals in Luxembourg to reduce the amount they were having to pay

The FinCEN papers are different because they are not just documents from one or two companies - they come from a number of banks.

They highlight a range of potentially suspicious activity involving companies and individuals and also raise questions about why the banks which had noticed this activity did not always act on their concerns.

Now, though, a recent leak known as the âCredit Suisseâ leak, ties all of the above leaks and criminals together in one systemized âenterpriseâ .

Switzerland's UBS (UBSG.S) has agreed to buy rival Credit Suisse (CSGN.S) for 3 billion Swiss francs ($3.23 billion) in stock in a shotgun merger engineered by Swiss authorities.

Credit Suisse had embarked on an overhaul to recover from scandals, losses and lawsuits, but its shares slumped last week on fears of contagion from a banking crisis in the United States.

Here are some of the crises the bank has faced in the last few years (in reverse chronological order):

SOLD TO UBS

Authorities spent the weekend racing to rescue Credit Suisse, among the world's largest wealth managers, with UBS eventually agreeing to buy its rival for 3 billion Swiss francs and assume up to 5 billion francs in losses.

SWISS CENTRAL BANK CASH

Credit Suisse in March 2023 had to tap the Swiss central bank for up to $54 billion to shore up liquidity and investor confidence, after its shares hit record lows after a bank collapse in the United States triggered fears of bank runs around the world.

The Zurich-based bank became the first major global bank to be thrown an emergency lifeline since the 2008 financial crisis.

Credit Suisse led a selloff in bank shares in Europe after its largest investor Saudi National Bank (1180.SE) said it could not provide more financial assistance because of regulatory constraints.

'MATERIAL WEAKNESSES'

Credit Suisse's 2022 annual report identified "material weaknesses" in internal controls over financial reporting.

Auditor PricewaterhouseCoopers included in the report an "adverse opinion" on the effectiveness of the bank's internal controls over its reporting but its statements "present fairly, in all material respects" the financial position of the bank in 2020 through 2022.

Swiss regulator FINMA said the bank must have appropriate control processes in place.

BIG LOSSES AND OUTFLOWS

Credit Suisse in February 2023 reported a total net loss of more than 7 billion Swiss francs for 2022, its biggest loss since the 2008 financial crisis and it warned of a "substantial" loss for 2023.

The bank saw an acceleration in withdrawals in the fourth quarter of 2022, with outflows of more than 110 billion Swiss francs, but said the picture had been improving.

COCAINE-RELATED MONEY LAUNDERING

In June, the bank was convicted of failing to prevent money laundering by a Bulgarian cocaine trafficking gang.

The court found deficiencies within Credit Suisse regarding both its management of client relations with the criminal organisation and its monitoring of the implementation of anti-money laundering rules.

Both Credit Suisse and the convicted former employee had denied wrongdoing. Credit Suisse said it would appeal the conviction.

BERMUDA TRIAL

A Bermuda court ruled in March 2022 that former Georgian Prime Minister Bidzina Ivanishvili and his family are due damages of more than half a billion dollars from Credit Suisse's local life insurance arm.

The court said Ivanishvili and his family were due the damages as a result of a long-running fraud committed by a former Credit Suisse adviser, Pascale Lescaudron.

Lescaudron was convicted by a Swiss court in 2018 of having forged the signatures of former clients, including Ivanishvili, over an eight-year period.

Credit Suisse has said it expects the case, which it is appealing, to cost it around $600 million.

'SUISSE SECRETS'

Credit Suisse denied allegations of wrongdoing after dozens of media outlets in February 2022 published results of coordinated, Panama Papers-style investigations into a leak of data on thousands of customer accounts in previous decades.

CHAIRMAN EXIT

Chairman Antonio Horta-Osorio resigned in January 2022 after flouting COVID-19 quarantine rules.

Less than a year earlier, Horta-Osorio was brought in to clean up the bank's corporate culture marred by its involvement with collapsed investment firm Archegos and insolvent supply-chain finance firm Greensill Capital.

ARCHEGOS DEFAULT

Credit Suisse lost $5.5 billion when U.S. family office Archegos Capital Management defaulted in March 2021.

The hedge fund's highly leveraged bets on certain technology stocks backfired and the value of its portfolio with Credit Suisse plummeted.

An independent report into the incident criticised the bank's conduct, saying its losses were the result of a fundamental failure of management and control at its investment bank, and its prime brokerage division in particular.

GREENSILL FUNDS COLLAPSE

Credit Suisse was forced to freeze $10 billion of supply chain finance funds in March 2021 when British financier Greensill Capital collapsed after losing insurance cover for debt issued against its loans to companies.

Swiss regulators have rebuked Credit Suisse for "serious" failings in its handling of the multi-billion dollar business with Greensill.

SHAREHOLDER ANGER

Credit Suisse shareholders rejected a proposal from the bank's board to discharge management from other liabilities for 2020, highlighting investor anger at the bank's costly missteps.

SPYING SCANDAL

Credit Suisse CEO Tidjane Thiam was forced to quit in March 2020 after an investigation found the bank hired private detectives to spy on its former head of wealth management Iqbal Kahn after he left for arch rival UBS (UBSG.S).

Switzerland's financial regulator said Credit Suisse had misled it about the scale of the spying. The regulator said the bank planned seven different spying operations between 2016 and 2019 and carried out most of them.

SILICON VALLEY BANK COLLAPSE

The majority of the political financier/beneficiaries that paid for, and ordered the White House officials, Congressional officials and federal agency officials to do their corrupt bidding, banked at Silicon Valley Bank and with Credit Suisse and were advised by Goldman Sachs, SVB and JP Morgan corrupt insiders on how to hide their ill gotten gains through these tentacular banking rouses.

WASHINGTON â In the $600 billion annual Defense Department budgets, the $22 million spent on the Advanced Aerospace Threat Identification Program was almost impossible to find.

Which was how the Pentagon wanted it.

For years, the program investigated reports of unidentified flying objects, according to Defense Department officials, interviews with program participants and records obtained by The New York Times. It was run by a military intelligence official, Luis Elizondo, on the fifth floor of the Pentagonâ s C Ring, deep within the buildingâ s maze.

The Defense Department has never before acknowledged the existence of the program, which it says it shut down in 2012. But its backers say that, while the Pentagon ended funding for the effort at that time, the program remains in existence. For the past five years, they say, officials with the program have continued to investigate episodes brought to them by service members, while also carrying out their other Defense Department duties.

The shadowy program â parts of it remain classified â began in 2007, and initially it was largely funded at the request of Harry Reid, the Nevada Democrat who was the Senate majority leader at the time and who has long had an interest in space phenomena. Most of the money went to an aerospace research company run by a billionaire entrepreneur and longtime friend of Mr. Reidâ s, Robert Bigelow, who is currently working with NASA to produce expandable craft for humans to use in space.

On CBS's 60 Minutes in May, Mr. Bigelow said he was absolutely convinced that aliens exist and that U.F.O.s have visited Earth.

Working with Mr. Bigelow's Las Vegas-based company, the program produced documents that describe sightings of aircraft that seemed to move at very high velocities with no visible signs of propulsion, or that hovered with no apparent means of lift.

Officials with the program have also studied videos of encounters between unknown objects and American military aircraft — including one released in August of a whitish oval object, about the size of a commercial plane, chased by two Navy F/A-18F fighter jets from the aircraft carrier Nimitz off the coast of San Diego in 2004.

Mr. Reid, who retired from Congress this year, said he was proud of the program. “I’m not embarrassed or ashamed or sorry I got this thing going,” Mr. Reid said in a recent interview in Nevada. “I think it’s one of the good things I did in my congressional service. I’ve done something that no one has done before.”

Two other former senators and top members of a defense spending subcommittee — Ted Stevens, an Alaska Republican, and Daniel K. Inouye, a Hawaii Democrat — also supported the program. Mr. Stevens died in 2010, and Mr. Inouye in 2012.

While not addressing the merits of the program, Sara Seager, an astrophysicist at M.I.T., cautioned that not knowing the origin of an object does not mean that it is from another planet or galaxy. “When people claim to observe truly unusual phenomena, sometimes it’s worth investigating seriously,” she said. But, she added, “what people sometimes don’t get about science is that we often have phenomena that remain unexplained.”

James E. Oberg, a former NASA space shuttle engineer and the author of 10 books on spaceflight who often debunks U.F.O. sightings, was also doubtful. “There are plenty of prosaic events and human perceptual traits that can account for these stories,” Mr. Oberg said. “Lots of people are active in the air and don’t want others to know about it. They are happy to lurk unrecognized in the noise, or even to stir it up as camouflage.”

Still, Mr. Oberg said he welcomed research. “There could well be a pearl there,” he said.

In response to questions from The Times, Pentagon officials this month acknowledged the existence of the program, which began as part of the Defense Intelligence Agency. Officials insisted that the effort had ended after five years, in 2012.

“It was determined that there were other, higher priority issues that merited funding, and it was in the best interest of the DoD to make a change,” a Pentagon spokesman, Thomas Crosson, said in an email, referring to the Department of Defense.

But Mr. Elizondo said the only thing that had ended was the effort’s government funding, which dried up in 2012. From then on, Mr. Elizondo said in an interview, he worked with officials from the Navy and the C.I.A. He continued to work out of his Pentagon office until this past October, when he resigned to protest what he characterized as excessive secrecy and internal opposition.

“Why aren’t we spending more time and effort on this issue?” Mr. Elizondo wrote in a resignation letter to Defense Secretary Jim Mattis.

Mr. Elizondo said that the effort continued and that he had a successor, whom he declined to name.

U.F.O.s have been repeatedly investigated over the decades in the United States, including by the American military. In 1947, the Air Force began a series of studies that investigated more than 12,000 claimed U.F.O. sightings before it was officially ended in 1969. The project, which included a study code-named Project Blue Book, started in 1952, concluded that most sightings involved stars, clouds, conventional aircraft or spy planes, although 701 remained unexplained.

Robert C. Seamans Jr., the secretary of the Air Force at the time, said in a memorandum announcing the end of Project Blue Book that it “no longer can be justified either on the ground of national security or in the interest of science.”

Mr. Reid said his interest in U.F.O.s came from Mr. Bigelow. In 2007, Mr. Reid said in the interview, Mr. Bigelow told him that an official with the Defense Intelligence Agency had approached him wanting to visit Mr. Bigelow’s ranch in Utah, where he conducted research.

Mr. Reid said he met with agency officials shortly after his meeting with Mr. Bigelow and learned that they wanted to start a research program on U.F.O.s. Mr. Reid then summoned Mr. Stevens and Mr. Inouye to a secure room in the Capitol.

“I had talked to John Glenn a number of years before,” Mr. Reid said, referring to the astronaut and former senator from Ohio, who died in 2016. Mr. Glenn, Mr. Reid said, had told him he thought that the federal government should be looking seriously into U.F.O.s, and should be talking to military service members, particularly pilots, who had reported seeing aircraft they could not identify or explain.

The sightings were not often reported up the military's chain of command, Mr. Reid said, because service members were afraid they would be laughed at or stigmatized.

The meeting with Mr. Stevens and Mr. Inouye, Mr. Reid said, "was one of the easiest meetings I ever had."

He added, "Ted Stevens said, 'I've been waiting to do this since I was in the Air Force.'" (The Alaska senator had been a pilot in the Army's air force, flying transport missions over China during World War II.)

During the meeting, Mr. Reid said, Mr. Stevens recounted being tailed by a strange aircraft with no known origin, which he said had followed his plane for miles.

None of the three senators wanted a public debate on the Senate floor about the funding for the program, Mr. Reid said. "This was so-called black money," he said. "Stevens knows about it, Inouye knows about it. But that was it, and that's how we wanted it." Mr. Reid was referring to the Pentagon budget for classified programs.

Robert Bigelow, a billionaire entrepreneur and longtime friend of Mr. Reid, received most of the money allocated for the Pentagon program. Contracts obtained by The Times show a congressional appropriation of just under $22 million beginning in late 2008 through 2011. The money was used for management of the program, research and assessments of the threat posed by the objects.

The funding went to Mr. Bigelow's company, Bigelow Aerospace, which hired subcontractors and solicited research for the program.

Under Mr. Bigelow's direction, the company modified buildings in Las Vegas for the storage of metal alloys and other materials that Mr. Elizondo and program contractors said had been recovered from unidentified aerial phenomena. Researchers also studied people who said they had experienced physical effects from encounters with the objects and examined them for any physiological changes. In addition, researchers spoke to military service members who had reported sightings of strange aircraft.

"We're sort of in the position of what would happen if you gave Leonardo da Vinci a garage-door opener," said Harold E. Puthoff, an engineer who has conducted research on extrasensory perception for the C.I.A. and later worked as a contractor for the program. "First of all, he'd try to figure out what is this plastic stuff. He wouldn't know anything about the electromagnetic signals involved or its function."

The program collected video and audio recordings of reported U.F.O. incidents, including footage from a Navy F/A-18 Super Hornet showing an aircraft surrounded by some kind of glowing aura traveling at high speed and rotating as it moves. The Navy pilots can be heard trying to understand what they are seeing. "There's a whole fleet of them," one exclaims. Defense officials declined to release the location and date of the incident.

â International, we are the most backward country in the world on this issue,â Mr. Bigelow said in an interview. â Our scientists are scared of being ostracized, and our media is scared of the stigma. China and Russia are much more open and work on this with huge organizations within their countries. Smaller countries like Belgium, France, England and South American countries like Chile are more open, too. They are proactive and willing to discuss this topic, rather than being held back by a juvenile taboo.â

By 2009, Mr. Reid decided that the program had made such extraordinary discoveries that he argued for heightened security to protect it. â Much progress has been made with the identification of several highly sensitive, unconventional aerospace-related findings,â Mr. Reid said in a letter to William Lynn III, a deputy defense secretary at the time, requesting that it be designated a â restricted special access programâ limited to a few listed officials.

A 2009 Pentagon briefing summary of the program prepared by its director at the time asserted that â what was considered science fiction is now science fact,â and that the United States was incapable of defending itself against some of the technologies discovered. Mr. Reidâ s request for the special designation was denied.

Mr. Elizondo, in his resignation letter of Oct. 4, said there was a need for more serious attention to â the many accounts from the Navy and other services of unusual aerial systems interfering with military weapon platforms and displaying beyond-next-generation capabilities.â He expressed his frustration with the limitations placed on the program, telling Mr. Mattis that â there remains a vital need to ascertain capability and intent of these phenomena for the benefit of the armed forces and the nation.â

Mr. Elizondo has now joined Mr. Puthoff and another former Defense Department official, Christopher K. Mellon, who was a deputy assistant secretary of defense for intelligence, in a new commercial venture called To the Stars Academy of Arts and Science. They are speaking publicly about their efforts as their venture aims to raise money for research into U.F.O.s.

In the interview, Mr. Elizondo said he and his government colleagues had determined that the phenomena they had studied did not seem to originate from any country. â That fact is not something any government or institution should classify in order to keep secret from the people,â he said.

For his part, Mr. Reid said he did not know where the objects had come from. â If anyone says they have the answers now, theyâ re fooling themselves,â he said. â We do not know.â

But, he said, â we have to start someplace.â

Harvard Analyst Accuses The Clintons of 'Largest Charity Fraud in History'

Share | Print This

Source: neon nettle

An investigation into The Clinton Foundation by a financial analyst from Harvard University has revealed fraud on a "monumental scale", according to reports. Charles Ortel claims to have evidence that Bill and Hillary Clinton have committed the largest case of charity fraud in American history.

Ortel, one of the world's leading financial experts, claims that the Clintons are also part of a global fraud networks that have acquired billions in fraudulent profits.

Wall St On Parade reports: In a 9-page letter dated yesterday and posted on his blog, Ortel calls the Clintons's charity the "largest unprosecuted charity fraud ever attempted," adding for good measure that the Clinton Foundation is part of an "international charity fraud network whose entire cumulative scale (counting inflows and outflows) approaches and may even exceed $100 billion, measured from 1997 forward."

Ortel lists 40 potential areas of fraud or wrongdoing that he plans to expose.

Like Markopolos, Ortel has an impressive resume. Ortel's LinkedIn profile shows that he received his B.A. from Yale and an MBA from Harvard Business School.

He previously worked as a Managing Director at investment bank Dillon Read and later as a Managing Director at the financial research firm, Newport Value Partners.

In more recent years, Ortel has been a contributor to a number of news outlets including the Washington Times and TheStreet.com.

The charges being made by Ortel are difficult to dismiss as a flight of fancy because mainstream media has tinkered around the edges of precisely what Ortel is now calling out in copious detail.

In a 2013 New York Times article, Unease at Clinton Foundation Over Finances and Ambitions, reporters Nicholas Confessore and Amy Chozick hint that Hillary Clinton's political operatives are occupying offices at the Clinton Foundation headquarters, writing that they "will work on organizing Mrs. Clinton's packed schedule of paid speeches to trade groups and awards ceremonies and assist in the research and writing of Mrs. Clinton's memoir about her time at the State Department, to be published by Simon & Schuster next summer."

A June 2015 article in the Wall Street Journal by Kimberley Strassel stopped hinting and spelled it out boldly, calling the Clinton Foundation a "Hillary superPac that throws in the occasional good deed." Strassel explained:

â The mediaâ s focus is on Hillary Clintonâ s time as secretary of state, and whether she took official actions to benefit her familyâ s global charity. But the mistake is starting from the premise that the Clinton Foundation is a â charity.â Whatâ s clear by now is that this family enterprise was set up as a global shakedown operation, designed to finance and nurture the Clintonsâ continued political ambitions. Itâ s a Hillary super PAC that throws in the occasional good deed.â

Strassel goes on to provide the specific names of staffers who are deeply conflicted in their political work for Hillary Clintonâ s ambitions and their ties to the charity.

An article by James Grimaldi in the Wall Street Journal on May 12 of last year charges that a â $2 million commitment arranged by the nonprofit Clinton Global Initiative in 2010 went to a for-profit company part-owned by friends of the Clintons.â The Clinton Global Initiative is a program associated with the Clinton Foundation.

One notable thing that Charles Ortel is pounding away at is, why, with all of these media red flags for years, the Clintons have been allowed by state charity regulators in multiple states in which they solicit donations as well as their Federal regulator, the IRS, to continue business as usual.

Are we looking at the Madoff-effect where regulators are afraid to take on powerful figures?

We think thatâ s a very good question to which the American public deserves a credible answer.

Former Asst. FBI Director: Clinton Crimes 20 Times Bigger than Watergate

By Debra Heine 2017-11-09T17:35:40

chat comments

Former Assistant FBI Director James Kallstrom unloaded on James Comey, Robert Mueller, Hillary Clinton, and Barack Obama Thursday, charging that major crimes "20 times bigger than Watergate" are being swept under the rug while Attorney General Jeff Sessions "is in a coma."

Appearing on Fox News' Varney & Co., Kallstrom told the host that it "was obvious to anybody that knows anything" that former President Barack Obama was not going to let James Comey indict Clinton.

"It turns out -- unfortunately -- he was a political hack," Kallstrom said flatly. "I think he maybe started out in an honorable way. His opinion of himself is sky high -- just an unbelievable guy with just an arrogance about himâ l. It got him in trouble because I think he thought he was Superman and he found out that he wasnâ t."

Kallstrom blamed the Clintons for Comey's descent into hackery.

"The dogs are always going to bite your heels when youâ re dealing with the Clintons," he explained. "Look how long the public, the American people have been dealing with the crime syndicate known as the Clinton Foundationâ l just look at what's in the public domain. The Clintons have been taking advantage of their stations in life for so long."

"Back in '95, '96 -- somewhere around there -- Bill Clinton let our guidance technology for our ICBM missiles go to China. Things like this that are very devastating," he pointed out.

And then a few years down the road, "we sell 20 percent of our uranium," Kalstrom added, referencing the corrupt Uranium One deal that routed millions of Russian dollars to the Clinton Foundation during the time Secretary of State Hillary Clinton served on the federal government's Committee on Foreign Investment.

Kallstrom also questioned why Deputy Attorney General Rod Rosenstein was appointed to his position.

"What does he do as soon as he gets in there? He appoints a special counsel. Who is it? It's Bob Mueller. Roll the tape backwards. Bob Mueller is the FBI director, Rosenstein is the U.S. attorney in Baltimore prosecuting people involved in this case."

Kallstrom charged that Rosenstein was basically put in place at the DOJ by the Democrats, complaining that Sessions was forced to recuse himself while "this huge forest fire is burning up his real estate."

"You don't have to put your brother in there like Kennedy did," he noted. "But put somebody in there that agrees with the policies you're trying to put together. Then Rosenstein throws this hand grenade at you by naming this counsel -- which is B.S. -- and putting Mueller, who has a conflict of interest 20 miles wide, in on the job."

He added, "I don't know if it's a conspiracy, but it sure smells like one."

Swamp Drainage: Podesta Group Set To Shut Down Amid Mueller Investigation

by Joshua Caplan

The Podesta Group, one of Washington, D.C.'s largest lobbying firms, is set to shut down amid Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation. Employees of the Podesta Group may cease being paid by the end of November.

The Hill reports:

Kimberley Fritts, the Podesta Group's chief executive, told employees on Thursday that the firm would not exist at the end of the year and that they would likely not be paid through the end of November, sources told CNN.

Fritts announced her resignation from the top Washington lobbying group after Podesta left the company amid ties to indictments filed in the Russia investigation.

The Podesta Group was hired along with another firm to do work for former Trump campaign chairman Paul Manafort and his business partner Richard Gates, who are facing charges of covering up years of work for a pro-Russia Ukrainian political party and laundering their profits to avoid U.S. detection.

Just days after Podesta Group founder Tony Podesta resigned, its CEO Kimberley Fritts is leaving to launch her own firm.

POLITICO reports:

Tony Podesta, the firm's founder, tapped Fritts as his successor when he announced he'd step down as chairman last week, hours after an indictment was unsealed, charging Paul Manafort and his deputy, Rick Gates, with violating foreign lobbying law. The indictment accused Manafort of hiring the Podesta Group to lobby for an ostensibly independent nonprofit that was under the ultimate direction of the Ukrainian president, his party and the Ukrainian government.

Fritts had been expected to relaunch the Podesta Group under a new name in the days after Podesta stepped down. But after more than a week of working to hammer out the details of what the new firm would look like, Fritts announced at a staff meeting late this afternoon, that she would resign and start a new firm, exacerbating questions about the future of the Podesta Group and its dozens of employees.

"Tony Podesta's name had become a scarlet letter," one Podesta Group employee told POLITICO, adding "I expect a lot of the top talent will go with her."

As The Gateway Pundit previously reported, Tony Podesta, the founder of D.C. lobbying firm the Podesta Group stepped down from the company amid Robert Mueller's probe. Podesta made the announcement at a company-wide meeting two weeks ago.

POLITICO reports:

Podesta is handing over full operational and financial control to longtime firm CEO Kimberley Fritts, according to multiple sources with knowledge of the meeting. Fritts and a senior group of the Podesta team will be launching a new firm in the next one or two days. Sources said the transition has been in the works for the past several months.

"[Tony] was very magnanimous and said, 'This is an amazing group of people,'" a source said of Podesta's remarks. Podesta also told staff he "doesn't intend to go quietly, or learn how to play golf." He said he "needs to fight this as an individual, but doesn't want the firm to fight it."

The Podesta Group was subpoenaed in late August along with four other public relations firms who worked with former Trump campaign manager Paul Manafort during a 2012-2014 lobbying effort for a pro-Ukraine think tank — the European Centre for a Modern Ukraine (ECMU) — tied to former Ukrainian president Viktor Yanukovich.

Two of the subpoenaed firms include Paul Manafort's Mercury, LLC and the Podesta Group, founded by John and Tony Podesta and operated by the latter.

As the author of this blog post, I place it into the public domain. Anyone may freely copy it in any part or in its entirety, without asking my permission, and without paying any money. I do ask you please cite a link to <https://danfromsquirrelhill.wordpress.com/2013/08/15/obama-252/>

I ask you to please show this list to as many people as possible and especially, to please show it to as many Obama supporters as possible. Sunshine really is the best disinfectant. I can't stop Obama from doing any of these horrible things, but I can tell people about what he is doing. So please share this list with others on Facebook, Twitter, etc. Thank you. The short link for this is <http://tinyurl.com/ku9vxug>

Every President, every politician, and every human being tells lies and engages in acts of hypocrisy. But Barack Obama does these things to a far greater degree than anyone else that I have ever known of. His campaign promises were so much better sounding than anyone else's no lobbyists in his administration, waiting five days before signing all non-emergency bills so people would have time to read them, putting health care negotiations on C-SPAN, reading every bill line by line to make sure money isn't being wasted, prosecution of Wall St. criminals, ending raids against medical marijuana in states where it's legal, high levels of transparency. Obama's promises of these wonderful things sounded inspiring and sincere. They sounded so much better than the promises of any other President. So when Obama broke these promises, it felt so much worse than when other Presidents broke their promises.

In the 2008 United States election, I wrote in Ron Paul for President. In the 2012 election, I voted for Libertarian Party candidate Gary Johnson. Those who are of a more leftist persuasion than myself might want to consider voting for the Green Party in future elections.

Some of the things on this list are major events that should scare the daylights out of any true liberal who cares about civil liberties.

Other things on this list are medium things that some Obama supporters may dislike, but would be willing to overlook in light of the things that Obama has done which they like.

And some of the things on this list may seem trivial, but I still think they are an interesting reflection of the kinds of policies that Obama supports.

Every claim that I make in this list is sourced. Click on the underlined text to see the sources. I have cited a wide variety of sources, from right wing, to left wing, to middle of the road.

I welcome any comments and criticisms that you may have. If you say my list is wrong, please back up your claim by citing specific examples.

And now, on with the list:

1) Carried out military interventionism in Libya without Congressional approval

In June 2011, U.S. Congressman Dennis Kucinich (D-Ohio) said that Obama had violated the Constitution when he launched military operations in Libya without Congressional approval.

In April 2014, Ralph Nader said that Obama should be impeached for his actions in Libya.

2) Gave a no-bid contract to Halliburton cronies â just like Bush did

In May 2010, it was reported that the Obama administration had selected KBR, a former subsidiary of Halliburton, for a no-bid contract worth as much as $568 million through 2011, just hours after the Justice Department had said it would pursue a lawsuit accusing the Houston-based company of using kickbacks to get foreign contracts.

Donât be fooled by the words â former subsidiary.â These are the same Halliburton cronies that Bush gave a no-bid contract to.

3) Has an administration full of lobbyists, after promising he wouldnât have any

On November 15, 2007, in Las Vegas, Nevada, Obama said that lobbyists

â I will not work in my White House.â

However, by February 2010, he had more than 40 lobbyists working in his administration. A list of them can be seen here.

4) Had close ties to Wall St., but pretended to support Occupy Wall St.

Although Obama claimed to support the Occupy Wall St. movement, the truth is that as of 2011, he had raised more money from Wall St. than any other candidate during the previous 20 years. In early 2012, Obama held a fundraiser where Wall St. investment bankers and hedge fund managers each paid \$35,800 to attend. In October 2011, Obama hired Broderick Johnson, a longtime Wall Street lobbyist, to be his new senior campaign adviser. Johnson had worked as a lobbyist for JP Morgan Chase, Bank of America, Fannie Mae, Comcast, Microsoft, and the oil industry.

5) Broke his promise to close Guantanamo Bay

Obamaâs campaign made the following promise:

â As president, Barack Obama will close the detention facility at Guantanamo.â

PolitiFact rated this as

â promise brokenâ

In July 2012, ABC News reported that this â might be President Obamaâs biggest broken promiseâ

I have gotten more criticism for this particular item than for any other item on my list. People have said that Obama â triedâ to close Guantanamo Bay, but was blocked by Republicans in the House and Senate. However, Obama did not promise that he would â tryâ to close it. He promised that he would â closeâ it. Furthermore, there were enough Democrats in the House and Senate to pass Obamacare without any Republicans voting for it, so if you want to blame someone in the House and Senate for failing to close Guantanamo Bay, then I suggest that you blame the Democrats.

6) Supported the $700 billion TARP corporate-welfare bailout just like Bush

While Senator, Obama voted for the $700 billion TARP bank bailout bill. The bailout rewarded irresponsible and illegal behavior. It redirected resources from more productive uses to less productive uses. It punished the hard working taxpayers who had played by the rules and obeyed the law. It created horrible incentives, and sent the wrong message. The bailout was evil because it rewarded the bad people and punished the good people. No society that does this can expect to remain free or prosperous. Instead of bailing out these corrupt corporations, we should have let them cease to exist, like we did with Enron.

7) Waged the biggest war against medical marijuana of any president, which was the opposite of what he had promised

In May 2008, Obama campaign spokesperson Ben LaBolt said that Obama would end DEA raids on medical marijuana in states where itâs legal. Also in 2008, Obama said that he supported the â basic concept of using medical marijuana for the same purposes and with the same controls as other drugsâ and that he was â not going to be using Justice Department resources to try to circumvent state laws.â

However, in February 2010, DEA agents raided a medical marijuana grower in Highlands Ranch in Colorado, a state where medical marijuana is legal. Also in February 2010, DEA agents raided a medical marijuana dispensary in Culver City in California, a state where medical marijuana is legal. In July 2010, the DEA raided at least four medical marijuana growers in San Diego, California. Also in July 2010, the DEA raided a medical marijuana facility in Covelo, California. Then in September 2010, the DEA conducted raids on at least five medical marijuana dispensaries in Las Vegas, Nevada, where medical marijuana is legal. In 2011, the DEA conducted raids on medical marijuana in Seattle, Washington, West Hollywood, California, and Helena, Montana, all places where it is legal. In April 2012, the DEA carried out several raids on medical marijuana in Oakland, California.

In February 2012, Rolling Stone magazine wrote that Obamaâs war against medical marijuana went â far beyond anything undertaken by George W. Bush.â In April 2012, Mother Jones magazine wrote: â The president campaigned on the promise that heâd stop federal raids on medical marijuana operations that were in compliance with state laws, a vow that Attorney General Eric Holder repeated after the election. But then the Obama administration raided more than 100 dispensaries in its first three years and is now poised to outpace the Bush administrationâs crackdown record.â In May 2012, the Washington Post wrote: â Obama has become more hostile to medical marijuana patients than any president in U.S. history.â In May 2012, U.S. Congressperson Nancy Pelosi (D-California) said she had â strong concernsâ about Obamaâs forced closure of five medical marijuana facilities in Pelosiâs congressional district. In April 2012, commenting on Obamaâs crackdown on medical marijuana, U.S. Congressman Barney Frank (D-Massachusetts) said, â Iâm very disappointedâ ! They look more like the Bush administration than the Clinton administration.â marijuana dispensary in Oakland, CA, which claims to be the world's largest, and which claims to serve more than 100,000 medical marijuana patients. In April 2012, federal agents raided Oaksterdam University, an educational institution in Oakland, CA, which teaches people about medical marijuana. In April 2012, federal agents raided a medical marijuana facility which had been serving 1,500 patients near Lake Elsinore, CA. In June 2012, the Obama administration filed asset-forfeiture lawsuits against two landlords who rented their buildings to medical marijuana stores in Santa Fe Springs, CA. The Obama administration also sent warning letters which threatened similar legal action to dozens of other, nearby landlords. During the first seven months of 2012, the DEA shut down 40 medical marijuana dispensaries in Colorado, all of which had been operating in compliance with state and local law.

In July 2012, federal prosecutors filed civil forfeiture actions against Harborside Health Center, a medical

In April 2013, the DEA raided four medical marijuana dispensaries in Los Angeles, California. Also in April 2013, the DEA raided a medical marijuana dispensary in San Diego, California. In July 2013, the DEA conducted multiple medical marijuana raids in Washington state, including the cities of Olympia, Tacoma, and Seattle. In August 2013, the DEA raided People's Choice Alternative Medicine, a medical marijuana facility in Ann Arbor, Michigan. In October 2013, the DEA raided 28 medical marijuana facilities in Michigan. In November 2013, the DEA raided 12 medical marijuana facilities in Denver, Colorado.

In April 2014, the DEA raided four medical marijuana dispensaries in Denver, Colorado. In June 2014, DEA agents visited the homes and offices of doctors in Massachusetts who had written prescriptions for medical marijuana, and threatened to confiscate their federal licenses to prescribe certain medications if they did not stop writing prescriptions for medical marijuana. In October 2014, the DEA raided two medical marijuana dispensaries in Los Angeles, California.

In May 2012, ABC News reported that during Obama's youth, he often smoked large quantities of recreational marijuana. Obama's marijuana smoking wasn't even medical - it was recreational. And yet now, he is taking large scale, widespread action to prevent people with AIDS, cancer, multiple sclerosis, glaucoma, and other illnesses, who have prescriptions from their doctors, from using their prescription medicine - how cold hearted can a person be?

8) Nominated a six-time tax cheater to head the government agency that enforces the tax laws

Obama nominated Timothy Geithner, a repeat tax cheater, to head the government agency that enforces the tax laws.

Prior to his nomination, Geithner had:

- 1) Illegally failed to pay more than \$34,000 in social security and medicare taxes
- 2) Illegally declared the cost of his children's summer camp as a form of day care.
- 3) Illegally failed to pay the early withdrawal penalty when he took money out of his retirement plan
- 4) Illegally declared non-eligible items as a charitable deduction
- 5) Illegally declared something which was ineligible as a small business deduction
- 6) Illegally declared utility expenses which had actually been for his personal use
- 9) Gave tax dollars to AIG executives, then pretended to be outraged about it Obama signed a stimulus bill that spent money on bonuses for AIG executives. Prior to signing this bill, Obama had said, "when I'm president, I will go line by line to make sure that we are not spending money unwisely.â However, after reading â line by lineâ and signing the â stimulusâ bill that protected the AIG bonuses, Obama pretended to be shocked and outraged at the bonuses, and said, â Under these circumstances, itâ s hard to understand how derivative traders at A.I.G. warranted any bonuses at all, much less $165 million in extra payâ ! How do they justify this outrage to the taxpayers who are keeping the company afloat?â and also said that he would â pursue every single legal avenue to block these bonuses.â

10) Expanded Bushâ s unconstitutional government faith based programs

Obama expanded the federal governmentâ s faith based programs which had been started by President George W. Bush.

11) Supported Bushâ s unconstitutional Patriot Act

In May 2011, Obama signed a renewal of the Patriot Act.

12) Increased the national debt more in one term than Bush did in two

The national debt increased more during Obamaâ s first three years and two months than it did during all eight years of George W. Bushâ s presidency.

13) Agrees with Bushâ s support of unconstitutional, indefinite detention of U.S. citizens without filing any charges

In December 2011, ACLU executive director Anthony D. Romero criticized Obama for signing a bill that gave the U.S. government the power to indefinitely detain U.S. citizens without any charges being filed or any trial taking place.

14) Agrees with Bushâ s support of unconstitutional, warrantless wiretapping

President Obama has defended warrantless wiretapping.

15) Avoided prosecution of Wall. St criminals

Although Obama had promised to prosecute Wall St. criminals, during his entire first term, his administration did not file any criminal charges against any of the top financial executives.

16) Had four U.S. citizens killed without judicial process

Obama had four U.S. citizens killed without judicial process.

The ACLU accused Obama of violating the U.S. Constitution for doing this.

U.S. Congressman Ron Paul (R-TX) said that Obamaâ s actions might be an impeachable offense.

Ralph Nader wrote that Obama

â has extended the Bush doctrine by declaring his unilateral right, as secret prosecutor, judge, jury, and executioner, to destroy anybody, anywhere in the world, including American citizens, suspected to be engaged in alleged terrorist activities, all this vaguely and loosely defined as anti-U.S. security.â

17) Ordered private company to fire 1,000 employees

In 2011, after Boeing had hired 1,000 new employees to work at its new factory in South Carolina, the Obama administration ordered Boeing to shut down the factory, because the factory was non-union.

18) Stole money from retired teachers and police officers

During the Chrysler bankruptcy, Obama violated the Fifth Amendment and more than 150 years of bankruptcy law by illegally treating secured creditors worse than unsecured creditors. Some of these secured creditors were retired teachers and police officers from Indiana.

Richard A. Epstein, a law professor at New York University School of Law, wrote of this:

â Upsetting this fixed hierarchy among creditors is just an illegal taking of property from one group of creditors for the benefit of another, which should be struck down on both statutory and constitutional grounds.â

Todd Zywicki, Professor of Law at George Mason University School of Law, wrote that Obamaâ s treatment of secured creditors was

â dangerous to the rule of law.â

The Economist wrote that Obamaâ s actions could â establish a terrible precedent. Bankruptcy exists to sort legal claims on assets. If it becomes a tool of social policy, who will then lend to struggling firms in which the government has a political interest?â

Francis Cianfrocca, the CEO of Bayshore Networks, wrote that Obamaâ s actions were â an astonishingly reckless abrogation of contract law that will introduce a new level of uncertainty into business transactions at all levels, and make wealth generation more difficult going forwardâ ! An extraordinary uncertainty has been created when the most powerful man in the world can rewrite contracts and choose winners and losers in private negotiations as he sees fit. Since this is an unquantifiable uncertainty, and not a quantifiable risk, its effect on business and investor confidence will be large and unpredictable. As in the 1930s, a time when government also cavalierly rewrote private contracts, the prudent approach for business will be to invest minimally and wait for another administration.â

19) Supported release of convicted mass murderer

In 2010, Obama supported releasing Lockerbie bomber Abdel Baset al-Megrahi (who had been convicted of murdering 270 people) from prison.

20) Illegally put thousands of guns into hands of criminals

In Operation Fast and Furious, the Obama administration ordered gun storeowners to illegally sell thousands of guns to criminals.

U.S. Border Patrol agent Brian Terry was murdered with one of these guns.

The murderer was sentenced to 30 years in prison, but his accomplices, Eric Holder and Barack Obama, havenâ t even been arrested or charged.

21) Fired Inspector General for discovering that Obamaâ s friend had embezzled government funds

In June 2009, Obama fired Inspector General Gerald Walpin, after Walpin accused Sacramento mayor Kevin Johnson, an Obama supporter, of misuse of AmeriCorps funding to pay for school-board political activities. In a letter to Congress, the White House said that Walpin was fired because he was âconfused, disoriented, unable to answer questions and exhibited other behavior that led the Board to question his capacity to serve.â A bipartisan group of 145 current and former public officials, attorneys, and legal scholars signed a letter that was sent to the White House, which defended Walpin, said the criticisms of him were not true, and said that his firing was politically motivated. The letter can be read here.

22) Lied about putting health care negotiations on C-SPAN

Although Obama had made a campaign promise to have all of the health care reform negotiations broadcast on C-SPAN, he broke that promise after he was elected.

The secrecy of these negotiations was so strong that U.S. Congresswoman and Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi (D-California) said, âWe have to pass the bill so that you can find out what is in it.â

23) Lied about letting people keep their health insurance

Before Obamacare was passed, Obama said:

âNo matter how we reform health care, we will keep this promise to the American peopleâ â If you like your health care plan, youâ ll be able to keep your health care plan, period. No one will take it away, no matter what.â

Also before Obamacare was passed, Obama said:

âHere is a guarantee that Iâ ve made. If you have insurance that you like, then you will be able to keep that insurance.â

However, after Obamacare was passed, the Congressional Budget Office said that the law would cause seven million people to lose their employer provided insurance.

After Obamacare was passed, 1199SEIU United Healthcare Workers East announced that it would drop health insurance for the children of more than 30,000 low-wage home attendants. Mitra Behroozi, executive director of benefit and pension funds for 1199SEIU stated

ââ new federal health-care reform legislation requires plans with dependent coverage to expand that coverage up to age 26â â meeting this new requirement would be financially impossible.â

Also, after Obamacare was passed, the Franciscan University of Steubenville dropped its coverage in response to the law.

Universal Orlando dropped its coverage for part time employees in response to Obamacare.

In addition, after Obamacare was passed, Forbes reported

âThe House Ways and Means Committee has released a new report that sheds light onto how Obamacare incentivizes companies to dump their workers onto the new lawâ s subsidized exchanges.â

Also after Obamacare was passed, MSN reported

âThe Affordable Care Act mandate most commonly known as Obamacare has some tight stipulations that,

CNN says, are forcing health care companies to rip up most of their current plans and draft new ones that comply. According to a University of Chicago study, just about half of the individual health care plans currently on the market won't cut it once key provisions of the Affordable Care Act kick in next year.

Furthermore, it was reported that Obamacare would cause 58,000 Aetna and UnitedHealth Group customers in California to lose their insurance.

In response to Obamacare, some employers have dropped coverage for their employees' spouses. In August 2013, it was reported that UPS had announced that it would be dropping 15,000 spouses of its employees from its health insurance, and that it had cited Obamacare as the reason it was doing this.

The chain of Wegmans supermarkets cancelled the policies of its part time employees in response to Obamacare.

In July 2013, leaders of the Teamsters, UFCW, and UNITE-HERE sent a letter to Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi which said that Obamacare will shatter not only our hard-earned health benefits; these restrictions will make non-profit plans like ours unsustainable; we can no longer stand silent in the face of elements of the Affordable Care Act that will destroy the very health and wellbeing of our members along with millions of other hardworking Americans

In August 2013, it was reported that 106,000 New Jersey citizens would lose their health insurance because of Obamacare.

In September 2013, IBM announced that it would be switching 110,000 of its retirees from their current IBM-provided health insurance to the Obamacare exchanges.

In September 2013, Trader Joe's announced that, in response to Obamacare, it would stop providing insurance to its part time employees.

In October 2013, it was reported that at least 146,000 people in Michigan would be losing their insurance because of Obamacare.

In October 2013, it was reported that Florida Blue would be dropping 300,000 customers because of Obamacare.

In October 2013, it was reported that 491,977 individual insurance plans in California would be canceled because of Obamacare.

In October 2013, it was reported that, in response to Obamacare, Home Depot would stop providing insurance to its part time employees.

In October 2013, it was reported that Obamacare was forcing CareFirst BlueCross BlueShield to cancel the insurance of 76,000 people in Virginia, Maryland, and Washington, D.C., because their policies did not meet the minimum requirements of Obamacare.

In October 2013, it was reported that hundreds of thousands of people in Washington state would be losing their insurance because of Obamacare.

In November 2013, it was reported that nearly 250,000 people in Colorado would lose their insurance because of Obamacare.

In January 2014, it was reported that, in response to Obamacare, Target was planning to stop offering insurance to its part time employees.

24) Lied about the cost of Obamacare

Before Obamacare was passed, Obama promised

â I will not sign a plan that adds one dime to our deficits â either now or in the future. I will not sign it if it adds one dime to the deficit, now or in the future, period. And to prove that Iâ m serious, there will be a provision in this plan that requires us to come forward with more spending cuts if the savings we promised donâ t materialize.â

However, after Obama signed it, the Washington Post reported that it would add more than $340 billion to the budget deficit over the next decade.

In March 2012, the Congressional Budget Office said that over the next decade, Obamacare would cost twice as much as what Obama had promised.

In May 2013, it was reported that Obamacareâ s program for high risk patients was more expensive than what Obama had promised.

25) Gave tax dollars to campaign contributors and lobbyists, and falsely claimed the money was for â green energyâ

In 2009 the Obama administration gave $535 million to Solyndra, claiming that it would create 4,000 new jobs. However, instead of creating those 4,000 new jobs, the company went bankrupt. It was later revealed that the companyâ s shareholders and executives had made substantial donations to Obamaâ s campaign, that the company had spent a large sum of money on lobbying, and that Solyndra executives had had many meetings with White House officials.

It was also revealed that the Obama administration had already been aware of Solyndraâ s financial troubles. For example, according to the companyâ s security filings in 2009, the company had been selling its product for less than the cost of production. In 2010, Obama visited the Solyndra factory and cited it as a role model for his â stimulusâ program, sayingâ Itâ s here that companies like Solyndra are leading the way toward a brighter and more prosperous future.â The Washington Post wrote of this, â Administration officials and outside advisers warned that President Obama should consider dropping plans to visit a solar startup company in 2010 because its mounting financial problems might ultimately embarrass the White House.â Solyndra was a private company, but had been planning to use its government loans as a means of going public â so when Obama knowingly overstated the companyâ s condition in order to help his friends at Solyndra, he broke the same law that Martha Stewart had been sent to prison for breaking.

In September 2011, federal agents visited the homes of Brian Harrison, the companyâ s CEO, and Chris Gronet, the companyâ s founder, to examine computer files and documents. Also in September 2011, the U.S. Treasury Department launched an investigation.

On September 13, 2011, the Washington Post reported on emails which showed that the Obama administration had tried to rush federal reviewers to approve the loan so Vice President Joe Biden could announce it at a September 2009 groundbreaking for the companyâ s factory. The company was a hallmark of President Obamaâ s plan to support clean energy technologies.

The New York Times reported that government auditors and industry analysts had faulted the Obama administration for failing to properly evaluate the company's business proposals, as well as for failing to take note of troubling signs which were already evident. In addition, Frank Rusco, a program director at the Government Accountability Office, had found that the preliminary loan approval had been granted before officials had completed the legally mandated evaluations of the company.

The New York Times quoted Shyam Mehta, a senior analyst at GTM Research, as saying "There was just too much misplaced zeal at the Department of Energy for this company." Among 143 companies that had expressed an interest in getting a loan guarantee, Solyndra was the first one to get approval. During the period when Solyndra's loan guarantee was under review, the company had spent nearly $1.8 million on lobbying. Tim Harris, the CEO of Solopower, a different solar panel company which had obtained a $197 million loan guarantee, told the New York Times that his company had never considered spending any money on lobbying, and that "It was made clear to us early in the process that that was clearly verboten." We were told that it was not only not helpful but it was not acceptable.

The Washington Post reported that Solyndra had used some of the loan money to purchase new equipment which it never used, and then sold that new equipment, still in its plastic wrap, for pennies on the dollar. Former Solyndra engineer Lindsey Eastburn told the Washington Post, "After we got the loan guarantee, they were just spending money left and right." Because we were doing well, nobody cared. Because of that infusion of money, it made people sloppy.

On September 29, 2011, the Washington Post reported that the Obama administration had continued to allow Solyndra to receive taxpayer money even after it had defaulted on its $535 million loan.

On October 7, 2011, The Washington Post reported that newly revealed emails showed that Energy Department officials had been warned that their plan to help Solyndra by restructuring the loan might be illegal, and should be cleared with the Justice Department first. However, Energy Department officials moved ahead with the restructuring anyway, with a new deal that would repay company investors before taxpayers if the company were to default. The emails showed concerns within the Obama administration about the legality of the Energy Department's actions. In addition, an Energy Department "stimulus" adviser, Steve Spinner, had pushed for the loan, despite having recused himself because his wife's law firm had done work for the company.

In January 2012, CBS News reported that Solyndra had thrown millions of dollars worth of brand new glass tubes into garbage dumpsters, where they ended up being shattered. Solyndra told CBS that it had conducted an exhaustive search for buyers of the glass tubes, and that no one had wanted them. However, CBS discovered that Solyndra had not offered the glass tubes for sale at either one of its two asset auctions that took place in 2011. In addition, David Lucky, a buyer and seller of such equipment, told CBS that he would have bought the tubes if he had had a chance to do so. Greg Smestad, a solar scientist who had consulted for the Department of Energy, also agreed that the tubes had value, and had asked Solyndra to donate any unwanted tubes to Santa Clara University. Smestad stated, "That really makes me sad." Those tubes represent intellectual investment. These could have had a better value to do public good. I think they owed the U.S. taxpayer that.

Solyndra was not the only "green energy" company involved in this type of fraud. After Obama gave Raser Technologies $33 million to build a power plant, the company declared bankruptcy, and owed $1.5 million in back taxes. After Obama gave Abound Solar, Inc. a $400 million loan guarantee to build photovoltaic panel factories, the company halted production and laid off 180 employees. After Obama gave Beacon Power a $43 million loan guarantee to build green energy storage, the company filed for bankruptcy. After Obama approved $2.1 billion in loan guarantees for Solar Trust of America so it could build solar power plants, the company filed for bankruptcy.

In April 2012, CBS News reported that Solyndra had left a substantial amount of toxic waste at its abandoned facility in Milpitas, California. In May 2014, it was reported that the building in Longmont, Colorado that had been abandoned by Abound Solar in 2012 was still contaminated with cadmium, a toxic metal which can cause cancer.

Although Obama stated that all of the “green energy” companies that received taxpayer money were chosen “based solely on their merits,” the truth is that 71% of these grants and loans went to Obama donors and fundraisers, who raised $457,834 for his campaign, and were later approved for grants and loans totaling more than $11 billion. By November 2011, the Energy Department’s inspector general had begun more than 100 criminal investigations related to Obama’s “stimulus.” Although an “independent” review said that Obama had not done anything wrong, it was later reported that Herbert M. Allison Jr., the person who had conducted this “independent” review, donated $52,500 to Obama’s campaign.

26) Had “off the record” meetings with lobbyists

In June 2010, the New York Times reported that Obama administration officials had held hundreds of meetings with lobbyists at coffee houses near the White House, in order to avoid the disclosure requirements for White House visitors, and that these meetings “reveal a disconnect between the Obama administration’s public rhetoric” with Mr. Obama himself frequently thrashing big industries’ “battalions” of lobbyists as enemies of reform “and the administration’s continuing, private dealings with them.”

27) Falsely claimed to believe in public education

Although Obama said, “We need to uphold the ideal of public education,” he expressed his true opinion of America’s public education system by sending his own children to private schools while living in Chicago and Washington D.C.

28) Falsely promised that Obamacare would give people “the same kind of insurance that Senator McCain and I enjoy”

In 2008, Obama said:

“If you don’t have health insurance, you’re going to be able to buy the same kind of insurance that Senator McCain and I enjoy as federal employees.”

However, the New York Times reported:

“No patient gets closer medical attention than the president of the United States. Wherever he goes, a doctor, nurse or paramedic trails a few footsteps behind, ready for any medical need. It is the ultimate in concierge medicine.”

29) Shut down Amish farm

In February 2012, Obama shut down an Amish farm for selling unpasteurized milk across state lines, even though the customers were happy with what they were buying.

30) Rewarded his fundraisers by giving them federal jobs

31) Ignored constitutional requirements for appointees

In February 2009, U.S. Senator Robert Byrd (D-West Virginia) expressed concern that Obama's dozens of czars might violate the U.S. Constitution, because they were not approved by the U.S. Senate. U.S. Senator Russ Feingold (D-Wisconsin) expressed a similar concern in September 2009.

32) Gave tax dollars to corrupt private contractors to build 504 units of mice infested, slum housing, with backed up sewage

In April 2012, the Obama administration proposed new regulations which would prohibit farm children under 18 from working at grain elevators, silos, feed lots, stockyards, and livestock auctions, as well as from storing, marketing and transporting farm product raw materials. Critics claimed that this would prevent children from the common practice of working on their friends' and relatives' farms, and that farm children did not need help from a community organizer in Washington.

39) Auctioned off ambassadorship to the Netherlands

In April 2012, Obama nominated Timothy Broas, who had already bundled more than $500,000 for Obama's 2012 campaign, to be U.S. ambassador to the Netherlands.

40) Claimed that written tests are a form of racial discrimination

The Obama administration accused fire and police departments in Jacksonville, Florida, New York City, and Dayton, Ohio of racial discrimination because they required potential firefighters and police officers to take a written test. Ten real examples of these racist questions from the New York test can be read here.

41) Made the TSA even more abusive and ridiculous than it had been under Bush

The Obama administration gave a very invasive patdown to a three-year-old boy in a wheelchair, which caused the boy to tremble in fear. The Obama administration gave an aggressive patdown to a seven-year-old girl with cerebral palsy. The Obama administration said that a four-year-old girl was a high security threat. The Obama administration placed an 18-month-old girl on its no fly list. The Obama administration gave a patdown to Henry Kissinger. The Obama administration forced a 95-year-old cancer patient to remove her adult diaper and fly without it. The Obama administration ripped open the urostomy bag of a 61-year-old bladder cancer survivor, and forced him to fly covered in his own urine. One of these volunteers, Madeline Frank, age 16, of Charlotte, North Carolina, said of this "I've been looking forward to this for a really long time. There are no readouts from big meetings he has with people from the outside, and many of them arenât even on his schedule. This is different from every president I covered. This White House goes to extreme lengths to keep the press away.â

In July 2009, White House reporter Helen Thomas criticized the Obama administration for its lack of transparency.

In October 2013, ABC News correspondent Ann Compton said that Obama was the â least transparent of the seven presidents Iâve covered in terms of how he does his daily business.â

72) Falsely said he opposed government waste, when he actually loved it

On September 22, 2008, Obama said:

â I am not a Democrat who believes that we can or should defend every government program just because itâ s thereâ † We will fire government managers who arenâ t getting results, we will cut funding for programs that are wasting your money and we will use technology and lessons from the private sector to improve efficiency across every level of governmentâ † The only way we can do all this without leaving our children with an even larger debt is if Washington starts taking responsibility for every dime that it spends.â

However, Citizens Against Government Waste gave Obama a 2007 rating of only 10%, and a lifetime rating of only 18%.

73) Nominated past frequent user of illegal drugs to keep illegal drugs out of schools

78) Holds double standard for people who use crude and vulgar language toward women

79) Illegally gave Obamacare exemptions to unions that supported the passage of Obamacare

Obama gave some organizations an exemption from some of the requirements of Obamacare. Many of these organizations were unions that had supported the passage of Obamacare, but now wanted exemptions from the very same law that they wanted to force everyone else to obey. This reveals an extreme level of hypocrisy among many of the supporters of Obamacare.

In addition, these exemptions are illegal, because the Constitution requires the law to treat everyone the same.

The Washington Times wrote of this:

“ Selective enforcement of the law is the first sign of tyranny. A government empowered to determine arbitrarily who may operate outside the rule of law invariably embraces favoritism as friends, allies and those with the best-funded lobbyists are rewarded. Favoritism inevitably leads to corruption, and corruption invites extortion. Ultimately, the rule of law ceases to exist in any recognizable form, and what is left is tyranny.”

“ The now-familiar monthly trickling down of new waivers is, at best, a tacit admission that Obamacare is a failure. So far, seven entire states and 1,372 businesses, unions and other institutions have received waivers from the law. The list includes the administration’s friends and allies and, of course, those who have the best lobbyists.”

“ More than 50 percent of the Obamacare waiver beneficiaries are union members, which is striking because union members account for less than 12 percent of the American work force. The same unions that provided more than $120 million to Democrats in the last two elections and, in many cases, openly campaigned in favor of the government takeover of your health care, now celebrate that Obamacare is not their problem.”

80) Defended Bush administration’s unconstitutional, unwarranted use of GPS device

In January 2012, when the U.S. Supreme Court ruled against the Bush administration for having put a GPS tracking device on someone’s car without having a warrant, the Obama administration opposed the court ruling

94) Lied about being his brother's keeper

Although Barack Obama likes to cite the Bible phrase â We are our brother's keeper,â when his real life poverty stricken brother George Obama needed $1,000 for health care bills, Barack Obama refused to pay it, so conservative author Dinesh D'Souza paid it.

95) Punishes hospitals for saving the lives of patients with heart disease

Obama's health care reform contains a provision that reduces Medicare payments to hospitals with high 30-day readmission rates. Sunil Kripalani, MD, a professor with Vanderbilt University Medical Center, said of this, â Among patients with heart failure, hospitals that have higher readmission rates actually have lower mortality rates. So, which would we rather have â a hospital readmission or a death?â

98) Practices environmental hypocrisy

In May 2008, Obama said, â We can't drive our SUVs and eat as much as we want and keep our homes on 72 degrees at all times â and then just expect that other countries are going to say OK.â

However, just one week later, Obama was photographed exiting an SUV.

In addition, Obama keeps the White House thermostat turned up so high that David Axelrod, Obama's senior adviser, said, â He likes it warm. You could grow orchids in there.â

Environmentalists criticized Obama for eating Wagyu beef, which was called â the Hummer of beef.â

Obama had a chef fly round trip from St. Louis to Washington D.C. so he could make Obama's favorite pizza.

99) Pressured public schools to replace Catcher in the Rye with a book on window insulation

101) Falsely claimed that his Cash for Clunkers program would help the environment

Although Obama claimed that his Cash for Clunkers program would help the environment, it actually caused net harm to the environment. Because the program required cars to be shredded instead of recycled, it wasted 24 million barrels of oil. Many of the cars that were destroyed were in perfectly good condition. Because the program's minimum requirement for so-called fuel efficiency was only 22 mpg, the reduction in pollution was negligible.

In July 2013, leaders of the Teamsters, UFCW, and UNITE-HERE sent a letter to Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi which said that Obamacare will

Even though there are all these great quotes from inside the White House saying they support free speech. 136) Made it much harder for start ups to raise capital and create jobs

In July 2010, Obama signed the Dodd-Frank Act. The Wall St. Journal wrote of this:

'Senator Chris Dodd's 1,400-page financial reform bill contains many economic land mines, and here's one of the worst: Provisions that would make it harder for business start-ups to raise seed capital.'

'Currently, wealthy individuals who want to invest directly in a new business can do so with minimum interference from regulators. The law requires only that the investor be 'accredited' by meeting thresholds for net worth ($1 million) or income ($250,000). Entrepreneurs depend on these 'angel' investors, since many new businesses lack the collateral for bank loans and are too small to interest venture capitalists. â â Amazon, Yahoo, Google and Facebook all benefited from angel investors, who typically target companies under five years old. According to a 2009 Kaufman Foundation study, such firms are less than 1% of all companies yet generate about 10% of new jobs. Between 1980 and 2005, companies less than five years old accounted for all net job growth in the U.S. In 2008, angels invested some $19 billion in more than 55,000 companies. â â Mr. Doddâ s bill would change all this for the worse. Most preposterously, it would require that start-ups seeking angel investments file with the Securities and Exchange Commission and endure a 120-day review. Rare is the new company that doesnâ t need immediate access to the capital it raises, and a four-month delay is the kind of rule popular in banana republics that create few new businesses. â â The Dodd bill also raises the net worth and income thresholds to $2.3 million and $450,000, respectively. The Angel Capital Association, a trade group, estimates that these provisions would disqualify about 77% of current accredited investors.â

137) Paid six figure salaries to federal employees so they could watch pornography all day long

In April 2010, ABC News reported:

â On a day when President Obama argued for more government regulation over the financial industry, a new government report reveals that some high-level regulators have spent more time looking at porn than policing Wall Street. â â The Securities and Exchange Commission is supposed to be the sheriff of the financial industry, looking for financial crimes like Bernard Madoffâ s Ponzi scheme. But the new report, obtained by ABC News, says senior employees of the SEC spent hours on the commissionâ s computers looking at sites like naughty.com, skankwire, youporn, and others. â â The investigation, which was conducted by the SECâ s internal watchdog at the request of Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, found 31 serious offenders over the past two and a half years. Seventeen of the offenders were senior SEC officers with salaries ranging from $100,000 to $222,000 per year. â

â Eight Hours a Day Spent on Porn Sitesâ

â One senior attorney at SEC headquarters in Washington spent up to eight hours a day accessing Internet porn. When he filled all the space on his government computer with pornographic images, he downloaded more to CDs and DVDs that accumulated in boxes in his offices. â

â An SEC accountant attempted to access porn websites 1,800 times in a two-week period and had 600 pornographic images on her computer hard drive.â

â Another SEC accountant attempted to access porn sites 16,000 times in a single month.â

In May 2014, Bloomberg News reported:

An employee at the Environmental Protection Agency downloaded more than 7,000 pornographic files onto a government computer and viewed them for two to six hours a day, according to the agencyâ s independent watchdog.

At the beginning of Obama's second term, he said that he goes skeet shooting all the time. However, a witness said that when he saw Obama go skeet shooting, Obama acted as if he had never fired a gun before, that he appeared to be uncomfortable with a gun, and that he only stayed for five minutes. In addition, during his first term, the media had never reported on his alleged skeet shooting, although it never failed to cover the more than 100 rounds of golf that he played during his first term.

143) Gave special access to people who raised or donated $500,000

In February 2013, the New York Times reported that people who raised or donated at least $500,000 to Organizing for Action, a political group that supported Obama, would be given the privilege of attending quarterly meetings with the president, along with other meetings at the White House.

144) Said the deficit had gone down when it had actually gone up

In February 2013, Obama said that the federal deficit had gone down by $2.5 trillion since he had taken office. In reality, it had actually increased by $5.9 trillion during that time.

145) Refused to make available necessary tax forms to taxpayers

On February 21, 2013, CBS News reported that the Obama administration had not yet made available dozens of different tax forms that taxpayers would need in order to meet the legal deadline of April 15 for filing their taxes.

146) Nominated someone to be Secretary of the Treasury who had participated in the biggest tax scam on record

Obama nominated Jack Lew to be Secretary of the Treasury. Lew had previously invested in the Cayman Islands, which Obama had referred to as the biggest tax scam on record.

147) Adopted harmful new restrictions on prescription painkillers even though the House had already voted against them

After the U.S. House voted against new restrictions on prescription painkillers, the Obama administration ignored the House's vote, and adopted the new restrictions anyway. Dr. Lynn Webster, president-elect of the American Academy of Pain Medicine said of these new restrictions, "It will have an impact on a lot of patients who have been receiving them for some time for legitimate purposes."

148) Rolled back union transparency rules

The Obama administration rolled back union transparency rules, which had been created so that union members could find out how their union was spending their union dues.

149) Tried to eliminate workers' right to a secret ballot when voting on whether or not to unionize

Obama supported the elimination of workers' right to a secret ballot when voting on whether or not to form a union

150) Gave supervised release to a convicted criminal who later went on to murder a nun

Obama gave supervised release to a convicted criminal, who then went on to murder a nun.

151) Falsely said that he did not propose the sequester

On October 22, 2012, Obama said, "The sequester is not something that I've proposed." However, on February 22, 2013, the Washington Post reported that the automatic spending cuts were initiated by the White House and that Obama personally approved of the plan.

152) Illegally refused to submit a budget on time during four of his first five years

The President is legally required to submit a budget by the first Monday in February. Obama broke this law during four of his first five years in office. Since 1921, no President had missed this deadline more than once.

153) Canceled White House tours for thousands of people so he could use the money to play golf with Tiger Woods

During the sequester in early 2013, the Obama administration said it would save \$18,000 per week by cancelling all White house tours, despite the fact that thousands of people had planned their vacations far in advance. However, Obama had no problem with spending more than \$1 million in tax money so he could go golfing with Tiger Woods for one weekend.

154) Falsely said the Newton shooter used a fully automatic weapon

In April 2013, four months after Adam Lanza murdered 26 people at Sandy Hook Elementary School, Obama falsely stated that the shooter had used a fully automatic weapon.

155) Broke his own deadline for creating healthcare exchanges

Three years after Obama signed Obamacare, the New York Times reported that Obama would miss his own deadline for creating some of the insurance exchanges for small businesses.

156) Falsely said that surgeons get paid between $30,000 and $50,000 for amputating a leg

In August 2009, while trying to justify the passage of Obamacare, Obama stated

Let's take the example of something like diabetes, one of a disease that's skyrocketing, partly because of obesity, partly because it's not treated as effectively as it could be. Right now if we paid a family if a family care physician works with his or her patient to help them lose weight, modify diet, monitors whether they're taking their medications in a timely fashion, they might get reimbursed a pittance. But if that same diabetic ends up getting their foot amputated, that's $30,000, $40,000, $50,000 immediately the surgeon is reimbursed. Well, why not make sure that we're also reimbursing the care that prevents the amputation, right? That will save us money.

The American College of Surgeons responded to this by saying

President Obama got his facts completely wrong. He stated that a surgeon gets paid $50,000 for a leg amputation when, in fact, Medicare pays a surgeon between $740 and $1,140 for a leg amputation. This payment also includes the evaluation of the patient on the day of the operation plus patient follow-up care that is provided for 90 days after the operation. Private insurers pay some variation of the Medicare reimbursement for this service.

157) Falsely said that doctors perform unnecessary tonsillectomies to make more money

In July 2009, Obama said

Right now, doctors, a lot of times, are forced to make decisions based on the fee payment schedule that's out there. So if your child has a bad sore throat, or has repeated sore throats, the doctor may look at the reimbursement system and say to himself, You know what? I make a lot more money if I take this kid's tonsils out.

Now, that may be the right thing to do. But I'd rather have that doctor making those decisions just based on whether you really need your kid's tonsils out or whether it might make more sense just to change maybe they have allergies. Maybe they have something else that would make a difference.

The American Academy of Otolaryngology Head and Neck Surgery responded by saying

The AAO-HNS is disappointed by the President's portrayal of the decision making processes by the physicians who perform these surgeries. In many cases, tonsillectomy may be a more effective treatment, and less costly, than prolonged or repeated treatments for an infected throat.

158) Purchased 2,717 mine resistant armor protected vehicles for use on civilian streets in the U.S.

In March 2013 it was reported that the Obama administration had purchased 2,717 mine resistant armor protected vehicles for use on civilian streets in the U.S.

159) Spends $277,050 per year for three professional calligraphists

In March 2013, it was reported that Obama was spending $277,050 of tax money per year for three professional calligraphists. It was also reported that cheap computer software could produce the exact same calligraphy for a tiny fraction of that cost.

160) Allowed 311,566 federal employees and retirees to get away with $3.5 billion in unpaid federal taxes

In 2011, Obama allowed 311,566 federal employees and retirees to get away with $3.5 billion in unpaid federal taxes.

161) Spent $2.6 million to teach Chinese prostitutes how to drink responsibly on the job

Obama spent $2.6 million to teach Chinese prostitutes how to drink responsibly on the job.

162) Fined UPS $40 million because some of its customers had used UPS to ship illegal drugs

In March 2013, Obama forced UPS to pay \$40 million because some of its customers had used UPS to ship illegal drugs.

163) Added 20,000 extra pages to Obamacare without Congressional approval

After Obamacare was passed, Obama added 20,000 extra pages to it, even though those extra 20,000 pages had not been voted on by Congress.

164) Signed health care reform law whose own authors called it a â huge train wreckâ that was â beyond comprehensionâ

U.S. Senator Max Baucus (D-Montana), one of the authors of Obamacare, said of it, â I just see a huge train wreck coming down.â

U.S. Senator Jay Rockefeller (D-West Virginia), another author of the law, said it was â beyond comprehension.â

165) Eliminated disclosure requirements for most federal employees in the executive and legislative branches

In April 2013, Obama eliminated the disclosure requirements for most federal employees in the executive and legislative branches.

166) Waited until after the 2012 election to release unpopular Obamacare rules

In April 2013, the New York Times reported:

â Even fervent supporters of the law admit that things are going worse than expected.

â The Obama administration didnât want to release unpopular rules before the election.

Everything is turning out to be more complicated than originally envisioned.

A law that was very confusing has become mind-bogglingâ Americans are just going to be overwhelmed and befuddled. Many are just going to stay away, even if they are eligible for benefits.

167) Made it easy for people to fraudulently collect $50,000 by falsely claiming to be farmers

In April 2013, the New York Times reported the Obama administration's political appointees at the Justice and Agriculture Departments engineered a stunning turnabout: they committed $1.33 billion to compensate

The deal was fashioned in White House meetings; the $50,000 payouts to black farmers had proved a magnet for fraud.

the claims process prompted allegations of widespread fraud and criticism that its very design encouraged people to lie; Agriculture Department reviewers found reams of suspicious claims, from nursery-school-age children and pockets of urban dwellers, sometimes in the same handwriting with nearly identical accounts of discrimination.

As a senator, Barack Obama supported expanding compensation for black farmers, and then as president he pressed for $1.15 billion to pay those new claims.

In 16 ZIP codes in Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi and North Carolina, the number of successful claimants exceeded the total number of farms operated by people of any race in 1997, the year the lawsuit was filed. Those applicants received nearly $100 million.

In Maple Hill, a struggling town in southeastern North Carolina, the number of people paid was nearly four times the total number of farms. More than one in nine African-American adults there received checks. In Little Rock, Ark., a confidential list of payments shows, 10 members of one extended family collected a total of $500,000, and dozens of other successful claimants shared addresses, phone numbers or close family connections.

In Arkansas, prosecutors rejected a test case against a Pine Bluff police officer who had admitted lying on his claim form.

in one ZIP code in Columbus, Ohio, nearly everyone in two adjoining apartment buildings had filed, according to the former high-ranking agency official.

She cinched the claim, he said to a ripple of laughter, by asserting that her father had whispered on his deathbed, "I was discriminated against by U.S.D.A."

168) Tried to rig federal auctions of radio spectrum space

In April 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration was trying to rig federal auctions of radio spectrum space in a manner that would favor Sprint and T-Mobile, and make it harder for AT&T and Verizon.

169) Put someone in jail for making an anti-Muslim video

In May 2013, Politico reported:

"Nakoula Basseley Nakoula deserves a place in American history. He is the first person in this country jailed for violating Islamic anti-blasphemy laws."

"You won't find that anywhere in the charges against him, of course. As a practical matter, though, everyone knows that Nakoula wouldn't be in jail today if he hadn't produced a video crudely lampooning the prophet Muhammad."

â In the weeks after the attack on U.S. facilities in Benghazi that killed Ambassador Chris Stevens and three others, the Obama administration claimed the terrorist assault had been the outgrowth of a demonstration against the Nakoula video. The administration ran public service announcements in Pakistan featuring President Barack Obama saying the U.S. had nothing to do with it. In a speech at the United Nations around this time, the president declared â no doubt with Nakoula in mind â â The future must not belong to those who slander the prophet of Islam.'â â After Benghazi, the administration was evidently filled with a fierce resolve â to bring Nakoula Basseley Nakoula to justice. Charles Woods, the father of a Navy SEAL killed in Benghazi, said Secretary of State Hillary Clinton told him when his sonâ s body returned to Andrews Air Force Base: â We will make sure that the person who made that film is arrested and prosecuted.'â â Lo and behold, Nakoula was brought in for questioning by five Los Angeles County sheriffâ s deputies at midnight, eventually arrested and held without bond, and finally thrown into jail for a year. He sits in La Tuna Federal Correctional Institution in Texas right now, even as the deceptive spin that blamed his video for the Benghazi attack looks more egregious by the day.â

170) Oversaw IRS whose employees illegally targeted conservative groups

In May 2013, the Washington Post reported that the IRS had illegally targeted conservative groups for additional reviews. Organizations with the words â tea partyâ or â patriotâ were singled out for harassment, such as requiring them to provide a list of donors, details about their internet postings on social networking websites, and information about their family members.

When this was first reported by the media in May 2013, Lois Lerner, who heads the IRS division that had conducted these illegal activities, claimed that only low level employees had known about it, and that no high level IRS officials had known about it. However, soon afterward, NPR reported that an Inspector General report showed that Lerner had been lying, and that she herself had actually been aware of it since June 29, 2011. Even worse, during March and April of 2012, Lerner herself had actually written such letters to fifteen different conservative groups. One of these letters can be read here.

While testifying in May 2013, Lerner said, â I have not done anything wrong. I have not broken any laws. I have not violated any IRS rules or regulations. And I have not provided false information to this or any other congressional committee.â However, afterward, she invoked her fifth amendment right to remain silent. The Washington Post reported that there was disagreement as to whether or not Lernerâ s statement constituted a waiving of her fifth amendment right to remain silent. Soon afterward, she was placed on paid administrative leave. At a later hearing in March 2014, Lerner again invoked her fifth amendment right to remain silent.

In September 2013, a House committee released several of Lernerâ s emails, which showed that she had targeted tea party groups, and that she had asked that their applications be delayed. In one of the emails from 2011, she had written â Tea Party Matter very dangerous.â

In September 2013, after having been on paid leave for four months, Lerner had still not been fired by Obama.

In September 2013, Lerner retired with a full pension.

In October 2013, it was reported that newly discovered emails proved that Lerner had violated federal law by giving the Federal Election Commission confidential tax information of several Tea party groups.

The Washington Post reported that IRS officials at the IRS headquarters in Washington D.C. had sent such letters to conservatives groups. Reuters reported that higher level IRS officials had taken part in discussions about it as early as August 2011. However, 21 months later, on May 10, 2013, the Washington Post reported that President Obama had not done anything to investigate or fire the IRS employees who had engaged in this illegal harassment. As of May 14, 2013, none of the IRS employees who engaged in any of this illegal behavior had been disciplined, despite the fact that higher level IRS officials had known about their illegal behavior at least since August 2011. Despite all of these media reports about the involvement of high level IRS officials, in February 2014, Obama said that these things had come from â a local office.â

On May 15, 2013, it was reported that Steven Miller, the acting IRS commissioner, had resigned. However, it was also reported that his assignment would have ended in early June anyway. He resigned â Obama did not fire him.

The IRS gave out confidential information about conservative groups. ProPublica wrote:

â The same IRS office that deliberately targeted conservative groups applying for tax-exempt status in the run-up to the 2012 election released nine pending confidential applications of conservative groups to ProPublica late last year.â

â In response to a request for the applications for 67 different nonprofits last November, the Cincinnati office of the IRS sent ProPublica applications or documentation for 31 groups. Nine of those applications had not yet been approvedâ meaning they were not supposed to be made public.â

â No unapproved applications from liberal groups were sent to ProPublica.â

President Obama either lied about when he first knew about this â or was too busy playing golf and attending fundraisers to read the memos that were sent to him. The Daily Caller wrote:

â White House press secretary Jay Carney said in a press conference Tuesday that the White House was notified about the IRS targeting tea party groups â several weeks ago.â This comes a day after President Obama said he found out about it from news reports on Friday of last week.â â During a press conference with British Prime Minister David Cameron on Monday, President Obama was asked about the IRS scandal. He responded, â I first learned about it from the same news reports that I think most people learned about this. I think it was on Friday.â â

â However, Carney said Tuesday that first a report had to be compiled by the IRSâ s inspector general and then when it was completed, it was passed on to the administration.â

â â A notification is appropriate and routine and that is what happened and that happened several weeks ago,â Carney said.â

When Media Trackers, a conservative organization, applied to the IRS for non-profit status, after waiting 16 months, it got no response. But when it reapplied with a liberal sounding name, it got approval in just three weeks. Yahoo wrote:

â In May 2011, Drew Ryun, a conservative activist and former Republican National Committee staffer, began filling out the Internal Revenue Service application to achieve nonprofit status for a new conservative watchdog group.â

â When September 2012 arrived with still no word from the IRS, Ryun determined that Media Trackers would likely never obtain standalone nonprofit status, and he tried a new approach: He applied for permanent nonprofit status for a separate group called Greenhouse Solutions, a pre-existing organization that was reaching the end of its determination period.â

â The IRS approved Greenhouse Solutionsâ request for permanent nonprofit status in three weeks.â

Politico reported:

â The same Internal Revenue Service office that singled out Tea Party groups for extra scrutiny also challenged Israel-related organizations, at least one of which filed suit over the agencyâ s handling of its application for tax-exempt status.â

â The trouble for the Israel-focused groups seems to have had different origins than that experienced by conservative groups, but at times the effort seems to have been equally ham-handed.â

The IRS asked conservative groups what books they were reading.

Although the IRS went 18 months or longer without responding to conservative organizationsâ applications, the IRS demanded that these same organizations answer the IRSâ s intrusive questions within a few weeks.

After the Waco Tea Party sent an application to the IRS, the IRS waited 19 months to respond. In its response, the IRS asked for printouts of its web page and social networking sites, copies of all of its newsletters, bulletins and fliers, and copies of all stories written about it. The IRS also asked for transcripts of its radio interviews.

As one example of how the IRS treated conservative organizations differently from liberal ones, Politico reported:

â Chris Littleton, one of the co-founders of the Ohio Liberty Coalition, said the group got a grilling from the IRS when it submitted its application, in letters the group has posted on its website. The IRS also gave him so much grief when he tried to apply for tax-exempt status for another group, American Junto, that â we just gave up on it,â he said.â

â But when he submitted an application for a third group â Ohioans for Health Care Freedom, now renamed Ohio Rising â it went through just fine,â Littleton said. â They never asked a single set of questions.â

After the Greater Phoenix Tea Party Patriots sent in their application, it took two years for the IRS to respond. The IRS response included 35 questions. When the groupâ s cofounder called the IRS, the IRS agent claimed that he had their groupâ s file right in front of him. But when the groupâ s confounder asked the IRS agent a question, the IRS agent asked, â Whatâ s your groupâ s name again?â

Tea Party groups who spoke with each other said they were all getting the same questions from the IRS.

The Washington Post reported that some IRS employees were â ignorant about tax laws, defiant of their supervisors, and blind to the appearance of impropriety.â

In 2012, the IRS leaked confidential information about Mitt Romney to the co-chairman of President Obamaâ s re-election committee.

For a 27 month period that began in February 2010, the IRS gave exactly zero approvals to Tea Party organizations that had sent in applications. During that same time period, numerous liberal organizations with names including words such as â progressâ or â progressiveâ did get approval.

After True the Vote, a conservative organization which was founded by Catherine Engelbrecht, sent its application to the IRS, the IRS went three years without responding. During that three year period, Engelbrecht and her family's small manufacturing business were audited by the IRS, and were investigated by OSHA, the ATF, and the FBI.

Democratic U.S. Senators pressured the IRS to target conservative groups. In May 2013, U.S. News & World Report wrote:

Over the last three years, Democratic senators repeatedly and publicly pressured the IRS to engage in the very activities that they are only now condemning today. At the same time, Republicans repeatedly and publicly warned against this abuse of government power and pointed to a series of red flags that strongly suggested conservative political organizations were being targeted by the IRS. Those warnings were deliberately ignored by the Obama administration and Democratic leaders in Congress.

From Max Baucus to Chuck Schumer to Jeanne Shaheen, key Senate Democrats publicly pressured the IRS to target groups that held differing political views and who, in their view, had the temerity to engage in the political process. The IRS listened to them and acted.

In order to get approval, the IRS required members of Coalition for Life of Iowa, a pro-life organization, to sign a promise to avoid protesting in front of Planned Parenthood.

The IRS asked Christian Voices for Life, a pro-life organization, questions about its prayer vigils.

According to the official White House visitor's log, during Obama's first four years as President, IRS commissioner Douglas Shulman made 157 visits to the White House. This is more visits to the White House by a very large margin than any other cabinet member during Obama's first term. By comparison, during the four years that Mark Everson was IRS commissioner when Bush was president, Everson made only one visit to the White House.

Shulman donated \$500 to the Democratic National Committee in October 2004.

During Congressional testimony that had taken place in March 2012, Shulman falsely said that the IRS had not targeted conservative groups.

Shulman's wife, Susan L. Anderson, is the senior program advisor for Public Campaign, a liberal organization. The Dailier Caller wrote of this group:

Public Campaign receives a major funding from the pro-Obamacare alliance Health Care for America NOW!, which is comprised of the labor unions AFL-CIO, AFSCME, SEIU, and the progressive activist organization Move On, among others.

Public Campaign also receives funding from the liberal Ford Foundation, the Common Cause Education Fund, and Barbra Streisand's The Streisand Foundation, among other foundations and private donors.

Stephen Seok was one of the IRS agents who wrote threatening letters to conservative groups. After doing so, he was given a promotion.

In June 2013, it was reported that two IRS employees had violated government ethics rules at a 2010 conference when they received $1,100 in free food and other items. One of them was Fred Schindler, the director of implementation oversight at the IRS Affordable Care Act office. The other was Donald Toda, a California-based employee. Obama did not fire them. Instead, he gave both of them paid leave. By comparison, in 1981, President Reagan fired 11,359 air-traffic controllers who had been illegally striking.

In June 2013, it was reported that The National Organization for Marriage, a conservative organization, had forensic evidence which proved that its donors' private information had been illegally leaked by the IRS. The IRS employees who illegally leaked this private information could get five years in prison. However, Obama refused to file any charges against these IRS criminals.

The IRS illegally leaked the private information of Christine O'Connell the same day that she announced that she would run for U.S. Senate as a tea party candidate.

According to White House visitor logs, Obama met with Colleen Kelley, the president of the National Treasury Employees Union, on March 31, 2010. The very next day, IRS employees who belonged to that union started to target tea party organizations.

In June 2013, Associated Press claimed that the IRS had targeted liberal groups, but refused to actually name any of those liberal groups.

In July 2013, it was reported that Obama had met with a key IRS official who was involved in the targeting just two days before the key official had told his colleagues how to target tea party groups. The Daily Caller reported:

The Obama appointee implicated in congressional testimony in the IRS targeting scandal met with President Obama in the White House two days before offering his colleagues a new set of advice on how to scrutinize tea party and conservative groups applying for tax-exempt status.

IRS chief counsel William Wilkins, who was named in House Oversight testimony by retiring IRS agent Carter Hull as one of his supervisors in the improper targeting of conservative groups, met with Obama in the Roosevelt Room of the White House on April 23, 2012. Wilkins' boss, then-IRS commissioner Douglas Shulman, visited the Eisenhower Executive Office Building on April 24, 2012, according to White House visitor logs.

On April 25, 2012, Wilkins' office sent the exempt organizations determinations unit additional comments on the draft guidance for approving or denying tea party tax-exempt applications, according to the IRS inspector general's report.

In May 2013, Jon Stewart said of the IRS's targeting of conservative groups:

Well, congratulations, President Barack Obama. Conspiracy theorists who generally can survive in anaerobic environments have just had an algae bloom dropped on their fing heads, thus removing the last arrow in your pro-governance quiver: skepticism about your opponents.

In May 2013, Michael Macleod-Ball, chief of staff at the ACLU's Washington Legislative Office, said of the IRS's targeting of conservative groups:

Even the appearance of playing partisan politics with the tax code is about as constitutionally troubling as it gets. With the recent push to grant federal agencies broad new powers to mandate donor disclosure for advocacy groups on both the left and the right, there must be clear checks in place to prevent this from ever happening again.

In January 2014, it was reported that the Obama administration had chosen Barbara Kay Bosserman to head the investigation of the IRS's targeting of tea party groups. Bosserman had donated more than $6,000 to Obama's two presidential campaigns.

In January 2014, it was reported that since Sarah Palin had announced her candidacy for vice-President in 2008, the IRS had harassed her father six different times. Prior to that, the IRS had never contacted him during the 50 years that he had worked. The report did not specify how many of these six incidents happened under President Bush, or how many happened under President Obama.

In January 2014, it was reported that during the FBI's so-called "investigation" of the IRS's harassment of tea party groups, the FBI had not actually interviewed any tea party groups.

In January 2014, it was reported that the IRS had demanded that Friends of Abe (a conservative organization whose members work in the entertainment industry) give the IRS enhanced access to its security protected website (which included its secret membership list), even though such a demand was not standard IRS procedure. In addition, even though the organization had applied to the IRS for tax free status two years earlier, the IRS had still not made a decision regarding the application.

In February 2014, Obama said that there was "not even a smidgeon of corruption" in the IRS's actions.

In February 2014, it was reported that during Obama's presidency, 100% of the established 501(c)(4) groups that had been audited by the IRS were conservative.

In February 2014, when Fox News's Bill O'Reilly asked Obama about the IRS harassment of tea party groups, Obama said "These kinds of things keep on surfacing, in part because you and your TV station will promote them."

In May 2014, it was reported that tea party donors had been audited by the IRS at ten times the rate of the general population.

In May 2014, it was reported that the IRS had illegally ignored four Freedom of Information requests from Judicial Watch between May 2013 and October 2013. Judicial Watch filed a lawsuit in October 2013, and was finally able to get the information in May 2014. It showed that the orders for the IRS to harass tea party members had come from IRS headquarters in Washington D.C. It also showed that U.S. Senator Carl Levin (D-Michigan) had pressured the IRS to shut down tea party organizations.

In June 2014, the IRS claimed that Lerner's emails to outside agencies from January 2009 through April 2011 had been "lost" when her hard drive "crashed." Also in June 2014, the IRS claimed to have "lost" the emails from six additional IRS employees who were relevant to this scandal when their hard drives "crashed." One of these IRS employees was Nikole Flax, who had been chief of staff to former IRS commissioner Steven Miller. Flax had made 31 visits to the White House during the time that the IRS had been targeting tea party groups. However, a private company called Sonasoft had a contract with the IRS since 2005 to back up all of the IRS's emails. The company keeps multiple and redundant backup copies of all the IRS's emails. The company advertised itself by saying "If the IRS uses Sonasoft products to back up their servers why wouldn't you choose them to protect your servers?" In addition, Norman Cillo, an Army veteran who had worked in intelligence, and who had also worked as a program manager at Microsoft, listed six reasons why the IRS's claim about "losing" the emails must be false. Also, federal law requires the IRS to keep permanent, backup copies of all of its emails at an external location. And finally, the NSA has copies of all of the emails.

Although federal law requires the IRS to keep permanent, backup copies of all of its emails at an external location, in June 2014, it was reported that the IRS has canceled its email archiving contract with Sonasoft weeks after Lerner's computer "crashed."

In June 2014, it was reported that emails showed that Lerner had suggested that the IRS audit U.S. Senator Charles Grassley (R-Iowa).

In June 2014, the IRS admitted that it had illegally given out information about the conservative group National Organization for Marriage.

In July 2014, it was reported that Lerner had called Republicans â€˜craziesâ€™ and â€˜assholesâ€™ in her emails.

In July 2014, it was reported that after Lernerâ€™s hard drive â€˜crashed,â€™ the IRS deliberately destroyed it, without making any attempt to recover her emails. Top IRS officials told Congressional investigators that the hard drive was irreparably damaged before they destroyed it. However, IRS technical experts who had examined the hard drive before the IRS destroyed it said that this was not true, and that the data could have been recovered. Bruce Webster, partner at Provo, Utah-based IT consulting and expert witness firm Ironwood Experts, who has served as a consulting and IT expert in more than 80 civil lawsuits, said of this:

â€˜â€˜ ! the IRS has no excuses for having handled this so poorlyâ€™ ! This happens all the timeâ€™ ! There are little storefront companies in just about every major city that can do this and there are forensic companies that can restore files and even do higher end recovery of data.â€™

In August 2014, the IRS admitted in a court filing that it had deliberately destroyed Lernerâ€™s Blackberry after her computer â€˜crashed.â€™ In addition, an IRS official admitted, under penalty of perjury, that Lernerâ€™s Blackberry had contained the same emails that had been on her computer.

In August 2014, the IRS finally admitted, under penalty of perjury, that Lernerâ€™s emails had never really been â€˜lost.â€™ The IRS said the â€˜missingâ€™ emails had been on its backup system all along.

On November 5, 2014, it was reported that the IRS had admitted to the court that it had not even tried to find Lernerâ€™s â€˜missingâ€™ emails in its backup system.

On November 21, 2014, it was reported that the Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration had obtained as many as 30,000 of Lernerâ€™s â€˜missingâ€™ emails from IRS disaster recovery tapes.

In February 2015, it was reported that Lerner had received a total of $129,300 in bonuses between 2010 and 2013.

As of April 2015, no criminal charges had been filed against Lerner.

On June 12, 2015, when the IRS missed a court ordered deadline for releasing 6,400 newly found emails from Lernerâ€™s hard drive, the IRS said it would not be able to release those emails for another three months because it needed those three months to remove any duplicates.

In June 2015, government investigators said the IRS had â€˜mistakenlyâ€™ erased 422 backup tapes of IRS emails.

In July 2015, the House Oversight Committee released information which showed that in 2011, when Lernerâ€™s hard drive was examined by John Minsek, a senior investigative analyst with the IRS Criminal Investigations unit, it contained â€˜a well-defined scoring creating a concentric circle in the proximity of the center of the disk.â€™

In July 2015, the House Oversight Committee released information which showed that the IRS had avoided searching five of six possible sources of electronic media for Lernerâ€™s emails.

In July 2015, the House Oversight Committee released information which showed that some IRS officials, including some who were supervised by Lerner, had used a wholly separate instant messaging system called Office Communication Server that automatically erased its messages. None of these messages were archived. In an email conversation, Lerner had asked if the Office Communication Server archived its messages, and when she was told that it did not archive its messages, she responded by saying Perfect.

In July 2015, U.S. District Judge Emmet G. Sullivan threatened to hold IRS employees, including IRS Commissioner John Koskinen, in contempt because they had illegally ignored the judge's orders to release some of Lerner's emails and other IRS documents. These same IRS employees had previously illegally ignored Freedom of Information requests and lawsuits for those same emails and other documents.

In August 2015, a report by the Senate Finance Committee said that during the 40 month period from February 2009 through May 2012, only one conservative group had been granted non-profit status by the IRS. The Senate Finance Committee report stated:

Due to the circuitous process implemented by Lerner, only one conservative political advocacy organization was granted tax-exempt status between February 2009 and May 2012. Lerner's bias against these applicants unquestionably led to these delays, and is particularly evident when compared to the IRS's treatment of other applications

Although applications from the Tea Party and conservative organizations languished at the IRS, this was not the case for all groups that applied. In cases where the IRS wanted to act quickly, it did particularly for other high-profile applications that attracted political attention

The IRS's treatment of these organizations was almost universally consistent with Lerner's personal political views this is, supporting Democratic candidates and opposing conservative tax-exempt organizations

The Senate Finance Committee report also said:

We found evidence that Lerner's personal political views directly resulted in disparate treatment for applicants affiliated with Tea Party and other conservative causes

Her influence led not only to indefinite delays in the processing of these groups' applications for tax-exempt status, but also to audits. During that same time, the IRS generally responded quickly and favorably to nonprofit organizations that were affiliated with progressive causes

In June 2016, the IRS released a list of names of 426 conservative organizations that it had targeted.

In June 2016, it was reported that in October 2010, at Lerner's request, 1.25 million pages of confidential tax returns had been transferred from the IRS to the Department of Justice's criminal division. The only way that this transfer could have been legal would be if the Justice Department had specifically requested it, and the only circumstances under which the Justice Department is legally allowed to make such a request is when the parties in question are under criminal investigation by the Justice Department. However, the Justice Department never requested these documents, and there was no criminal investigation of these organizations by the Justice Department. Therefore, Lerner's action was illegal. Included in this transfer were the names and address of donors to these organizations information which is supposed to be private and confidential. Of course, as always, Obama refused to file any charges against Lerner for her illegal activity.

On July 29, 2016, a Freedom of Information lawsuit by Judicial Watch resulted in more documents being released. These documents showed that top IRS officials in Washington D.C., including Lerner, had known as early as the summer of 2011 that the IRS was targeting conservative groups because of their ideology and political affiliation. Judicial Watch wrote of this:

â These documents show that the Obama FBI and Justice Department had plenty of evidence suggesting illegal targeting, perjury, and obstruction of justice. Both the FBI and Justice Department collaborated with the Lois Lerner and the IRS to try to prosecute and jail Barack Obamaâ s political opponents. These documents show the resulting compromised investigation looked the other way when it came to Obamaâ s IRS criminality.â

On August 1, 2016, Judicial Watch released additional documents, which showed that the IRS targeting of conservative groups had been happening since 2010, and that it had lasted through the November 2012 election. Multiple IRS employees said that applications from conservative groups had been automatically denied approval, and were placed in a special â inventoryâ while IRS employees awaited further instructions from IRS headquarters in Washington D.C. Multiple IRS agents said that these IRS policies guaranteed that these applications from conservative groups would not be approved before the November 2012 election.

On August 2, 2016, Judicial Watch released more documents, which showed that Justice Department attorney Barbara Bosserman, who had spent more than 1,500 hours â investigatingâ the IRS targeting of conservative groups, had donated a total of $6,750 to Obamaâ s campaigns and the DNC between 2004 and 2012, including 12 separate donations to Obama for America between 2008 and 2012. In addition, it was Attorney General Eric Holder who had assigned Bosserman to oversee this â investigation.â No charges were filed as a result of this â investigation.â

In August 2016, it was reported that the Albuquerque Tea Party was still waiting for approval from the IRS more than six years after it had filed its first application.

In September 2016, Judicial Watch reported:

A 2013 study by scholars from the American Enterprise Institute and the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University found that, â had the Tea Party groups continued to grow at the pace seen in 2009 and 2010, and had their effect on the 2012 vote been similar to that seen in 2010, they would have brought the Republican Party as many as 5 â 8.5 million votes compared to Obamaâ s victory margin of 5 million.â

In November 2016, U.S. District Judge Michael R. Barrett said that the IRS was still targeting tea party groups because the IRS was still not processing applications that the tea party groups had submitted several years earlier. He ordered the IRS to process an application that the Texas Patriots Tea Party had submitted four years earlier. He also ordered the IRS to stop targeting tea party groups. Judge Barrett said:

â The evidence strongly suggests that the IRS initiated the delay because TPTPâ s application was perceived at the screening stage to be a Tea Party case.â

171) Spent $402,721 on underwear that detects the presence of cigarette smoke

In May 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration had spent $402,721 on underwear that detects the presence of cigarette smoke.

172) Rewarded one of his biggest campaign fundraisers by nominating him for the ambassadorship to Canada

In April 2013, it was reported that Obama had nominated Bruce Heyman to be the ambassador to Canada.

During Obama's election campaign, Heyman had raised more than $1 million for Obama.

173) Hired a retarded man to sell illegal drugs and guns, and then arrested him for doing so

In April 2013, the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel reported:

ATF agents running an undercover storefront in Milwaukee used a brain-damaged man with a low IQ to set up gun and drug deals, paying him in cigarettes, merchandise and money, according to federal documents obtained by the Journal Sentinel.

For more than six months, federal agents relied on Chauncey Wright to promote Fearless Distributing by handing out fliers as he rode his bike around town recommending the store to friends, family and strangers, according to federal prosecutors and family members.

Wright, unaware that the store was an undercover operation being run by agents with the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, also stocked shelves with shoes, clothing, drug paraphernalia and auto parts, according to his family.

Once authorities shut down the operation, they charged the 28-year-old man with federal gun and drug counts.

Wright's IQ measures in the 50s, about half of a normal IQ, according to those familiar with him. Wright's score is classified as mildly or moderately disabled, depending on the IQ scale used.

174) Secretly obtained phone records from Associated Press reporters and editors

In May 2013, Associated Press reported:

The Justice Department secretly obtained two months of telephone records of reporters and editors for The Associated Press in what the news cooperative's top executive called a massive and unprecedented intrusion into how news organizations gather the news.

The records obtained by the Justice Department listed outgoing calls for the work and personal phone numbers of individual reporters, general AP office numbers in New York, Washington and Hartford, Conn., and the main number for AP reporters in the House of Representatives press gallery, according to attorneys for the AP. It was not clear if the records also included incoming calls or the duration of calls.

In all, the government seized the records for more than 20 separate telephone lines assigned to AP and its journalists in April and May of 2012. The exact number of journalists who used the phone lines during that period is unknown but more than 100 journalists work in the offices where phone records were targeted, on a wide array of stories about government and other matters.

In a letter of protest sent to Attorney General Eric Holder on Monday, AP President and Chief Executive Officer Gary Pruitt said the government sought and obtained information far beyond anything that could be justified by any specific investigation. He demanded the return of the phone records and destruction of all copies.

There can be no possible justification for such an overbroad collection of the telephone communications of The Associated Press and its reporters. These records potentially reveal communications with confidential sources across all of the newsgathering activities undertaken by the AP during a two-month period, provide a road map to AP's newsgathering operations, and disclose information about AP's activities and operations that the government has no conceivable right to know, Pruitt said.

Soon afterward, it was reported that obtaining these phone records had required approval from Eric Holder, Obama's Attorney General.

This has had a very dangerous and harmful effect on the media's ability to report the news. In June 2013, Gary Pruitt, the president and chief executive of Associated Press said:

Some longtime trusted sources have become nervous and anxious about talking with us. In some cases, government employees we once checked in with regularly will no longer speak to us by phone. Others are reluctant to meet in person. This chilling effect on newsgathering is not just limited to AP. Journalists from other news organizations have personally told me that it has intimidated both official and nonofficial sources from speaking to them as well.

175) Asked contractors to disclose their political donations before bidding on government contracts

In April 2011, Obama asked contractors to disclose their political donations before bidding on government contracts.

176) Tried to deport German family that had fled Germany over Hitler's ban on homeschooling

In Germany in 1938, Adolf Hitler outlawed homeschooling. He said "Give me a child when he's seven and he's mine forever."

Hitler's ban on homeschooling is still in effect today. In 2006, Katharina Plett was arrested for homeschooling her own children. Her husband and their children fled the country. In 2008, Juergen and Rosemary Dudek were sentenced to 90 days in jail for homeschooling their own children.

Uwe and Hannelore Romeike and their homeschooled children fled Germany after the police showed up at their house to enforce Germany's ban on homeschooling. They came to the United States in 2010 and were granted political asylum, which gave them legal permission to live in the U.S. as political refugees. However, in March 2013, the Obama administration argued in federal court in favor of deporting them and sending them back to Germany. This means that Obama does not consider them to be political refugees, and that he does not consider Germany's policy of jailing homeschooling parents to be a form of persecution.

177) Illegally used social media to promote new water rule

In December 2015, it was reported that the Obama administration had illegally used social media to promote its new water rule.

178) Falsely accused a law abiding news reporter of being an aider and abettor and/or co-conspirator in a criminal investigation

James Rosen is a law abiding reporter for Fox News. However, the Obama administration falsely labeled him as an aider and abettor and/or co-conspirator in a criminal investigation when it applied for a warrant to read his emails.

The New York Times wrote of this:

With the decision to label a Fox News television reporter a possible co-conspirator in a criminal investigation of a news leak, the Obama administration has moved beyond protecting government secrets to threatening fundamental freedoms of the press to gather news.

Leak investigations usually focus on the source, not the reporter. But, in this case, federal prosecutors also asked a federal judge for permission to examine Mr. Rosen's personal e-mails, arguing that there is probable cause to believeâ Mr. Rosen is â an aider and abettor and/or co-conspiratorâ in the leak.

Though Mr. Rosen was not charged, the F.B.I. request for his e-mail account was granted secretly in late May 2010. The government was allowed to rummage through Mr. Rosenâ s e-mails for at least 30 days.

Michael Clemente, the executive vice president of Fox News, said on Monday that it was â downright chillingâ that Mr. Rosen â was named a criminal co-conspirator for simply doing his job as a reporter.â Bruce Brown, the executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, added on Tuesday that treating â routine news-gathering efforts as evidence of criminality is extremely troubling and corrodes time-honored understandings between the public and the government about the role of the free press.â

Obama administration officials often talk about the balance between protecting secrets and protecting the constitutional rights of a free press. Accusing a reporter of being a â co-conspiratorâ â shows a heavy tilt toward secrecy and insufficient concern about a free press.

The Washington Post wrote of this:

The Rosen affair is as flagrant an assault on civil liberties as anything done by George W. Bushâ s administration, and it uses technology to silence critics in a way Richard Nixon could only have dreamed of.

To treat a reporter as a criminal for doing his job â seeking out information the government doesnâ t want made public â deprives Americans of the First Amendment freedom on which all other constitutional rights are based. Guns? Privacy? Due process? Equal protection? If you canâ t speak out, you canâ t defend those rights, either.

Beyond that, the administrationâ s actions shatter the presidentâ s credibility and discourage allies who would otherwise defend the administration against bogus accusations such as those involving the Benghazi â talking points.â If the administration is spying on reporters and accusing them of criminality just for asking questions â well, who knows what else this crowd is capable of doing?

My Post colleague Ann E. Marimow, who broke the Rosen story, obtained the affidavit by FBI agent Reginald Reyes seeking access to Rosenâ s private e-mails. In the affidavit, Reyes stated that â there is probable cause to believe that the reporter has committed or is committing a violationâ of the law against national security leaks. The affidavit detailed how the FBI had monitored Rosenâ s comings and goings from the State Department and tracked his various phone calls with the suspected leaker, analyst Stephen Jin-Woo Kim.

Rosenâ s supposed crime? Reyes got his evidence from an e-mail from the reporter: â I want to report authoritatively, and ahead of my competitors, on new initiatives or shifts in U.S. policy, events on the ground in [North Korea], what intelligence is picking up, etc. .â .â . Iâ d love to see some internal State Department analyses. .â .â . In short: Letâ s break some news, and expose muddle-headed policy when we see it, or force the administrationâ s hand to go in the right direction, if possible.â

That is indeed compelling evidence â of good journalism.

Obama is establishing an ominous precedent.

179) Asked Attorney General Eric Holder to investigate himself for lying under oath

U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder lied under oath. He said that he had nothing to do with monitoring the emails of Fox News reporter James Rosen. But it turns out that it was Holderâ s own signature on the search warrant.

Even the liberal Huffington Post said that Holder should be fired over this.

Holder could get five years in prison.

So, did President Obama fire Holder?

Of course not!

Instead, Obama asked that Holder be investigated â not by an independent investigating committee â but by Holder himself!

I can see it nowâ !

Obama: â Did you lie?â

Holder: â No.â

Obama: â OK. Thatâ s good enough for me. Youâ re cleared of any wrongdoing.â

180) Used Obamacare to illegally give the IRS additional powers without approval from Congress

In May 2013 the Washington Post wrote:

The law allows the Department of Health and Human Services to set up federal health exchanges in the holdout states. But the statute makes no mention of the IRS providing credits and subsidies through federal exchanges.

The IRS resolved this conundrum by denying its existence. In a May 2012 regulatory ruling, it asserted its own right to provide credits outside the state exchanges as the reasonable interpretation of an ambiguous law. But the language of the law is not ambiguous. And health scholars Jonathan Adler and Michael Cannon, in an exhaustive recent analysis, find no justification for the IRSâ s ruling in the legislative history of Obamacare. â The statute,â they argue, â and the lack of any support for the IRS rule in the legislative record put defenders of the IRS rule in the awkward position of arguing that it was so obviously Congressâ intent to offer tax credits in federal exchanges that despite a year of debate over the PPACA, it never occurred to anyone to express that intent out loud. A better explanation is that the PPACAâ s authors miscalculated when they assumed states would establish exchanges.â

So: The IRS seized the authority to spend about $800 billion over 10 years on benefits that were not authorized by Congress. And the current IRS scandal puts this decision in a new light. What was the role of politics in shaping this regulatory decision? What pressure was applied?

181) Used environmental regulations to shut down an ambulance while it was taking a patient to the hospital

In May 2013 the Washington Post reported:

A Wednesday shootout on the streets of Washington Highlands left a cop injured and a carjacking suspect dead. But before the suspect expired, he went on an unusual ambulance ride that involved moving him from one vehicle to another on the shoulder of Interstate 295. While this might appear to be another story of Fire and Emergency Medical Services dysfunction, the story is rather more complicated. As WUSA-TV explains, newer-model diesel engines are required by federal regulations to have emission-control features that, in some circumstances, require the motor to shut down for a regeneration a process in which the exhaust system burns off trapped soot. The need for regeneration can be unpredictable. The transfer to a second ambulance delayed 34-year-old Nathaniel McRae's arrival at a hospital by seven minutes. FEMS insists the wait did not play a role in his death.

182) Had a serious management problem with his refusal to fire bad workers

A 2011 USA Today article on federal employees states:

The federal government fired 0.55% of its workers in the budget year that ended Sept. 30 11,668 employees in its 2.1 million workforce.

White-collar federal workers have almost total job security after a few years on the job. Last year, the government fired none of its 3,000 meteorologists, 2,500 health insurance administrators, 1,000 optometrists, 800 historians or 500 industrial property managers.

Wow! Those must be excellent workers, right?

Actually, no. The article also says:

San Francisco State University management professor John Sullivan, an expert on employee turnover, says the low departure rates show a failure to release poor performers and those with obsolete skills.

Rather than indicating something positive, rates below 1% in the firing and layoff components would indicate a serious management problem, he says.

A serious management problem?

So who exactly is the highest ranking manager of the federal government?

It's President Obama.

183) Illegally solicited donations from health insurers

In May 2013, Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius solicited donations from health insurers to help pay for Obamacare. Such soliciting is illegal.

184) Chose an economic advisor who wanted roads and bridges to be built by unqualified workers

Obama chose to have Robert Reich be his economic advisor. Regarding Obama's stimulus, Reich said:

I am concerned, as I'm sure many of you are, that these jobs not simply go to high skilled people. And therefore, in my remarks I have suggested to you, and I'm certainly happy to talk about it more, ways in which the money can be criteria can be set so that they money does go to others people who are not necessarily construction workers or high-skilled professionals.

185) Pressured unions to reduce the amount of health insurance coverage for their employees

In May 2013, the New York Times reported:

Say goodbye to that $500 deductible insurance plan and the $20 co-payment for a doctor's office visit.

They are likely to become luxuries of the past.

Expect to have your blood pressure checked or a prescription filled at a clinic at your office, rather than by your private doctor.

Then blame the so-called Cadillac tax, which penalizes companies that offer high-end health care plans to their employees.

Although the tax does not start until 2018, employers say they have to start now to meet the deadline and they are doing whatever they can to bring down the cost of their plans. Under the law, an employer or health insurer offering a plan that costs more than $10,200 for an individual and $27,500 for a family would typically pay a 40 percent excise tax on the amount exceeding the threshold.

Tom Leibfried, a legislative director for the A.F.L.-C.I.O., one of the unions whose plans are vulnerable to the tax, says the demands that workers pay more for their care is a perennial aspect of labor negotiations. âWeâre very concerned about the hollowing out of benefits in general,â he said. âWhat the excise tax will do is just fuel that.â

186) Falsely said â We believe in the free marketâ

In June 2013, Obama said.

We donât think that top-down solutions are the right way to go. We believe in the free market. We believe in a light touch when it comes to regulations. â See more at: <http://www.cnsnews.com/news/article/obama-we-dont-want-tax-all-businesses-out-business#sthash.NDb17lc6.dpuf> in the free market. We believe in a light touch when it comes to regulations.

â We believe in the free market.â

Obama was lying. The free market means that in the business world, it is the customers, not the government, who pick winners and losers. But this list contains a huge number of instances where Obama tried to use the government to pick winners and losers in the business world.

187) Falsely said â We believe in a light touch when it comes to regulationsâ

In June 2013, Obama said, â We believe in a light touch when it comes to regulations.â

He lied. For example, after Obamacare was passed, Obama added 20,000 extra pages of regulations to it.

188) Said Catholic schools are â divisiveâ but did not say the same thing about other religious schools

In June 2013, Obama said:

â If towns remain divided â if Catholics have their schools and buildings and Protestants have theirs, if we canât see ourselves in one another and fear or resentment are allowed to harden â that too encourages division and discourages cooperation.â

I can understand why a person might criticize religious schools in general â although I myself happen to think that religious schools are a superior alternative to public schools. But for Obama to single out one religion in particular as being divisive, while not saying the same thing about all religious schools in general, is a double standard.

189) Favored a new tax on Christmas trees so the money could be used to subsidize Christmas trees

In November 2011, Obama proposed a new tax on Christmas trees, so that the money could be used to subsidize Christmas trees. If this had been a Rube Goldberg cartoon it would have been funny. But to suggest it as an actual government policy is absurd.

190) Betrayed the people of the city that helped him launch his political career

As part of his effort to get Obamacare passed, Obama repeatedly promised that people could keep their current health insurance if they liked it.

More than any other city, the people of Chicago helped to get Obamacare passed. Chicago is where Obama chose to live when he first got into politics. The people there launched his political career and voted him into office.

And this is how Obama repays them. In May 2013, the Chicago Tribune reported:

Mayor Rahm Emanuel plans to start reducing health insurance coverage next year for more than 30,000 retired city workers and begin shifting them to President Barack Obama's new federal system.

The move is aimed at saving the city money

Once the phaseout is complete, those retired workers would have to pay for their own health insurance or get subsidies under the Affordable Care Act. The city-subsidized coverage is particularly important to retired workers who aren't yet eligible for Medicare Henry Bayer, executive director of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Council 31, said the uncertainties of the Affordable Care Act and the state insurance exchanges they would create make the city's plan hard to assess.

'This uncertainty will cause anxiety and fear for tens of thousands of seniors who gave their working lives to public service' — men and women whose retirement savings are already under attack in the name of pension reform.' Bayer said.

191) Proposed military interventionism in Syria

In June 2013, Obama proposed that the U.S. get involved in Syria's military conflicts.

192) Planned to use military snipers to shoot innocent lions and cheetahs in the wild

In June 2013, Obama was planning to use military snipers to shoot innocent lions and cheetahs in the wild.

However, after the media reported on his plans, Obama got embarrassed, and cancelled his plans.

193) Refused to fire or prosecute more than 1,000 IRS employees who illegally used their IRS credit cards for their own personal use

During Obama's first term, more than 1,000 IRS employees illegally used their IRS credit cards for personal purchases, but Obama refused to fire or prosecute them.

194) Defended intelligence chief who lied under oath

In March 2013, James Clapper, the director of national intelligence, falsely stated under oath that the NSA was not gathering data on millions of U.S. citizens. In June 2013, after it was reported that Clapper had lied under oath, Obama defended him, instead of firing him.

195) Had the Secret Service visit a law abiding citizen who had criticized his policies on Twitter

In April 2013, Obama sent the Secret Service to visit the home of Tom Francois, a law abiding citizen who had criticized Obama's policies on Twitter.

The Secret Service admitted that Francois had not made any threats against Obama.

196) Had the IRS grant special, illegal favors for his brother's so-called charity

In May 2013, the Dailier Caller reported that the IRS had taken the unprecedented step of approving a non-profit application within just one month. In this particular case, the application was from the Barack H. Obama Foundation, a so-called charity which was headed by Malik Obama, Barack Obama's brother.

In addition, the IRS illegally gave retroactive approval for the organization's tax exempt status. Prior to getting this approval, the organization had illegally solicited tax deductible donations even though it did not have legal approval to do so.

197) Raised the interest rate on student loans to pay for Obamacare

Obamacare raised the interest rate on students loans from 5.3% to 6.8%. The money is used to fund Obamacare.

198) Refused to fire or prosecute 15 IRS agents who illegally seized the medical records of 10 million people

In March 2011, 15 IRS agents illegally seized the medical records of 10 million people without a warrant. Obama refused to fire or prosecute them.

199) Hired 16,500 new IRS agents to run Obamacare

In June 2013, it was reported that Obama had hired 16,500 new IRS agents to run Obamacare.

200) Tried to reward wasteful IRS spending with an increase in funding

In June 2013, Danny Werfel, Obama's new nominee to head the IRS, asked Congress for an increase in funding. At the same time, NPR reported on this waste of taxpayer money at an IRS conference:

Some of the 2,600 attendees received benefits, including baseball tickets and stays in presidential suites that normally cost $1,500 to $3,500 per night. In addition, 15 outside speakers were paid a total of $135,000 in fees, with one paid $17,000 to talk about leadership through art, the committee said.

Considering how the IRS wasted all that money on luxury hotel rooms and worthless speeches, Werfel really had some nerve asking Congress for more money. By proposing to reward wasteful spending with a budget increase, Werfel proved that he is incompetent to head the IRS. The fact that Obama nominated such an incompetent person does not surprise me one bit.

201) Illegally bypassed Congress to delay Obamacare's employer mandate

As the Obamacare law was written, the employer mandate was to begin in January 2014. This is what the law said when it was passed by the House and Senate, and signed by President Obama.

However, in July 2013, Obama delayed the employer mandate part of Obamacare until January 2015. Obama did this without approval from Congress.

For Obama to change a law that was passed by Congress, without first getting approval from Congress, is a violation of the Presidential oath that Obama took to uphold and defend the Constitution.

What Obama did here is an action of a dictator, not an action of a President whose power is limited by a written constitution.

If Obama can get away with this, then it sets a horribly dangerous precedent, and means that the President can arbitrarily make any change to any law that has been passed by Congress, without first getting approval from Congress.

202) Made it too hard for some doctors to continue their practices

In July 2013, ABC News reported that some doctors were shutting down their practices in response to Obamacare.

Dr. Robert WcWilliams, an obstetrician/gynecologist with more than 5,000 patients, said:

â Itâ s going to be run by bureaucrats â and itâ s going to be run by politicians â who have no idea what is in your best interests, then Iâ m getting out.â

203) Falsely told Africans that contaminated water is a smaller problem than global warming

In July 2013, while speaking in Johannesburg, South Africa, President Obama said that global warming was â the biggest challenge we have environmentallyâ and that it was worse than â dirty water, dirty air.â

However, according to the World Health Organization, while global warming kills 140,000 people each year, air pollution kills 3 million people per year.

According to UNESCO, each year, contaminated water causes 4 billion cases of diarrhea, 120,000 cases of cholera, 300 million cases of malaria, 12 million cases of typhoid, 6 million cases of trachoma, 200 million cases of schistosomiasis, and more than 1 billion incidents of intestinal parasites.

You know whatâ s worse than global warming? How about living your entire life without ever having access to a toilet?

The World Health Organization says that dirty water is â the leading cause of disease and death around the world.â

That Obama would downplay these problems shows how scientifically illiterate he is.

That he would do so while giving a speech in Africa, which has the highest rate of water borne illness of any continent, shows how thoughtless and insensitive he is.

204) Spent $630,000 of taxpayersâ money to get more Facebook â likesâ

In July 2013, it was reported that Obama had spent $630,000 of taxpayers' money in order to get more Facebook likes.

205) Declared that hacking was an act of war, then hacked the EU

In 2011, the Obama administration issued a statement which said that when one country hacked another country's computers, the hacking constituted an act of war.

In July 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration had hacked computers which were owned by the European Union.

206) Said "If I had a son, he'd look like Trayvon"

In Florida, after a school security camera showed Trayvon Martin marking graffiti, a search of his backpack showed that it contained 12 pieces of women's jewelry, including silver wedding rings, and earrings with diamonds. The backpack also had a screwdriver, which is often used as a tool by burglars. Martin said that the jewelry belonged to a friend, but refused to say who that friend was.

Why would a teenage boy bring a backpack full of silver wedding rings and diamond earrings to school? Do Martin's millions of defenders really think that he was not a burglar?

The fact that Martin was in possession of stolen jewelry at school is perfectly in line with George Zimmerman's claim on the 911 call that Martin was acting suspiciously. And there had been quite a few burglaries in the area recently.

Also on the 911 call, Zimmerman had said that Martin was acting as if he was on drugs. Martin's autopsy showed that there was THC in his system. And while other parts of marijuana can stay in the system for weeks after it's smoked, the THC only stays in the person's system for a few hours. Therefore, Martin was indeed high when Zimmerman saw him.

So Trayvon Martin was a burglar, used illegal drugs, broke Zimmerman's nose, and smashed Zimmerman's head against the concrete.

And how does Obama respond to all of this?

Obama said:

"If I had a son, he'd look like Trayvon."

207) Falsely said that Secretary of State John Kerry had not been on his yacht during the regime change in Egypt

In July 2013, the Obama administration falsely said that Secretary of State John Kerry had not been on his yacht during the regime change in Egypt.

Even after CBS news presented the Obama administration with photographic evidence that Kerry had been on his yacht during that time, the Obama administration still continued to falsely claim that Kerry had not been on his yacht.

CBS News reported:

On Thursday night, CBS News obtained a photo of Kerry on his boat and sent it to the State Department, asking whether they still stand by their denial that Kerry was on a boat.

The response: â Yes.â

208) Said â the planet will boil overâ if African citizens adopt a first world standard of living

In July 2013, Obama said â the planet will boil overâ if African citizens adopt a first world standard of living.

â the planet will boil over

209) â Among those who Strongly Approve of the president, more fear the Tea Party than radical Muslims.â

In June 2013, Rasmussen conducted a poll to find out what people considered to be the â nationâ s top terror threat.â

Reporting on the results of the poll, Rasmussen wrote:

â Among those who Strongly Approve of the president, more fear the Tea Party than radical Muslims.â

210) Illegally forced 2,200 privately owned auto dealerships to close, which destroyed 120,000 jobs

In 2009, Obama illegally forced 2,200 privately owned auto dealerships to close. These dealerships had employed 120,000 people.

211) Subsidized the production of alcoholic beverages

In June 2013, Breitbart reported:

The USDA Rural Development agency also touted a program to subsidize the Wine Barn LLC in â marketing and increasing production of its Kansas produced wine.â That cost $25,000. The USDA Rural Development also said it would hand $300,000 to the Mackinaw Trail Winery in Michigan, $100,000 for the Appleton Creek Winery in New York, $162,500 for the Old Westminster Winery in Maryland, and tens of thousands of dollars to wineries in Nebraska and Iowa.

Liquor is the name of the game for the USDA, apparently â theyâ re also subsidizing the production of vodka in North Carolina, Bloody Mary mix in West Virginia, and hard cider in Virginia.

212) Gave 23,994 tax refunds worth a total of $46,378,040 to illegal aliens who all used the same address

In 2011, the IRS gave 23,994 tax refunds worth a total of $46,378,040 to illegal aliens who all used the same address in Atlanta, Ga.

213) Sued private businesses for using â racistâ criminal background checks to screen employees

In June 2013, the Obama administration filed lawsuits against Dollar General and BMW for using criminal background checks to screen employees. The Obama administration claimed that such background checks were â racist.â

214) Used tax money to pay federal employees to organize protests against George Zimmerman

In March and April of 2012, Obama used tax money to pay federal employees to organize protests against George Zimmerman.

215) Illegally continued giving foreign aid to Egypt after it had a coup

Federal law requires that U.S. foreign aid to Egypt be ended if and when Egypt has a coup. However, after Egypt had a coup in July 2013, the Obama administration said that it would continue giving foreign aid to Egypt.

216) Broke promise to end Bushâs surveillance of U.S. citizens who were not suspected of committing a crime

In August 2007, Obama promised that he would end Bushâs surveillance of U.S. citizens who were not suspected of committing a crime. However, in June 2013, such surveillance was still being conducted.

217) Spent $3 million to study the health risks of dating Mexican prostitutes

In July 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration had spent $3 million to study the health risks of dating Mexican prostitutes.

218) Lied about the cost of IRS conferences

In June 2013 it was reported that the Obama administration had lied about the cost of IRS conferences. While the actual cost was $50 million, the Obama administration had claimed that the cost was only 1% of that amount.

219) Spent $890,000 per year on service fees for bank accounts that had no money

In April 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration was spending $890,000 each year on service fees for bank accounts that did not have any money in them. At the time, the government had 13,712 empty accounts which it was supposed to have closed, but which it had kept open anyway.

220) Spent $34 million to construct a new military headquarters in Afghanistan after U.S. military commanders said they did not want it

After U.S. military commanders said in 2010 that they did not want a new headquarters in Afghanistan, the Obama administration spent $34 million to build it anyway.

221) Falsely said that his scandals were âphonyâ

In July 2013, Obama said

âWith an endless parade of distractions, political posturing and phony scandals, Washington has taken its eye off the ball.â

These scandals are not âphony.â I have cited a huge number of sources in this list to show that these scandals are real.

222) Falsely guaranteed that people could keep their doctor

Before Obamacare was passed, Obama said:

â Here is a guarantee that Iâ ve madeâ ! If youâ ve got a doctor that you like, you will be able to keep your doctor.â

However, in July 2013, the Obama administration said that people â mayâ be able to keep their doctor.

223) Falsely said the auto bailouts prevented Detroit from going bankrupt

Obama falsely stated that the auto bailouts prevented Detroit from going bankrupt.

224) Illegally seized a privately owned gun from a law abiding citizen

After a jury found George Zimmerman not guilty, the Obama administration announced that it would seize his gun. This violated the double jeopardy clause of the U.S. Constitution, as well as the takings clause of the fifth amendment.

225) Broke his promise to have real time verifiability of Obamacare subsidies

In July 2013, Investorâ s Business Daily wrote:

Meanwhile, the administration tacitly admitted last week that its promise of real-time verification of a consumerâ s eligibility to buy subsidized coverage at an ObamaCare exchange wasnâ t exactly panning out.

Under ObamaCare, only those who donâ t have access to â affordableâ insurance at work can buy coverage in an exchange, and only those below certain income levels are eligible for tax subsidies.

Rather than a high-tech instant check, the administration told states they could simply take the applicantsâ word for it when it comes to their employer-provided coverage, as well as their â projected annual household income,â without the need for â further verification.â

226) Signed health care reform whose rules contradicted each other

Obamacare allows insurance companies to charge higher premiums for smokers. At the same time, it prohibits insurance companies from charging more than three times as much for older people as it does for younger people. In June 2013, Obamaâ s computer programmers said that they had been unable to write a computer program that simultaneously agreed with both of these rules.

227) Signed a health care reform plan that is so horrible that even the IRS agents who run it donâ t want to participate in it

Obama hired 16,500 new IRS agents to run Obamacare.

But Obamacare is so awful that even the IRS agents who run it donâ t want to participate in it.

In July 2013, the National Treasury Employees Union, which represents the IRS employees who will be running Obamacare, provided a form letter to its members to send to their Congressmen. The letter stated:

â I am very concerned about legislation that has been introduced by Congressman Dave Camp to push federal employees out of the Federal Employees Health Benefits Program and into the insurance exchanges established under the Affordable Care Act.â

When asked about this, IRS chief Daniel Werfel responded by saying:

â I donâ t want to speak for the NTEU, but Iâ ll offer a perspective as a federal employee myself and a federal employee at the IRS. And that is, we have right now as employees of the government, of the IRS, affordable health care coverage. I think the ACA was designed to provide an option or an alternative for individuals that do not. And all else being equal, I think if youâ re an individual who is satisfied with your health care coverage, youâ re probably in a better position to stick with that coverage than go through the change of moving into a different environment and going through that process. So I think for a federal employee, I think more likely, and I would â can speak for myself, I would prefer to stay with the current policy that Iâ m pleased with rather than go through a change if I donâ t need to go through that change.â

228) Tried to tax small businesses at a higher rate than corporations

Obama raised the top tax rate on small businesses to 39.6%, and tried to lower the top tax rate on corporations to 28%.

229) Illegally prevented individual employees of small businesses from choosing their own plan during the first year of Obamacare

Obamacare requires that individual employees of small businesses be allowed to choose their own insurance plan during the first year of Obamacare. However, in March 2013, the Obama administration announced that it would not be allowing them to make this choice during the first year.

230) Falsely said that Obamacare had not hurt jobs

In July 2013, the Obama administration said that Obamacare had not hurt jobs.

However, in the real world, in response to the medical device tax that is part of Obamacare, some medical device manufacturers have announced plans to layoff employees, including Welch Allyn (275 planned layoffs), Stryker (1,170 planned layoffs), and Medtronic (1,000 planned layoffs). In December 2012, Al Franken, Elizabeth Warren, John Kerry, and 15 other Democrats who supported the passage of Obamacare wrote a letter to Harry Reid, asking him to delay the tax on medical devices, claiming that the tax would hurt job creation in their districts. The New York Times reported that Obamacare â sharply penalizes full-time employment in favor of part-time employment.â In response to the employer mandate of Obamacare, some restaurants have announced plans to switch some of their employees from full time to part time, including some franchises of Olive Garden, Red Lobster, Wendyâ s, Taco Bell, White Castle, and Fatburger. Community College of Allegheny County switched 200 professors and 200 other employees from full time to part time in response to Obamacare. Clint Benjamin, an English professor at Community College of Allegheny County, said that this would reduce his own monthly pay by $600. Also in response to the employer mandate of Obamacare, other colleges have announced plans to switch some of their employees from full time to part time, including Floridaâ s Palm Beach State College, Ohioâ s Youngstown State University, and New Jerseyâ s Kean University. In Virginia, thousands of government employees had their hours reduced because of Obamacare. The Carnegie Museum of Pittsburgh reduced the hours of 48 of its employees in response to Obamacare. Regal Entertainment Group, the largest chain of movie theaters in the country, announced that it would be switching thousands of its employees from full time to part time in response to the Obamacare mandate. Utahâ s Granite School District reduced the hours of 1,200 of its employees in response to Obamacare. In response to Obamacare, many Wal-Mart stores have stopped hiring full time workers. In response to Obamacare, Forever 21 reduced its employeesâ hours. As of September 2013, more than 200 public-sector employers had reduced their employeesâ hours in response to Obamacare. Sea World reduced the weekly hours of its part time employees from 32 to 28 in response to Obamacare. Landsâ End limited its part time employees to 29 hours per week in response to Obamacare. As of September 2013, at least 34 universities and colleges had reduced some of their employeesâ hours in response to Obamacare. In September 2013, it was reported that in response to Obamacare, Indiana University would be laying off 50 of its employees and switching them to a temp agency. In July 2013, leaders of the Teamsters, UFCW, and UNITE-HERE sent a letter to Harry Reid and Nancy Pelosi which said that Obamacare will â destroy the foundation of the 40 hour work week that is the backbone of the American middle classâ | the law creates an incentive for employers to keep employeesâ work hours below 30 hours a week. Numerous employers have begun to cut workersâ hours to avoid this obligation.â

231) Falsely said that health insurance premiums would be reduced by $2,500 per family by the end of his first term

In February 2008, Obama said:

â We are going to work with you to lower your premiums by $2,500. We will not wait 20 years from now to do it, or 10 years from now to do it. We will do it by the end of my first term as president.â

However, by the time his first term was over, family premiums had gotten bigger, not smaller. The increase was $3,065 per family.

232) Illegally gave Obamacare waiver to Massachusetts

In August 2013, Obama gave an Obamacare waiver to Massachusetts.

This waiver was illegal for two reasons. First, the waiver was not approved by the U.S. Congress. Second, the U.S. Constitution requires that the federal government treat all states the same.

233) Betrayed the unions that helped him to get elected

In January 2013, the Wall Street Journal reported:

Some Unions Grow Wary of Health Law They Backed

Labor unions enthusiastically backed the Obama administrationâ s health-care overhaul when it was up for debate. Now that the law is rolling out, some are turning sour.

Union leaders say many of the lawâ s requirements will drive up the costs for their health-care plans and make unionized workers less competitive. Among other things, the law eliminates the caps on medical benefits and prescription drugs used as cost-containment measures in many health-care plans. It also allows children to stay on their parentsâ plans until they turn 26.

Some 20 million Americans are covered by the health-care plans at issue

Top officers at the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, the AFL-CIO and other large labor groups plan to keep pressing the Obama administration to expand the federal subsidies to these jointly run plans, warning that unionized employers may otherwise drop coverage. A handful of unions say they already have examined whether it makes sense to shift workers off their current plans

â We are going back to the administration to say that this is not acceptable,â said Ken Hall, general secretary-treasurer for the Teamsters, which has 1.6 million members and dependents in health-care plans. Other unions involved in the push include the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union and Unite Here

Sheet Metal Workers Local 85 in Atlanta, which has about 1,900 members. Next year it must lift the $250,000 annual cap on the amount it will pay for medical claims. The lawâ s requirements will add between 50 cents to $1 an hour to the cost of members' compensation package

234) Illegally changed Obamacare to benefit members of Congress and their staff

Obamacare was passed by the House and Senate, and signed by President Obama.

Three years later, members of Congress and their staff complained that Obamacare was going to cost them a lot of money, and said that this would likely cause a brain drain among their staff. In response to this, Obama made changes to Obamacare so that these things would not happen. However, Obama's actions were illegal, because he made these changes without Congress voting on them first.

The New York Times wrote of this:

...the language of the health care law requires Congressional employees to obtain health insurance through an exchange created by the law, but other parts of the federal legal code restrict the ability of the federal government to pay the usual employer share for group insurance programs approved by the Office of Personnel Management.

A straightforward reading of the law thus means that Congressional staff members, starting in January 2014, will have to obtain insurance through the Affordable Care Act but pay for it on their own without the normal contribution from their employer ... Congress. This would be a multi-thousand-dollar income hit for those affected ... many ... would potentially feel the pain, giving rise to concerns over a potential brain drain of Congressional staff members finding other employment.

...the federal personnel office initially ruled that Congressional staff members would not be eligible for the subsidies, and then changed this decision under pressure from the White House ...

235) Told General Mills to stop making true claims about Cheerios

For quite some time, advertisements for the breakfast cereal Cheerios made the true and accurate claim that eating Cheerios lowers a person's cholesterol.

However, even though this claim is true and accurate, in May 2009, the Obama administration ordered General Mills, the maker of Cheerios, to stop making this claim in its commercials.

236) Illegally avoided enforcing the required income verification of people who receive subsidies for Obamacare exchanges

Even though Obamacare requires the government to verify the income of people who receive subsidies for Obamacare exchanges, in August 2013 it was reported that Obama would not be verifying their incomes.

237) Placed a 40% tax on so-called "Cadillac" insurance plans

Obamacare includes a 40% tax on so-called "Cadillac" insurance plans. In August 2013, unions that supported the passage of Obamacare complained about this tax.

238) Made medical care for special needs children more expensive

In August 2013, it was reported that Obamacare would make it more expensive for the parents of special needs children to pay for their children's medical equipment and specialized private schools that cater to their medical needs.

239) Responded to the Benghazi attack by going back to bed, and then later got up and headed off to Las Vegas for a fundraiser

In September 2012, after Obama found out that U.S. citizens were being killed in Benghazi, Libya, he went back to bed. After he got up in the morning, he went off to Las Vegas for a fundraiser.

240) Illegally delayed the caps on out of pocket health care payments without Congressional approval

As it was passed by the House and Senate and signed by Obama, Obamacare sets caps on the out of pocket payments that people pay for health care, and these caps were legally required to take effect in January 2014.

However, in August 2013, Obama delayed these caps until January 2015.

Because Obama imposed this delay without it first being approved by Congress, Obama's action was illegal. The President does not have the legal authority to change an Act that was passed by Congress, without that change first being approved by Congress. What Obama did here is not the act of a President whose power is limited by a written constitution, but is, instead, the action of a dictator.

241) Holds a double standard when it comes to supporting â gun freeâ zones

In December 2012, a petition at whitehouse.gov stated:

â Eliminate armed guards for the President, Vice-President, and their families, and establish Gun Free Zones around themâ

â Gun Free Zones are supposed to protect our children, and some politicians wish to strip us of our right to keep and bear arms. Those same politicians and their families are currently under the protection of armed Secret Service agents. If Gun Free Zones are sufficient protection for our children, then Gun Free Zones should be good enough for politicians.â

The Obama administration rejected the proposal.

242) Outlawed the low-premium, high-deductible health insurance that some people prefer

Obamacare bans the low-premium, high-deductible health insurance that some people prefer.

243) Lied about how many people he had helped to protect from mortgage fraud

In August 2013, it was reported that less than one month before the 2012 election, the Obama administration had lied about the number of people that it had helped to protect from mortgage fraud, as well as the total amount of money involved. In August 2013, when the truth was revealed, Newsbusters reported:

â Thus, the number of defendants fell by 80% from what DOJ claimed less than a month before the presidential election. The number of victims fell by 76%. The amount of losses involved dropped by over 90%.â

244) Falsely said the NSA review was being conducted by an â independentâ body

In August 2013, Obama said that he would establish an â independentâ investigation of NSA surveillance.

However, three days later, it was reported that this so-called â independentâ investigation would be run by James Clapper, who had falsely testified to Congress that the NSA was not collecting information on U.S. citizens.

245) Forced taxpayers to bail out the student debt of people with six figure incomes

Obama forced taxpayers to bail out the student debt of people with six figure incomes. In February 2015, Forbes wrote:

10 Reasons Why the Cost of Obama's Student Loan Plan is Exploding

Let's say you earned an MBA from a private school and left with a loan balance of $90,000 (with a 5 percent interest rate), including undergraduate loans. After you graduate, you land a job in the business office at an elite private university. Your starting salary is $70,000 with annual three percent raises. Based on your debt-to-income ratio, you qualify for IBR and enroll. After a big promotion in your sixth year, your salary is bumped to $110,000. By your 10th year you earn $124,000, at which point your outstanding balance is forgiven under Public Service Loan Forgiveness.

Your total loan payments would be $62,000 in principal and interest over those 10 years, but if you had fully paid off your loan over that time, they would have been $114,000. Thanks to PSLF, the federal government just handed you a check for $52,000. Again, you still qualify for this benefit despite having never earned less than $70,000 a year over your repayment term and regardless of the fact that you earn a very high income when the debt is forgiven.

246) Closed off public roads so he could buy books

In August 2013, Obama had public roads closed to the public so he could go to a bookstore. Why didn't he just order the books online?

247) Gave illegal EPA exemption to one oil refinery, and would not say which refinery it was

The EPA has a very expensive ethanol mandate that applies to all oil refineries. However, in August 2013, it was reported that Obama had given one oil refinery an exemption from this mandate.

This exemption is illegal for two reasons. First, the exemption was not approved by Congress. And secondly, the Constitution requires that federal laws apply equally to everyone.

In addition, Obama refused to say which refinery it was that received this exemption, which is completely contrary to his repeated promises of transparency.

248) Created new fines for charitable hospitals that give treatment to uninsured people

In August 2013, it was reported that Obamacare creates new fines for charitable hospitals that give treatment to uninsured people.

249) Blamed poverty on zip codes instead of on behavior

In July 2013, HUD Secretary Shaun Donovan said:

Unfortunately, in too many of our hardest-hit communities, no matter how hard a child or her parents work, the life chances of that child, even her lifespan, is determined by the ZIP Code she grows up in. This is simply wrong.

However, let's consider two groups of people in the U.S. The first group has a poverty rate of 2%. The second group has a poverty rate of 76%.

The first group consists of people who followed all three of these steps:

- 1) Finish high school.
- 2) Get a full-time job.
- 3) Wait until age 21 and get married before having children.

The second group consists of people who followed zero of those three steps.

Among people who follow all three of these steps, the poverty rate is 2%.

Among people who follow zero of these steps, the poverty rate is 76%.

(My source for that information is this article, which refers to this PDF, and the relevant data is on page 15 of the PDF. The study uses data from the U.S. Census Bureau.)

250) Nominated a telecommunications lobbyist and Obama fundraiser to head the FCC

In May 2013, Obama nominated Tom Wheeler to head the FCC. Wheeler had previously been the head of the National Cable and Telecommunications Association, which is a lobbying organization for the cable TV industry. He had also been the head of CTIA, a lobbying organization for cellphone carriers. In addition, he had also been a fundraiser for Obama.

251) Tried to violate defendants' right to a fair trial

In August 2013, Reuters reported:

A secretive U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration unit is funneling information from intelligence intercepts, wiretaps, informants and a massive database of telephone records to authorities across the nation to help them launch criminal investigations of Americans.

Although these cases rarely involve national security issues, documents reviewed by Reuters show that law enforcement agents have been directed to conceal how such investigations truly begin — not only from defense lawyers but also sometimes from prosecutors and judges.

The undated documents show that federal agents are trained to — recreate — the investigative trail to effectively cover up where the information originated, a practice that some experts say violates a defendant's Constitutional right to a fair trial. If defendants don't know how an investigation began, they cannot know to ask to review potential sources of exculpatory evidence — information that could reveal entrapment, mistakes or biased witnesses.

— I have never heard of anything like this at all, — said Nancy Gertner, a Harvard Law School professor who served as a federal judge from 1994 to 2011. Gertner and other legal experts said the program sounds more troubling than recent disclosures that the National Security Agency has been collecting domestic phone records. The NSA effort is geared toward stopping terrorists; the DEA program targets common criminals, primarily drug dealers.

— It is one thing to create special rules for national security, — Gertner said. — Ordinary crime is entirely different. It sounds like they are phonying up investigations.

252) Threatened internet service providers with contempt of court if they did not install surveillance software

In August 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration had pressured internet service providers to install surveillance software, so that it could monitor internet traffic without a warrant. Internet service providers who did not cave in to this pressure were threatened by the Obama administration with contempt of court. This violated the Constitution's ban on warrantless searches. In addition, the executive branch does not have the legal authority to declare contempt of court, as this power is reserved exclusively for the judicial branch.

253) Sued Louisiana to try to keep low income black children trapped in horrible schools, and lied about why he did it

In August 2013, the Obama administration sued Louisiana to try to bring an end to its school voucher program — a program which had just been passed in 2012.

Under the Louisiana program, both of the following criteria had to be met in order for a student to get a school voucher. First, the student must come from a family whose income is below 250% of the poverty level. And second, the current public school that the student is attending must be rated as 'C' or below.

86% of students who received vouchers had used those vouchers to flee from public schools which had been rated as 'D' or 'F'.

Only the most vulnerable children were eligible for the vouchers — the poorest students attending the worst schools.

Obama's reason for filing the lawsuit was that — many of those vouchers impeded the desegregation process.

However, in response to Obama's claim that the vouchers discriminated against blacks, Louisiana Education Superintendent John White pointed out that almost all of the students using the vouchers were black, and said that — it's a little ridiculous — for Obama to claim that these vouchers caused discrimination against blacks. The Washington Post reported that 90% of the students who received the vouchers were black.

It's also worth noting that only students whose parents requested such vouchers were eligible to participate in the voucher program. Obama was therefore claiming that parents wanted their own children to be discriminated against. Obama was extremely wrong on this. These parents did not want their children to be discriminated against. In reality, what these parents wanted was for their children to have a chance at a better education.

This also makes Obama a hypocrite, because while he was living in both Chicago and Washington D.C., he always sent his own children to private schools. Does Obama really want us to believe that he subjected his own children to racial discrimination by sending them to private schools?

Furthermore, two different studies, one by Ph.D. students at the University of Arkansas, and the other sponsored by the state of Louisiana, both found that this voucher program made racial integration better, not worse. This further proves that Obama is a liar, and that his entire claim against these vouchers is bogus.

In September 2013, the Washington Post editorial board criticized Obama in this editorial, which is titled, â The Justice Department bids to trap poor, black children in ineffective schools.â

In April 2014, the Daily Signal published this article, which is titled, â Meet one of the students Eric Holder is blocking by standing in the schoolhouse door.â

Fortunately, in November 2015, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled against Obamaâ s attempt to keep low income black children trapped in horrible government schools. The courtâ s ruling can be read here.

254) Encouraged 40,000 longshoremen to quit the AFL-CIO

In September 2013, it was reported that 40,000 longshoremen had quit the AFL-CIO, and that they had cited Obamacare as one of their reasons for doing so.

255) Paid $67 million to so-called â volunteersâ

In August 2013, it was reported that Obama has paid $67 million to so-called â volunteersâ to teach people about Obamacare.

256) Illegally used Obamacare to fund pre-K education without approval from Congress

In August 2013, it was reported that Obama had illegally used Obamacare to fund pre-K education without approval from Congress.

257) Obamaâ s â hunger-freeâ program left students feeling hungry

In December 2010, Obama signed the â Healthy, Hunger-Free Kids Act,â which limited school lunches to a maximum of 850 calories. Students complained that this so-called â hunger-freeâ program left them feeling hungry.

258) Signed health care reform that is so terrible that less than 3% of federal employees want to join it

In August 2013, it was reported that less than 3% of federal employees wanted to participate in Obamacare.

259) Avoided doing background checks on Obamacare â navigatorsâ

In August 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration would not be doing background checks on Obamacare â navigators,â despite the fact that these â navigatorsâ would have access to peopleâ s personal, private, and financial information.

260) Illegally paid White House interns less than minimum wage

In June 2013, a federal court ruled that Fox Searchlight Pictures had violated the minimum wage law by using unpaid interns. Two months later, it was reported that the Obama administration was using unpaid interns. In addition to this being illegal, it also makes Obama a hypocrite, because he had previously spoken out in favor of raising the minimum wage.

261) Said broccoli was his favorite food

In July 2013, Obama said that broccoli was his favorite food. However, before he made this claim, even though the media showed many pictures of him eating, and even though there were many articles published about the foods that he ate, as far as I know, none of those pictures or articles ever showed or mentioned him eating broccoli. While this may seem trivial, it shows that there is nothing â absolutely nothing at all â that Obama is not willing to lie about.

262) Illegally missed half of Obamacare's deadlines

In August 2013, it was reported that Obama had illegally missed 41 of Obamacare's 82 deadlines.

263) Tried to give illegal Obamacare subsidies to unions without Congressional approval

In August 2013 it was reported that Obama was trying to give illegal Obamacare subsidies to unions, without approval from Congress.

264) Made it harder for writers, actors, artists, and musicians to obtain health insurance

In September 2013, the Weekly Standard reported:

Nancy Pelosi waxed rhapsodic in 2010 as she imagined the benefits of Obamacare: "Think of an economy where people could be an artist or a photographer or a writer without worrying about keeping their day job in order to have health insurance."

But as Obamacare begins to kick in, artists, photographers, writers, and other members of the "creative class" who have access to health insurance programs through numerous professional organizations will lose that coverage.

Up until now professional organizations have worked with insurance providers to craft reduced-rate plans for their members. But thanks to the fine print in the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (PPACA), on January 1, 2014, many of these plans will fail to pass legal muster.

The College Art Association website posted a notice this month: "The New York Life Insurance Company recently informed CAA that it will no longer offer catastrophic healthcare coverage previously available to CAA members."

The Entertainment Industry Group Insurance Trust (TEIGIT) website posts the following notice: "All individual and/or Sole Proprietor Health Insurance will terminate January 1, 2014. This includes plans acquired as Members of our Affiliated Associations & their groups." Those affiliated associations include the American Federation of Television and Radio Artists, the Dramatists Guild, the Graphic Arts Guild, NY Women in Film and Television, and many others.

This will affect huge numbers of freelance artists, musicians, disc jockeys, and so forth.

freelance artists, designers, and musicians forced to enter the state-run exchanges are far more likely to see their rates go up

Pelosi's vision of a world full of carefree artists, musicians, and writers is a mirage and becoming fainter the closer we get to January 1.

265) Banned the sale of flavored cigarettes, but gave an exemption to the most dangerous flavor

In September 2009, the Obama administration banned the sale of flavored cigarettes, but exempted menthol from the ban. Although I am opposed to this ban, it's this exemption that I find to be the most troubling. If Obama thinks that flavored cigarettes are so dangerous that they deserve to be banned, then why did he exempt one particular flavor?

The Obama administration later announced that menthol cigarettes were more dangerous than other flavors such as cherry, cloves, chocolate, coconut, and cinnamon, but still continued to exempt menthol from the ban. If Obama thinks that flavored cigarettes are so dangerous that they should be banned, then why did he knowingly continue to give an exemption to the most dangerous flavor?

266) Tried to censor the Washington Post

In August 2013, the Washington Post reported:

The Obama administration referred all questions for this article to John DeLong, the NSA's director of compliance, who answered questions freely in a 90-minute interview. DeLong and members of the NSA communications staff said he could be quoted "by name and title" on some of his answers after an unspecified internal review. The Post said it would not permit the editing of quotes. Two days later, White House and NSA spokesmen said that none of DeLong's comments could be quoted on the record and sent instead a prepared statement in his name. The Post declines to accept the substitute language as quotations from DeLong.

267) Dumbed down math education to make wrong answers acceptable

In August 2013, the Daily Caller reported:

Quick: what's 3×4 ?

If you said 11 "or, hell, if you said 7, pi, or infinity squared" that's just fine under the Common Core, the new national curriculum that the Obama administration will impose on American public school students this fall.

In a pretty amazing YouTube video, Amanda August, a curriculum coordinator in a suburb of Chicago called Grayslake, explains that getting the right answer in math just doesn't matter as long as kids can explain the necessarily faulty reasoning they used to get to that wrong answer.

"Even if they said, '3 x 4 was 11,' if they were able to explain their reasoning and explain how they came up with their answer really in, umm, words and oral explanation, and they showed it in the picture but they just got the final number wrong, we're really more focused on the how," August says in the video.

268) Broke his promise to label genetically modified food

Before the 2008 election, Obama promised to require labeling of genetically modified food. He broke that promise.

269) Asked the Supreme Court to allow warrantless cell phone searches

In August 2013, the Obama administration asked the U.S Supreme Court to allow warrantless cell phone searches.

270) Used an armed SWAT team to check for water pollution

In September 2013, the Alaska Dispatch reported:

When agents with the Alaska Environmental Crimes Task Force surged out of the wilderness around the remote community of Chicken wearing body armor and jackets emblazoned with POLICE in big, bold letters, local placer miners didn't quite know what to think.

Did it really take eight armed men and a squad-size display of paramilitary force to check for dirty water? Some of the miners, who run small businesses, say they felt intimidated.

Miners suggest it might have been better all around if officials had just shown up at the door â as they used to do â and said they wanted to check the water.

The EPA has refused to publicly explain why it used armed officers as part of what it called a â multi-jurisdictionalâ investigation of possible Clean Water Act violations in the area.

271) Purchased 1.6 billion rounds of ammunition for the Department of Homeland Security to use in the U.S.

In March 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration had purchased 1.6 billion rounds of ammunition for the Department of Homeland Security to use in the U.S.

272) Released 2,837 convicted sex offenders from prison

In September 2013, the Obama administration released 2,837 convicted sex offenders from prison.

Although the Obama administration had released these sex offenders in response to a court order to alleviate prison overcrowding, it could have released non-violent drug offenders instead. See #7 on this list for how Obama has carried out the biggest war against medical marijuana of any President in history.

Apparently, Obama thinks that people with doctorsâ prescriptions for medical marijuana are a bigger threat than rapists and child molesters.

273) Refused to fire or prosecute Obamacare employee who released private info of 2,400 people

In September 2013, it was reported that an Obamacare employee had released the private information of 2,400 people. Obama refused to fire or prosecute this Obamacare employee.

274) Tried to monitor 80% of all credit card transactions

In September 2013, it was reported that the Obama administration was trying to monitor 80% of all credit card transactions.

275) Tried to censor the AFL-CIO

In September 2013, Associated Press reported:

The AFL-CIO on Wednesday approved a resolution critical of parts of President Barack Obamaâ s health care law in spite of efforts by White House officials to discourage the labor federation from making its concerns so prominent.

The strongly worded resolution says the Affordable Care Act will drive up the costs of union-sponsored health plans to the point that workers and employers are forced to abandon them. Labor unions still support the lawâ s overall goals of reducing health costs and bringing coverage to all Americans, the resolution says, but adds that the law is being implemented in a way that is â highly disruptiveâ to union health care plans.

Some individual unions have complained about the lawâ s impact for months. The resolution marks the first time the nationâ s largest labor federation has gone on record embracing that view. Unions were among the most enthusiastic backers of the law when it passed in 2010.

A labor official told The Associated Press that White House officials had been calling labor leaders for days to urge them not to voice their concerns in the form of a resolution.

276) Falsely said that he had not declared a â red lineâ on Syria

In August 2012, while talking about Syria, Obama said:

â A red line for us is we start seeing a whole bunch of chemical weapons moving around or being utilized.â

However, in September 2013, while talking about Syria, Obama said:

â I didnâ t set a red line.â

277) Falsely gave himself credit for John Kerryâ s idea about Syria

In September 2013, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry suggested that Syria turn over all of its chemical weapons to an international body.

The Obamaâ s administration initially responded to Kerryâ s statement by saying that Kerry had not been serious, and that his statement had just been a â rhetoricalâ answer to a hypothetical question.

However, after former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said that Kerryâ s idea made sense, Obama falsely stated that he had talked about the idea a week earlier.

278) Made it more difficult and bureaucratic for restaurant employees to collect automatic tips from parties of eight or more

In September 2013, the Obama administration announced new paperwork requirements for restaurants that collect automatic tips from parties of eight or more. These new regulations create additional paperwork for restaurants each and every time a party of eight or more leaves an automatic tip. It also means that restaurant employees would have to wait extra time to receive these automatic tips from parties of eight or more. In addition, in some cases, restaurant employees might not get any tip at all from some parties of eight or more, because their employer might decide that the paperwork is too burdensome, and stop collecting automatic tips altogether.

Thereâ s also the fact that Obama imposed these new regulations without approval from Congress, which means that Obamaâ s actions were illegal.

279) Secretly and illegally reversed NSA restrictions without approval from Congress

In September 2013, the Washington Post reported:

The Obama administration secretly won permission from a surveillance court in 2011 to reverse restrictions on the National Security Agencyâ s use of intercepted phone calls and e-mails, permitting the agency to search deliberately for Americansâ communications in its massive databases, according to interviews with government officials and recently declassified material.

In addition, the court extended the length of time that the NSA is allowed to retain intercepted U.S. communications from five years to six years â and more under special circumstances, according to the documents, which include a recently released 2011 opinion by U.S. District Judge John D. Bates, then chief judge of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Court.

Together the permission to search and to keep data longer expanded the NSA's authority in significant ways without public debate or any specific authority from Congress. The enlarged authority is part of a fundamental shift in the government's approach to surveillance: collecting first, and protecting Americans' privacy later.

The court decision allowed the NSA to query the vast majority of its e-mail and phone call databases using the e-mail addresses and phone numbers of Americans and legal residents without a warrant, according to Bates's opinion.

The court in 2008 imposed a wholesale ban on such searches at the government's request, said Alex Joel, civil liberties protection officer at the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI). The government included this restriction to remain consistent with NSA policies and procedures that NSA applied to other authorized collection activities," he said.

280) Encouraged employers to use temp agencies

In September 2013, it was reported that in response to Obamacare, Indiana University would be laying off 50 of its employees and switching them to a temp agency.

In June 2013, Time magazine wrote:

Why Temp Agencies Are Learning to Love the Affordable Care Act

Staffing companies like Robert Half International and On Assignment have seen their stock prices soar since President Obama's reelection in November, as the election made it nearly certain that the implementation of the law would continue as planned. "In general [Obamacare] is viewed as something that will lead to increases in the penetration rate of temporary workers," says Tobey Sommer, an analyst with SunTrust Robinson Humphrey. Firms like Robert Half International are especially well positioned to benefit from the law, Sommer says, because they specialize in small and medium-sized companies, the very sort that may be using temporary workers to help them stay below that all-important 50-worker mark.

There's also an opening for staffing companies to present themselves as experts in the labor rules of the Obamacare law, and as a resource that other businesses can turn to for help with its many rules and regulations. "The increasing burden of these regulations will cause some clients to throw up their hands and say, 'I can't deal with all of this,'" says Sommer. And when that happens, a full-service staffing company could be the perfect place to seek help navigating the unknown waters of Obamacare.

281) Encouraged layoffs of health care workers

In September 2013, it was reported that in response to Obamacare, Emory Healthcare, which is in Georgia, would be laying off more than 100 of its employees.

In September 2013, it was reported that in response to Obamacare, the Cleveland Clinic would be laying off some of its employees.

282) Encouraged insurance companies to reduce their customers' choices of doctors and hospitals

In September 2013, the Los Angeles Times reported:

The doctor can't see you now.

Consumers may hear that a lot more often after getting health insurance under President Obama's Affordable Care Act.

To hold down premiums, major insurers in California have sharply limited the number of doctors and hospitals available to patients in the state's new health insurance market opening Oct. 1.

New data reveal the extent of those cuts in California, a crucial test bed for the federal healthcare law.

These diminished medical networks are fueling growing concerns that many patients will still struggle to get care despite the nation's biggest healthcare expansion in half a century.

Consumers could see long wait times, a scarcity of specialists and loss of a longtime doctor.

In September 2013, the New York Times reported:

Under President Obama's health care law, many insurers are significantly limiting the choices of doctors and hospitals available to consumers.

From California to Illinois to New Hampshire, and in many states in between, insurers are restricting the number of providers who will treat patients in their new health plans.

Insurers have created smaller networks of doctors and hospitals than are typically found in commercial insurance.

Consumers should be prepared for much tighter, narrower networks of doctors and hospitals, said Adam M. Linker, a health policy analyst at the North Carolina Justice Center, a statewide advocacy group.

In a new study, the Health Research Institute of PricewaterhouseCoopers, the consulting company, says that insurers passed over major medical centers when selecting providers in California, Illinois, Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee, among other states.

Juan Carlos Davila, an executive vice president of Blue Shield of California, said the network for its exchange plans did not include the five medical centers of the University of California.

Daniel R. Hawkins Jr., a senior vice president of the National Association of Community Health Centers, which represents 9,000 clinics around the country, said: "Insurers have shown little interest in including us in their provider networks."

Dr. Bruce Siegel, the president of America's Essential Hospitals, formerly known as the National Association of Public Hospitals and Health Systems, said insurers were telling his members: "We don't want you in our network. We are worried about having your patients, who are sick and have complicated conditions."

In New Hampshire, Anthem Blue Cross and Blue Shield, a unit of WellPoint, one of the nation's largest insurers, has touched off a furor by excluding 10 of the state's 26 hospitals from the health plans that it will sell through the insurance exchange.

283) Encouraged a hospital to close

In September 2013, WCYB reported:

Jonesville, Va. â A local hospital is closing its doors.

Wellmont Health System is citing unprecedented changes in health care as the reason for closing Lee Regional Medical Center.

Company officials say three reasons led to the decision reimbursement cuts associated with the Affordable Care Act, extremely low community use of the hospital and a lack of consistent physician coverage.

Lee Regional will cease all operations on October 1.

284) Required doctors to ask patients sexual questions and put their answers in an electronic database

In September 2013, it was reported that Obamacare requires doctors to ask patients personal questions about their sex lives, and to put their answers into an electronic database. Doctors who avoid doing this will be penalized.

Dr. Adam Budzikowski, a New York cardiologist, said these sex question were â insensitive, stupid and very intrusive,â and that he could not think of any reason why a cardiologist would need such information.

Dr. Richard Amerling, an associate professor of medicine at Albert Einstein Medical College, said that a patientâs medical record should be â a story created by you and your doctor solely for your treatment and benefit,â and that Obamacare turns doctor appointments â into an interrogation, and the data will not be confidential.â

The New York Civil Liberties Union said that these requirements were a violation of patientsâ privacy.

The Obama administration said that patients who wished to keep their information out of the electronic database should pay in cash.

285) Listed wrong prices for Obamacare

On September 20, 2013, just 10 days before the Obamacare exchanges were legally required to be ready, it was reported that they had the wrong prices.

286) Made it easier for people to commit health care fraud

In September 2013, CNBC reported:

Deep staff cuts are hitting a federal agency responsible for investigating health care fraud just as Obamacare is due to kick in, leaving less people to investigate an ever-growing crime that costs taxpayers billions of dollars.

And in a perverse twist, the funding cuts at the Health and Human Services Departmentâs Inspector Generalâs Office might save money in the short term for the U.S. taxpayer. But over the long run, more money that could have been recouped from the fraud cases now going unpursued, is being left on the table, the agency said.

For every $1 spent on health-care fraud probes, nearly $8 is recouped in fines, restitution or settlements, according to HHS.

287) Included a so-called â family glitchâ in his health care reform

In September 2013, USA Today reported:

A so-called “family glitch” in the 2010 health care law threatens to cost some families thousands of dollars in health insurance costs and leave up to 500,000 children without coverage, insurance and health care analysts say.

That’s unless Congress fixes the problem, which seems unlikely given the House’s latest move Friday to strip funding from the law, which is also called the Affordable Care Act.

Congress defined “affordable” as 9.5% or less of an employee’s household income, mostly to make sure people did not leave their workplace plans for subsidized coverage through the exchanges. But the error was that it only applies to the employee and not his or her family. So, if an employer offers a woman affordable insurance, but doesn’t provide it for her family, they cannot get subsidized help through the state health exchanges.

That can make a huge difference; the Kaiser Family Foundation said an average plan for an individual is about $5,600, but it goes up to $15,700 for families.

288) Made it harder for Canadian politicians to get health care

Canada has had so-called “universal health care” for a long time.

However, when Robert Bourassa, the premier of Quebec, Canada, needed cancer treatment, he came to the United States and paid for his health care with his own money.

And when Canadian Liberal MP Belinda Stronach needed cancer treatment, she also came to the United States and paid for her health care with her own money.

And when Newfoundland and Labrador Premier Danny Williams needed heart surgery, he, too, came to the United States and paid for his health care with his own money.

Now that Obama has given the U.S. so-called “universal health care,” where will Canadian politicians go when they get sick?

289) Gave married couples an annual tax of up to $11,028 for being married instead of single

In front of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Obama administration argued that Obamacare is a tax.

According to the Obamacare calculator, Obamacare places an annual tax on married couples for being married instead of single. The amount of this tax depends upon the ages, incomes, and parental status of the married couple.

According to the Obamacare calculator, the extreme case of this tax occurs with a 60-year-old married couple with no children, where the two spouses have identical incomes totaling $62,041 per year. Under this scenario, according to the Obamacare calculator, Obamacare gives them an annual tax of \$11,028 for being married instead of single.

290) Gave people an annual tax increase of up to $12,214 for earning one more dollar of income

In front of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Obama administration argued that Obamacare is a tax.

Obamacare gives some people a tax increase if they increase their income by one dollar. The amount of this tax increase depends upon the person's age, income, and marital status.

According to the Obamacare calculator, the extreme case of this occurs with a 64-year-old married couple with a combined income of $62,041. Under this scenario, according to the Obamacare calculator, Obamacare gives them an annual tax increase of $12,214 when their income increases by one dollar, in the case of their income going from $62,040 to $62,041.

This amounts to a marginal tax rate of 1,221,400%. That's not a typo - the marginal tax rate on that one dollar of additional income is more than one million per cent.

291) Refused to fire IRS employees who lost $67 million from Obamacare slush fund

In September 2013, it was reported that IRS employees had lost $67 million from a slush fund. Obama refused to fire those employees. Obama had created the slush fund as part of Obamacare.

292) Refused to fire ATF employees who lost 420 million cigarettes

In September 2013, it was reported that ATF employees had lost 420 million cigarettes. Obama refused to fire them.

293) Falsely said his mother's insurance company had refused to pay for her cancer treatment

During the 2008 election campaign, Obama falsely said that his mother's health insurance company had refused to pay for her cancer treatment.

294) Had 19.5 million fake Twitter followers

As of September 2013, Obama had 19.5 million fake Twitter followers.

295) Illegally delayed online registration of Obamacare for small businesses

Obamacare requires that the online registration for small businesses be ready by October 1, 2013. However, five days before that date, Associated Press reported that this deadline would not be met.

296) Encouraged 30,000 Puget Sound grocery workers to vote in favor of authorizing a strike

In September 2013, a union representing 30,000 employees at Safeway, Fred Meyer, QFC, and Albertson's in the Puget Sound area of Washington state voted in favor of authorizing a strike. Union members said that one of their reasons for voting in favor of the strike was that their employers were trying to switch their part time employees from employer provided insurance to the Obamacare exchanges.

297) Waived the U.S. ban on arming terrorists

In September 2013, the Washington Examiner reported:

Obama waives ban on arming terrorists to allow aid to Syrian opposition

President Obama waived a provision of federal law designed to prevent the supply of arms to terrorist groups to clear the way for the U.S. to provide military assistance to a vetted opposition groups fighting Syrian dictator Bashar Assad.

Some elements of the Syrian opposition are associated with radical Islamic terrorist groups, including al Qaeda

The law allows the president to waive those prohibitions if he â determines that the transaction is essential to the national security interests of the United States.â

298) Caused a familyâs monthly insurance premium to increase from $333 to $965

Andy and Amy Mangione and their two sons live in Louisville, Kentucky. In September 2013, they received a letter from Humana, their insurance company, which said that Obamacare would be causing their monthly premium to increase from $333 to $965.

299) Caused Michelle Malkinâs family to lose their health insurance policy

In September 2013, conservative writer Michelle Malkin, who has always opposed Obamacare, wrote:

Like an estimated 22 million other Americans, I am a self-employed small-business owner who buys health insurance for my family directly on the individual market. We have a high-deductible PPO plan that allows us to choose from a wide range of doctors.

Or rather, we had such a plan.

Last week, our family received notice from Anthem BlueCross BlueShield of Colorado that we can no longer keep the plan we like because of â changes from health care reform (also called the Affordable Care Act or ACA).â The letter informed us that â (t)o meet the requirements of the new laws, your current plan can no longer be continued beyond your 2014 renewal date.â

This isnât just partisan business. Itâs personal. Our cancellation letter states that Anthem is â not going to be selling new individual PPO plans.â When we asked whether we could keep our childrenâs doctors, an agent for Anthem told my husband and me she didnât know.

300) Tried to force Little Sisters of the Poor and other Catholic organizations to violate their religious principles

In September 2013, Becket Fund for Religious Liberty sued the Obama administration on behalf of Little Sisters of the Poor, a Catholic charity. Other Catholic organizations were also represented in the lawsuit.

Sister Loraine Marie said of this lawsuit:

â We cannot violate our vows by participating in the governmentâs program to provide access to abortion-inducing drugs.â

Mark Rienzi, one of the lawyers representing these Catholic organizations, said:

â These women just want to take care of the elderly poor without being forced to violate the faith that animates their work. The money they collect should be used to care for the poor like it always has â and not to pay the IRS.â

301) Signed health care reform that broke his promise not to increase taxes on families making less than $250,000 a year

On September 12, 2008, Obama promised:

â I can make a firm pledge. Under my plan, no family making less than $250,000 a year will see any form of tax increase. Not your income tax, not your payroll tax, not your capital gains taxes, not any of your taxes.â

In 2010, Obama signed Obamacare.

In 2012, in front of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Obama administration argued that Obamacare is a tax.

302) Pushed millions of working people â into a regulatory health coverage no manâ s landâ

In February 2013, U.S. Senator Ron Wyden (Democrat-Oregon) said:

â Weâ ve got millions of people â working-class, middle-class people â who are going to be pushed into a regulatory health coverage no manâ s land. They are unable to afford the family coverage through their employer and ineligible for the subsidy that could be used by dependents on the exchange.â

303) â Unfairlyâ forced federal lawmakers and their aides to participate in the same health care reform as everyone else

In June 2013, U.S. Congressman John Larson (Democrat-Connecticut) said that it is â not fairâ to force federal lawmakers and their aides to participate in the same health care reform as everyone else.

304) Encouraged SEIU union to go on strike

The Service Employees International Union supported Obama in both elections, and also supported the passage of Obamacare.

However, in September 2013, member of the Chicago chapter of the SEIU went on strike over jobs cuts that were caused by Obamacare.

305) Removed promise of â freeâ health care from Obamacare website

In September 2013, the Obamacare website removed its promise of â freeâ health care.

306) Exposed the hypocrisy of MSNBC host Ed Schultz

After Obamacare was passed, MSNBC host Ed Schultz praised it almost every day for three years. However, on September 26, 2013, just five days before the Obamacare exchanges were to begin, Schultz said that unions should be exempt from it.

307) Punished people who were unable to accurately predict their income a year in advance

Obamacare requires people to predict their income a year in advance. If their prediction is wrong, they can be punished by the IRS.

308) Created Obamacare website where less than 1% of the people who visited on its first day actually registered for Obamacare

U.S. Congressman Congressman Jim Himes (Democrat-Connecticut) said that out of the 28,000 people from Connecticut who had visited the Obamacare website on its first day, only 167 had actually signed up for Obamacare.

309) Obama administration falsely said it did not know how many people had enrolled in Obamacare

On October 3, 2013, the third day that the Obamacare website was in operation, White House spokesman Jay Carney said that "7 million" people had visited the Obamacare website so far. However, when asked how many of those people had actually enrolled in Obamacare, he said, "We don't have that data."

Carney was lying. Of course the Obama administration had that data. CBS News was able to get a copy of that data, and reported that during the first 24 hours after the Obamacare website went online, only six people had used the website to enroll in Obamacare.

310) Broke promise that Obamacare "navigators" would not go door to door

On October 1, 2013, the very first day that Obamacare registration was taking place, the Obama administration broke its promise that Obamacare "navigators" would not go door to door.

311) Created Obamacare website where reporters from various news agencies were unable to register on its first day

On October 1, 2013, a CNN reporter was unable to register at the Obamacare website.

On October 1, 2013, a reporter from the Tennessean was unable to register at the Obamacare website.

312) Created Obamacare phone line that was answered by "navigators" who had no training

President Obama signed Obamacare in March 2010. The Obama administration had three and a half years to hire and train the "navigators" who answer the Obamacare phone line.

However, on October 1, 2013, one of the "navigators" who answered the Obamacare phone line said "We have not been trained yet."

313) Created Obamacare website that can't handle as much traffic as a website which is run by one guy in his pajamas from his apartment

drudgereport.com is run by Matt Drudge, who runs the website in his pajamas from his apartment. I've visited his website just about every day since the late 20th century. It runs very well. His website has gotten as many as 45 million hits per day.

On the first day of the Obamacare website, it had 5 million visitors. It could not handle that amount of traffic.

314) Created Obamacare phone line where "navigators" told people to go to a building that turned out to be empty

Obamacare "navigators" who answered the Obamacare phone line told people to go to a building that turned out to be empty.

315) Created Obamacare phone line with a number that when spelled out is "F* YO"

When spelled out, the Obamacare phone number is " F YO."

This is not a complaint on my part. On the contrary, I consider this to be truth in advertising. For once, the Obama administration is telling us the truth about Obamacare.

316) Tried to censor a book about the âFast and Furiousâ scandal

In October 2013, the ACLU announced that it would be defending John Dodsonâs first amendment right to free speech, against the Obama administration, which was trying to prevent Dodson from publishing a book about Obamaâs âFast and Furiousâ scandal.

317) Michelle Obama said she could not tweet as often after the federal shutdown caused layoffs of her 16 âassistants,â who have salaries as high as $172,200

Michelle Obama has 16 taxpayer funded âassistants,â whose salaries are as high as $172,200.

During the government shutdown in October 2013, her 16 âassistantsâ were laid off, and her twitter account said:

âDue to Congressâs failure to pass legislation to fund the government, updates to this account will be limited.â

318) Hypocritically blocked Texasâs voter ID law for being âracistâ

In March 2012, Obamaâs Justice Department blocked Texasâs voter ID law, claiming that it was âracist.â

However, the very same Obama Justice Department that did this, also requires photo ID for everyone who enters it. In this video, beginning at 2:39, we see that a security guard at Obamaâs Justice Department requires photo ID for everyone who enters.

319) Falsely said that his negotiating over the debt ceiling would be unprecedented

In October 2013, Obama falsely said that his negotiating over the debt ceiling would be unprecedented.

320) Blocked access to outdoor memorials and monuments during the government shutdown, even though it would have been cheaper to leave them open

During the government shutdown in October 2013, Obama shut down the Vietnam Memorial, despite the fact that it would have been cheaper to leave it open.

Obama also shut down the World War II Memorial. Obama used metal fences and yellow police tape to block the entrances.

Obama put up orange cones to prevent drivers from stopping and taking pictures of Mount Rushmore.

Obama put up yellow police tape in front of the Lincoln Memorial to prevent people from entering.

During previous government shutdowns, these memorials and monuments had remained open.

Since itâs more expensive to close these outdoor memorials and monuments than it is to leave them open, I have to wonder what Obamaâs reason was for shutting them down.

321) Kicked people out of their privately owned vacation homes on federal land during government shutdown

During the government shutdown in October 2013, Obama forced people to leave their privately owned vacation homes along Lake Mead. The privately owned homes were situated on land owned by the federal government. All of the homes in question were vacation homes, not primary residences, so no one was forced into homelessness. Nevertheless, there was no legitimate justification for Obama to do this.

322) Forced private businesses on federal land to close during government shutdown

During the October 2013 government shutdown, Obama forced privately owned marinas, restaurants, inns, and concessions stands which were situated on federal land to close. Although the Obama administration claimed that this was done because the government did not have enough money to allow them to stay open, the government actually spent extra money to have federal guards prevent people from entering these private businesses.

323) Kept one of his favorite golf courses open during government shutdown

During the October 2013 government shutdown, while Obama was busying closing federal parks, monuments, and memorials, he made one exception â he allowed one of his favorite golf courses to stay open.

328) Ordered a $47,174 mechanical bull during the October 2013 government shutdown

During the October 2013 government shutdown, while Obama was busy closing parks, monuments, and memorials (even though it would have been cheaper to leave them open because they are outdoors), and denying death benefits to the families of dead U.S. military personnel (even though the funding for this had already been previously authorized by law), the Utah National Guard (which is a component of the United States Army and the United States National Guard) ordered a $47,174 mechanical bull. However, after being embarrassed by reports of this from Fox News, Drudge Report, and CNS News, the federal government canceled the order.

329) Seized $35,000 from a law abiding owner of a grocery store without any warning , explanation, or charges

For 30 years, Terry Dehko has been legally operating a grocery store near Detroit, Michigan. In January 2013, the Obama administration seized $35,000 from Dehko's bank account, without giving any warning or explanation, and without charging Dehko with any crime.

330) Ran the most closed, control-freak administration I've ever covered

For the past 20 years, David Sanger has been a New York Times reporter stationed in Washington, D.C. In October 2013, he said:

This is the most closed, control-freak administration I've ever covered.

338) A lead navigator for Obamacare falsely told applicants that they must provide their credit score

In October 2013, Anne Packham, a lead navigator for Obamacare, falsely told applicants that they had to provide their credit score.

339) Created Obamacare website which looks like nobody tested it

President Obama signed Obamacare in March 2010. He had three and a half years to create and test the Obamacare website.

However, in October 2013, CBS News quoted Luke Chung, an online database programmer who supports Obamacare, as saying the following about the Obamacare website:

It wasn't designed well, it wasn't implemented well, and it looks like nobody tested it. It's not even close. It's not even ready for beta testing for my book. I would be ashamed and embarrassed if my organization delivered something like that.

340) Obamacare's first publicized enrollee turned out to be a Democratic activist who had not actually enrolled in Obamacare

After the Obamacare website went online, the media tried and tried to find someone who had actually enrolled, but could not find anyone, because the website was so badly designed.

After much searching, they finally reported that they had found someone a 21-year-old guy from Georgia named Chad Henderson.

On October 3, 2013, the Washington Post reported:

Meet Chad Henderson, the Obamacare enrollee tons of reporters are calling

Ask and, apparently, you shall receive.

Just moments after writing a blog post Thursday morning, about the lack of information on Obamacare enrollees, Enroll America reached out with contact information for Chad Henderson, a 21-year-old in Georgia who had successfully enrolled in coverage on the federal marketplace.

It was a little difficult to reach Henderson, mostly because so many other reporters wanted to talk to him. I'm supposed to talk to the Chattanooga Times Free Press in a half hour, Henderson said. And The Wall Street Journal is supposed to call.

Luckily, Henderson managed to squeeze me in for a few minutes. He's a student at Chattanooga State University who lives across the state border in Flintstone, Ga.

Politico reported:

Rare health exchange enrollee gets 15 minutes of Obamacare fame

Chad Henderson, a college student who is one of the few people to have signed up for health insurance on a federal exchange, is having his 15 minutes of Obamacare fame.

But wait.

It turns out that Henderson had not actually enrolled in Obamacare.

In addition, Henderson is actually a member of Organizing for Action, the organization that ran Obama's election campaign.

341) Said it's unfair to ask for Obamacare enrollment numbers just one week after Obamacare website went online

U.S. Congressional representative Debbie Wasserman Schultz (Democrat-Florida) is the chairperson for the Democratic National Committee. When a reporter asked her how many people had enrolled in Obamacare during its first week, she said it was unfair to ask that question so early.

When a new movie comes out, we know how many people bought tickets in the first week. When a new video game, or a new CD, or a new book comes out, we know how many people bought it in the first week.

But when a news reporter asks the most transparent administration in history how many people signed up for its new health care program during its first week, we are told that such a question is unfair.

342) Declined to identify the private contractors who screwed up the Obamacare website

When the New York Times asked the Obama administration to identify the private contractors who had screwed up the Obamacare website, the Obama administration refused to answer.

343) Refused to answer why businesses, but not individuals, were able to delay the Obamacare mandate for a year

When Jon Stewart asked Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius why businesses, but not individuals, were able to delay the Obamacare mandate for a year, Sebelius refused to answer.

344) Gave people Obamacare a rate shock

Many news sources, including the Washington Post, the Christian Science Monitor, Investor's Business Daily, the Daily Caller, CBS News, Forbes, CNN, the San Jose Mercury News, and the San Francisco Chronicle, have been reporting on something called Obamacare a rate shock.

For example, Tom Waschura, a self employed engineer who lives in Portola Valley, California, said that he supports Obamacare, and that he voted for Obama in both elections.

However, on October 5, 2013, Waschura said:

I was laughing at Boehner until the mail came today.

I really don't like the Republican tactics, but at least now I can understand why they are so pissed about this. When you take $10,000 out of my family's pocket each year, that's otherwise disposable income or retirement savings that will not be going into our local economy.

This next quote is one of the funniest things that I've heard anyone say about Obamacare so far. It comes from Cindy Vinson, a retired teacher from San Jose, California, who said that she supports Obamacare, and that she voted for Obama in both elections. This is what she said in October 2013, after she found out that Obamacare would be causing her insurance premium to increase:

Of course, I want people to have health care. I just didn't realize I would be the one who was going to pay for it personally.â

CNN reported:

One North Carolina reader was upset to learn her current $267 a month plan was being canceled and the cheapest option on the exchange would cost her family $750 a month. They donâ t qualify for a subsidy.

â Obamacare is a nightmare for my family,â she wrote.

345) Made sure that Obamacare â rate shockâ did not happen until after the 2012 election

Obamacare was deliberately written so that Obamacare â rate shockâ would not occur until after the 2012 election.

On October 9, 2013, Obamaâ s approval rating was only 37%. Obamacare â rate shockâ was a significant factor in this low approval rating. If Obamacare â rate shockâ had happened in October 2012 instead of in October 2013, itâ s highly unlikely that Obama would have won the 2012 election.

347) Used 55 different contractors to build the Obamacare website

348) Waited until after the 2012 election to issue major rules for the Obamacare website

Obama signed the Obamacare law in March 2010. The law requires the online exchanges to be up and running by October 2013. So Obama had three and a half years to get the website ready.

However, Obama waited until after the 2012 election to release some of the major rules for how the website was supposed to be designed. So instead of having three and a half years to get the website ready, Obama made sure the programmers had less than one year.

349) New York Times reporter was never able to log in to Obamamacare website during more than 40 attempts over 11 days

The source code for the Obamacare website states:

You have no reasonable expectation of privacy regarding any communication or data transiting or stored on this information system. At any time, and for any lawful Government purpose, the government may monitor, intercept, and search and seize any communication or data transiting or stored on this information system. Any communication or data transiting or stored on this information system may be disclosed or used for any lawful Government purpose.

357) Requires users to reveal private info before shopping at Obamacare website

However, the Obamacare website requires users to enter their name, social security number, and other personal information before they are allowed to look at the insurance plans.

358) Michelle Obama refused to pick vegetables from her own garden without federal help

During the October 2013 government shutdown, Michelle Obama decided to avoid picking her own vegetables from her own garden, and instead, allowed them to rot.

Reuters reported:

In the famous White House kitchen garden, tomatoes are rotting on the vine. Herbs have gone to seed. And the sweet potatoes — a favorite of President Barack Obama — have become worm food.

It's another impact of the government shutdown, one that only the fox and the many squirrels that live on the White House grounds could love.

361) Added 11 million words of regulations to Obamacare, which is 30 times as many words as the law itself

The regulations that Obama added to Obamacare after he signed it are 11 million words long. That's 30 times as many words as the actual Obamacare law that Obama signed in March 2010. Because Obama added these 11 million words without approval from Congress, his actions are illegal.

372) Obamacare website gave wrong prices

In October 2013, CBS News reported:

A new online feature can dramatically underestimate the cost of insurance.

In some cases, people could end up paying double of what they see on the website.

â No one is more frustrated than I am.â

Obama has absolutely no right to be â frustratedâ about any of the Obamacare websiteâs problems, because he is the person who chose to cause those problems in the first place.

It was Obama who signed a 2,600 page law that he hadnât read.

It was Obama who added an additional 20,000 pages of regulations that he hadnât read to Obamacare without Congressional approval.

It was Obama who chose to hire cronies instead of competent programmers to create the Obamacare website.

It was Obama who waited until after the 2012 election to issue some of the main rules for the Obamacare website, which gave the programmers less than one year to comply with those rules, instead of the three and half years they would have had if Obama hadnât waited.

It was Obama who falsely said that the price of annual family insurance premiums would fall by $2,500.

It was Obama who gave employers a huge financial incentive to switch their full time employees to a part time, 29 hour week.

It was Obama who refused to fire Secretary of Health and Human Services Kathleen Sebelius after the Obamacare website failed.

Every thing thatâs bad about the Obamacare website is the direct result of choices that Obama made.

Obama has no right to be â frustratedâ at the websiteâs failure.

You want to know the people who really do have the right to be â frustratedâ at Obamacareâs problems? Itâs the people who have opposed Obamacare from the start. Itâs the people who predicted that these problems would happen. Itâs the people who called the bluff from the very start on Obamaâs many lies about Obamacare. These are the people who have the right to be â frustratedâ at Obamacareâs problems.

And yet somehow, not only does Obama falsely say that he is â frustrated,â but he also falsely says that he is more frustrated than anyone else.

The people who are truly â frustratedâ are the millions of people who were against Obamacare but are now being forced to participate in it.

Obama owns this â he created it. He has no right to be â frustratedâ about it.

â â ! who exactly should be assigned the F for the troubled rollout of HealthCare.gov?â â Once elected, a president becomes chief executive of a giant federal enterprise. Anyone familiar with corporate management would have thought that for as ambitious and technically a complex project as the initial rollout of HealthCare.gov â so important to many uninsured Americans and so politically important to the White House â the chief executive would have remained in very close touch with the management team overseeing the project and thus would have been briefed daily or at least weekly on the progress of the project and especially on any problems with it.â

â â ! the blame for the disastrous rollout of HealthCare.gov goes to its entire management team, to be sure, but primarily to the chief executive on top of that project. In my view, not only the proverbial buck stops on the chief executiveâs desk, but, for the management of this particular project, the grade of F goes there as well.â

White House blocks access to Obama events, news groups say

The nation's largest news organizations lodged a complaint Thursday against the White House for imposing unprecedented limitations on photojournalists covering President Barack Obama, which they say have harmed the public's ability to monitor its own government.

The organizations accuse the White House of banning photojournalists from covering Obama at some events, and then later releasing its own photos and videos of the same events.

Journalists are routinely being denied the right to photograph or videotape the president while he is performing his official duties, according to a letter the organizations sent to the White House. As surely as if they were placing a hand over a journalist's camera lens, officials in this administration are blocking the public from having an independent view of important functions of the executive branch of government.

You are only seeing what they want you to see, said Lucy Dalglish, the dean of the Philip Merrill College of Journalism at the University of Maryland.

the news organizations stressed that they're referring only to presidential activities of a fundamentally public nature, not private or restricted events, including ones that may affect national security.

Examples cited in the letter are Obama's meetings with the Congressional Hispanic Caucus on July 10, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton on July 29 and Pakistani human rights activist Malala Yousafzai on Oct. 11.

In each case, journalists weren't allowed and sometimes were unaware of the event. The White House later released written summaries of the events, along with photos taken by a government photographer.

On Thursday, the presidents of the American Society of News Editors and the Associated Press Media Editors sent a letter to their members urging them to stop using handout photos and video from the White House.

We must accept that we, the press, have been enablers, the letter says. We urge those of you in news organizations to immediately refrain from publishing any of the photographs or videos released by the White House, just as you would refuse to run verbatim a press release from them.

Harry Walker, the director of the McClatchy-Tribune Photo Service, said opening access to events was the foundation for journalism, not just photojournalism.

The letter was signed by 38 news organizations, including all the major broadcast and cable networks, wire services, online services and newspapers, including The New York Times, The Washington Post and the McClatchy Co., which owns 30 daily newspapers across the nation.

In August 2013, the Washington Post reported:

NSA broke privacy rules thousands of times per year, audit finds

The National Security Agency has broken privacy rules or overstepped its legal authority thousands of times each year since Congress granted the agency broad new powers in 2008, according to an internal audit and other top-secret documents.

Most of the infractions involve unauthorized surveillance of Americans or foreign intelligence targets in the United States, both of which are restricted by statute and executive order.

The NSA audit obtained by The Post, dated May 2012, counted 2,776 incidents in the preceding 12 months of unauthorized collection, storage, access to or distribution of legally protected communications.

462) Announced plans to illegally regulate greenhouse gas emissions without approval from Congress

In August 2013, the Obama administration announced that it planned to regulate greenhouse gas emissions without approval from Congress. Without approval from Congress, Obamaâ s actions would be illegal.

463) Refused to answer question about whether or not people who donâ t buy insurance should be put in jail

The Obama administration argued in front of the Supreme Court that the Obamacare mandate was a tax.

Obama hired 16,500 new IRS agents to run Obamacare. In this video, ABC News asked Obama whether or not he thinks that people who don't buy insurance should be put in jail. Obama refused to answer the question. Even after the interviewer asked Obama the question a second time, Obama still refused to answer it.

464) An estimated 70% of California doctors will not participate in Obamacare

In December 2013, the California Medical Association estimated that 70% of California doctors would not be participating in Obamacare.

465) California's Obamacare website gave out the contact information of tens of thousands of people without their permission

In December 2013, it was reported that California's Obamacare website had given private insurance agents the names, addresses, phone numbers, and email addresses of tens of thousands of people without their permission.

466) Made it easy for a future Republican President to give every U.S. citizen a permanent Obamacare waiver, without approval from Congress

The President does not have any legal authority to change the law without those changes first being approved by Congress. However, this list contains many examples of Obama making changes to Obamacare without approval from Congress. Some of these changes involve Obama giving Obamacare waivers to unions who supported the passage of Obamacare. Other changes include Obama delaying certain parts of Obamacare. Obama made these changes illegally, because they were not approved by Congress. With a small number of exceptions, Democrats have not criticized Obama for doing this.

Therefore, in the future, if a Republican President were to give permanent Obamacare waivers to every U.S. citizens without approval from Congress, the vast majority of Democrats would be hypocrites if they objected to it.

467) Obamacare encourages patients to rig the system to rip off doctors, repeatedly, year after year after year

In November 2013, Forbes reported:

Obamacare has a 90-day grace period. This means people can buy an Obamacare policy, have costly procedures done and then cancel the policy within 90 days. If the cancellation comes during the first 30 days, the insurer is responsible for trying to collect payment, but after that, doctors are on their own. They would have to spend time and money chasing patients for payments. California Healthline reported that deadbeats would not receive a fine, a premium rate increase or a repayment order. They also would not be barred from purchasing another subsidized plan during the next enrollment period. No other type of health insurance has a 90-day grace period like this.

468) Tech experts said that a properly working Obamacare website should not have cost more than $10 million, whereas the defective version built by Michelle Obama's incompetent Princeton classmate had actually cost $634 million

Instead of hiring competent programmers to create the Obamacare website, Obama hired CGI Federal, a company that was run by Toni Townes-Whitley, who attended Princeton University with Michelle Obama. When the defective Obamacare website went online on October 1, 2013, it had already cost \$634 million.

However, David Kennedy, president of the technology firm TrustedSec, said that even if the Obamacare website had worked properly, it should not have cost more than $10 million. Luke Chung, president and founder of the technology firm FMS, said he agreed with Mr. Kennedy.

469) Harry Reid, Barbara Boxer, and several other Democratic Senators who voted for Obamacare, have exempted their own staff from Obamacare

In December 2013, Yahoo News reported:

Harry Reid exempts some of his Senate staff from Obamacare exchanges

One of the biggest public supporters of the Affordable Care Act has reportedly decided that some of his staff should be exempted from the new law.

CNN reports that Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid is the only top congressional leader to exempt some of his staff from having to buy insurance through the Affordable Care Act exchanges.

Yahoo News has reached out to the offices of all 100 U.S. senators to see if any other members have exempted committee staff from the federal exchange. So far, the offices of 42 senators have responded to our inquiry, with 37 saying that the senator and their entire staff will switch over to the exchanges in January.

The offices of Ron Wyden, Tim Johnson, Barbara Boxer, Patty Murray and Thomas Carper, all Democrats, said they were exempting some of their staff. Reid, a Democrat from Nevada, has not responded.

470) In a contest for videos to promote Obamacare, the Obama administration gave first prize to a video called â Forget About the Price Tagâ

The Obama administration held a contest where it asked people to make videos to support Obamacare. The Obama administration awarded first prize to a video called â Forget About the Price Tag.â The video can be seen at <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wpRNAkG-Nx0>

471) Broke his promise to have the Obamacare website fixed by November 30, 2013

On October 25, 2013, White House spokesman Jeffrey Zients said:

â By the end of November, the vast majority of consumers will be able to successfully and smoothly enroll through Healthcare.govâ

However, on December 1, 2013, the New York Times reported:

Insurers Claim Health Website Is Still Flawed

The problem is that the systems that are supposed to deliver consumer information to insurers still have not been fixed. And with coverage for many people scheduled to begin in just 30 days, insurers are worried the repairs may not be completed in time.

â Until the enrollment process is working from end to end, many consumers will not be able to enroll in coverage,â said Karen M. Ignagni, president of America's Health Insurance Plans, a trade group.

The issues are vexing and complex. Some insurers say they have been deluged with phone calls from people who believe they have signed up for a particular health plan, only to find that the company has no record of the enrollment.

472) Democratic aides who supported the passage of Obamacare said their new Obamacare premiums are simply unacceptable

In December 2013, Politico reported:

Older Hill aides shocked by Obamacare prices

Veteran House Democratic aides are sick over the insurance prices they'll pay under Obamacare, and they're scrambling to find a cure.

In a shock to the system, the older staff in my office (folks over 59) have now found out their personal health insurance costs (even with the government contribution) have gone up 3-4 times what they were paying before," Minh Ta, chief of staff to Rep. Gwen Moore (D-Wis.), wrote to fellow Democratic chiefs of staff in an email message obtained by POLITICO. "Simply unacceptable."

In the email, Ta noted that older congressional staffs may leave their jobs because of the change to their health insurance.

473) Members of Congress and their staff are exempt from the income limits for Obamacare subsidies that apply to everyone else

Most people are eligible for Obamacare subsidies only if their income is no more than 400% of the poverty level. For a family of four, 400% of the poverty level is \$94,200. A family of four with income higher than that amount is not eligible for an Obamacare subsidy.

However, members of Congress and their staff are exempt from this limit. Members of Congress are paid \$174,000 a year. Because of their special exemption, a middle aged member of Congress who is married and has children, will get a special Obamacare subsidy of \$10,000.

474) Obamacare website often doesn't tell insurance companies about customers who bought insurance

On December 1, 2013, the New York Times reported:

Some insurers say they have been deluged with phone calls from people who believe they have signed up for a particular health plan, only to find that the company has no record of the enrollment.

475) Obama's nominee to head the IRS has little tax experience

In December 2013, Reuters reported:

WASHINGTON (Reuters) — A Senate panel hearing on President Barack Obama's nominee to head the Internal Revenue Service was set to resume Wednesday after it was abruptly halted on Tuesday at a Republican senator's request, committee aides said.

John Koskinen, a 74-year-old lawyer with little tax experience chosen by Obama to take over the beleaguered IRS, traveled up to Capitol Hill to face the Senate Finance Committee, but the session did not last long.

476) Obama said we should raise the minimum wage, but barackobama.com advertised for unpaid interns

In February 2013, Obama said:

â Tonight, letâ s declare that in the wealthiest nation on Earth, no one who works full-time should have to live in poverty, and raise the federal minimum wage to $9.00 an hour. This single step would raise the incomes of millions of working families. It could mean the difference between groceries or the food bank; rent or eviction; scraping by or finally getting ahead. For businesses across the country, it would mean customers with more money in their pockets. In fact, working folks shouldnâ t have to wait year after year for the minimum wage to go up while CEO pay has never been higher. So hereâ s an idea that Governor Romney and I actually agreed on last year: letâ s tie the minimum wage to the cost of living, so that it finally becomes a wage you can live on.â

However, barackobama.com advertised for â unpaidâ interns. The bolding is mine:

477) Falsely said that he had never lived with his drunk driving, illegal alien uncle

In 2011, the Obama administration said that Obama had never lived with his drunk driving, illegal alien uncle. However, in December 2013, it was reported that Obama actually had lived with him.

478) In New York City, thousands of Obama voting, well educated, upper class professionals complained about losing their insurance because of Obamacare

In December 2013, the New York Times reported:

With Affordable Care Act, Canceled Policies for New York Professionals

Many in New York's professional and cultural elite have long supported President Obama's health care plan. But now, to their surprise, thousands of writers, opera singers, music teachers, photographers, doctors, lawyers and others are learning that their health insurance plans are being canceled and they may have to pay more to get comparable coverage, if they can find it.

I couldn't sleep because of it, said Barbara Meinwald, a solo practitioner lawyer in Manhattan.

Ms. Meinwald, 61, has been paying $10,000 a year for her insurance through the New York City Bar. A broker told her that a new temporary plan with fewer doctors would cost $5,000 more, after factoring in the cost of her medications.

Roy Lyons, managing director of Marsh U.S. Consumer, an insurance brokerage, said he had heard complaints from physicians, lawyers, pharmacists and optometrists.

Among those affected are members of the Authors Guild; the Advertising Photographers of America; the Suzuki Association of the Americas, a music teachers organization; the Society of Children's Book Writers and Illustrators; the New York City Bar Association; and the New York County Medical Society.

It is not lost on many of the professionals that they are exactly the sort of people who liberal, concerned with social justice who supported the Obama health plan in the first place. Ms. Meinwald, the lawyer, said she was a lifelong Democrat who still supported better health care for all, but had she known what was in store for her, she would have voted for Mitt Romney.

It is an uncomfortable position for many members of the creative classes to be in.

We are the Obama people, said Camille Sweeney, a New York writer and member of the Authors Guild. Her insurance is being canceled, and she is dismayed that neither her pediatrician nor her general practitioner appears to be on the exchange plans. What to do has become a hot topic on Facebook and at dinner parties frequented by her fellow writers and artists.

I am for it, she said. But what is the reality of it?

479) Washington state's Obamacare website stole money from people's checking accounts

In December 2013, KGW reported that the Obamacare website for Washington state had stolen money from people's checking accounts.

480) Illegally ordered insurance companies to cover customers who had never paid any premiums

In December 2013, Obama ordered insurance companies to cover customers who had never paid any premiums. Obama's action was illegal because it violated the takings clause of the Fifth Amendment. It was also illegal because he did not have approval from Congress.

481) Millennials who voted for Obama and supported the passage of Obamacare did not want to purchase Obamacare insurance for themselves

In December 2013, it was reported that most of the Millennials who had voted for Obama and had supported the passage of Obamacare did not want to purchase Obamacare insurance for themselves.

482) Obamacare website violated federal security laws

In December 2013, it was reported that the Obamacare website was in violation of federal security laws.

483) Refused to answer questions about how many of Obamacare's so-called enrollees had actually paid their first month's premium

On December 11, 2013, more than two months after the Obamacare website had gone online, the Obama administration still refused to answer questions about how many of Obamacare's so-called enrollees had actually paid their first month's premium. Instead, the Obama administration was still fraudulently counting as enrollees people who had put Obamacare policies into their shopping cart without actually paying for them. No legitimate online retailer counts unpaid items left in the shopping cart as sales.

484) Illegally delayed Obamacare's online SHOP enrollment by one year

In November 2013, it was reported that Obama had delayed Obamacare's online SHOP enrollment by one year. Because Obama did this without approval from Congress, his action was illegal.

485) Ten different Obamacare customer service representatives refused to let cancer survivor Lynn Baklor sign up for Obamacare

Lynn Baklor lives in Maryland, and is a survivor of breast cancer. Over a period of two months, she spoke on the phone with ten different customer service representatives from Obamacare, and none of them allowed her to sign up for Obamacare. The Obamacare website was not working either. A WBAL news report on her situation can be seen at <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=F79acewkZ78>

486) Obama's nominee to head the defense department said he did not know much about the military

In January 2013, Chuck Hagel, Obama's nominee to head the defense department, said he did not know much about the military.

487) Federal judge said Obama's bulk collection of phone records was unconstitutional

In December 2013, U.S. District Court Judge Richard Leon said that Obama's bulk collection of phone records violated the fourth amendment's prohibition against unreasonable searches. It was Edward Snowden, a former NSA employee, who had first revealed to the public that Obama had been engaging in this unconstitutional activity.

488) Gave out even more illegal Obamacare waivers

On December 19, 2013, Obama gave exemptions from the Obamacare mandate to people whose insurance had been canceled due to Obamacare. Because Obama gave out these exemptions without approval from Congress, his action was illegal.

489) Obamacare creates a new 2% tax on every insurance plan

Obamacare creates a new 2% tax on every insurance plan. This breaks Obama's promise that he would not raise taxes on families making less than $250,000 per year.

490) Obamacare requires some people to pay 19% of their income for premiums

In December 2013, the New York Times reported:

A 60-year-old living in Polk County, in northwestern Wisconsin, and earning $50,000 a year, for example, would have to spend more than 19 percent of his income, or $9,801 annually, to buy one of the cheapest plans available there.

491) Six Democratic Senators who voted for Obamacare complained that it was causing voters in their districts to lose insurance

In December 2013, six Democratic Senators who had voted for Obamacare wrote a letter to Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius, complaining that Obamacare was causing voters in their districts to lose insurance.

492) Admitted that the so-called "Affordable" Care Act was actually "unaffordable" for some people

In December 2013, the Obama administration admitted that the so-called "Affordable" Care Act was actually "unaffordable" for some people.

493) 53% of people without insurance disapprove of Obamacare

In December 2013, the New York Times reported:

Americans who lack medical coverage disapprove of President Obama's health care law at roughly the same rate as the insured, even though most say they struggle to pay for basic care, according to the latest New York Times/CBS News poll.

Fifty-three percent of the uninsured disapprove of the law, the poll found, compared with 51 percent of those who have health coverage. A third of the uninsured say the law will help them personally, but about the same number think it will hurt them, with cost a leading concern.

494) Under certain circumstances, Obamacare recipients between the ages of 55 and 64 can have their homes seized by the government after they die

Under certain circumstances, when someone between the ages of 55 and 64 participates in Obamacare, then after they die, the government can seize their home, preventing their children from inheriting it.

495) PolitiFact repeatedly changed its rating of Obama's promise that people could keep their insurance, based on how many Presidential elections he still had left PolitiFact is a left wing organization that rates the truthfulness of statements made by politicians. Regarding Obama's promise that people could keep their insurance, PolitiFact has given out three different ratings.

In October 2008, when Obama still had two Presidential elections coming up, PolitiFact rated his statement as “true.”

In June 2012, when Obama only had one more Presidential election coming up, PolitiFact rated his statement as “half true.”

In December 2013, when Obama could no longer run for President ever again, PolitiFact rated his statement as “lie of the year.”

In all three of these cases, PolitiFact was rating the exact same statement. So why did they keep changing their rating? The best explanation that I can think of is that as Obama had fewer and fewer Presidential elections coming up, they were willing to be more and more accurate in their ratings. So only when he was no longer able to run for President again, were they finally willing to admit the truth about his statement.

496) Obamacare supporters at Democratic Underground later complained about it

For some really hilarious displays of shock and outrage by supporters of Obamacare at how it’s harming people, check out these threads at Democratic Underground: one, two, three, four, five, six, and seven.

497) Commander-in-Chief Obama adopted lower military standards so unqualified women could serve in combat

In December 2013, NPR reported:

Starting Jan. 1, every woman in the Marines Corps was supposed to meet a new physical standard by performing three pullups. But that has been put off.

The three pullups is already the minimum required for all male Marines. Now the Marine Corps has postponed the plan, and that’s raising questions about whether women have the physical strength to handle ground combat, which they’ll be allowed to do beginning in 2016.

Why does this matter?

Well, the same NPR article continued:

The Marine Corps has been using it to test upper body strength for men for more than 40 years. And that upper body strength, they say, is necessary to serve in ground combat: to pull yourself out of a canal in Afghanistan, to climb over a mud wall, to carry an ammunition box.

And a CNS News article on the subject stated:

Pull-ups have been used to test Marines’ upper body strength for over 40 years. The ability to pull-up one’s own body weight over a bar shows the upper body strength that, in combat, is needed to lift fallen comrades, pull one’s self over a wall, and carry heavy munitions. Combat Marines also carry a pack that weighs around 90 pounds, with gunners carrying an additional 50 or 60 pounds.

In other words, this qualification is by no means trivial. On the contrary, this involves skills that are necessary in combat – necessary for saving the soldier’s own life, as well as for saving the lives of other soldiers.

Obama, who is Commander-in-Chief of the military, is saying that he’s perfectly OK with allowing unqualified women to go into combat, even if it means that their lack of qualifications could end up killing them, as well as killing other U.S. soldiers who depend on them.

498) Had double standard for hate crime laws

When someone participated in the so-called "knockout game," the Obama administration filed hate crime charges when a white person attacked a black person, but not when a black person attacked a white person.

499) Tried to prevent federal judge from ruling on NSA surveillance

In December 2013, the Obama administration tried to prevent a federal judge from ruling on NSA surveillance efforts.

500) Illegally tried to avoid disclosure of a foreign aid directive that he had signed

In December 2013, a federal judge ruled that Obama's attempt to avoid disclosure of a foreign aid directive that he had signed in 2010 was illegal.

Hillary Clinton Broke Campaign Finance Laws, Not Donald Trump

Aug 20188403

Mark Penn, the former pollster for both Bill Clinton and Hillary Clinton, has penned an op-ed in The Hill Wednesday in which he argues that Michael Cohen's guilty plea shows the double standard that prosecutors have applied unfairly to Donald Trump.

Penn argues that while what Trump is alleged to have done â paying Stormy Daniels for a non-disclosure agreement she had sought for five years prior to the election â was legal, Hillary Clinton failed to report campaign expenditures that led to the Steele dossier.

If anyone broke campaign finance law, Penn argues, it was Clinton, not Trump â but prosecutors want Trump out of office.

He writes:

The usual procedures here would be for the FEC to investigate complaints and sort through these murky laws to determine if these kinds of payments are personal in nature or more properly classified as campaign expenditures. And, on the Daniels payment that was made and reimbursed by Trump, it is again a question of whether that was made for personal reasons (especially since they have been trying since 2011 to obtain agreement). Just because it would be helpful to the campaign does not convert it to a campaign expenditure. Think of a candidate with bad teeth who had dental work done to look better for the campaign; his campaign still could not pay for it because itâs a personal expenditure.

Contrast what is going on here with the treatment of the millions of dollars paid to a Democratic law firm which, in turn, paid out money to political research firm Fusion GPS and British ex-spy Christopher Steele without listing them on any campaign expenditure form â despite crystal-clear laws and regulations that the ultimate beneficiaries of the funds must be listed. This rule was even tightened recently. There is no question that hiring spies to do opposition research in Russia is a campaign expenditure, and yet, no prosecutorial raids have been sprung on the law firm, Fusion GPS or Steele. Reason: It does not â getâ Trump.

Hillaryâs State Department Urged U.S. Investors To Fund Russian Research For Military Uses

Wow! The Wall Street Journal in 2016: The Clinton Foundation, State and Kremlin Connections. Why did Hillaryâs State Department urge U.S. investors to fund Russian research for military uses?

A program overseen by then Secretary of State Hillary Clinton as part of the âresetâ with Russia wound up enhancing Russiaâs military technology and funneling millions of dollars to the Clinton Foundation.

Both the U.S. Army and the FBI found that the program, intended to support Russiaâs version of Silicon Valley, was exploited to improve Russiaâs military capability. The FBI warned several American technology companies in 2014 that the city of Skolkovo, on the outskirts of Moscow, âmay be a means for the Russian government to access United States sensitive or classified research development facilities and dual-use technologies with military and commercial application.â In reality, it was.

House Committee Examines Whether Nancy Boy Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey Lied in His Testimony

By Tyler O'Neil

chat 34 comments

(Rolf Vennenbernd/picture-alliance/dpa/AP Images)

On Tuesday, the House Energy and Commerce Committee confirmed that it is reviewing Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey's testimony before the committee in September after the social media company suspended a Marine combat veteran and explicitly endorsed the political stance of support for transgender activism in its "hateful conduct" policy.

"The committee is aware of Twitter's actions and is currently reviewing Mr. Dorsey's testimony," a committee spokesperson told PJ Media, confirming the news first reported by the Federalist's Sean Davis.

The spokesman did not explicitly name which Twitter actions inspired the search, or which Dorsey statements most merit scrutiny. Davis suggested the committee was responding to questions about Twitter's suspension of Jesse Kelly — a Marine combat veteran, writer, and radio show host — and its Orwellian redefinition of opposition to transgender identity as "hateful conduct."

5-Year-Old Girl Sexually Assaulted by a 'Transgender' Boy in Bathroom. School Blames Her Mother

The Federalist's Ben Domenech reported on Monday that Dorsey gave false statements about Twitter's response to death threats against prominent conservatives and about whether or not Twitter policies discriminated against users based on their politics.

Davis focused on a few specific statements the Twitter CEO delivered in the September hearing:

â I want to start by making something very clear,â Dorsey testified on September 5, 2018. â We don't consider political viewpoints, perspectives, or party affiliation in any of our policies or enforcement decisions, period.â

â Our policies and our algorithms don't take into consideration any affiliation, philosophy, or viewpoint,â Dorsey claimed again later in the hearing.

Yet Twitter's new "hateful conduct" policy condemns "targeted misgendering or dead naming of transgender individuals." This may not seem an ideological or political viewpoint, but it definitely is.

"Misgendering" involves referring to a person who identifies as transgender by the appropriate pronoun of their biological sex. The term "dead name" refers to the name a transgender person was given at birth, after that person has rejected that name for a new one. As Eric Weinstein pointed out on Twitter, this would make it impossible to explain a transgender person's history.

Lesbian veteran Miriam Ben-Shalom denounced Twitter's move as Orwellian, telling PJ Media that the social media company "has drunk the Kool-Aid and actively engages in suppression of thought and civil discourse, allowing only the words of those who are delusional, at best."

Arbitrarily defining "misgendering" and the use of "dead names" as "hateful conduct" involves a rejection of the scientific basis of biological sex in favor of a partisan ideological movement. Worse, it involves endorsing a movement that has made women and girls vulnerable to biological men in female-only spaces and has encouraged young people to mutilate their bodies in search of a new identity. Many pediatricians have denounced this as child abuse.

Such a blatant endorsement of transgender identity is entirely political, as Sean Davis noted. This may not prove that Jack Dorsey lied to Congress in September (before the transgender policy went into effect), but it certainly casts a pall on his claims that his company is politically neutral.

The committee spokesman told PJ Media that Twitter "has not yet provided responses to members' questions for the record, despite an October 15th deadline. It is important that Congress receive this requested information to ensure we are able to properly perform our oversight responsibilities."

"We believe Twitter and other tech companies should be forthright with Congress and the American people in an effort to shed light on often opaque rules and processes," the committee spokesman insisted. "Transparency and trust are essential components of our increasingly digital communication channels."

Twitter has a great deal to answer for.

WASHINGTON â A few hours after Conor Lamb, the Pennsylvania Democrat, claimed victory in a House race with a vow to oppose his partyâs leader, Nancy Pelosi, the once-and-perhaps-future speaker was explaining to a group of female congressional candidates why she did not retire after 2016.

She intended to do so after Hillary Clinton won, Ms. Pelosi recalled Wednesday at a Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee reception here. But she stayed to ensure Washington had at least one woman in power.

To some lawmakers in the room who described her remarks, the message was clear: Ms. Pelosi is not going anywhere â a point she underscored in an interview.

Yet her resolve is at odds with growing numbers of Democratic candidates who view her as politically toxic and are pledging to vote against her as their leader, as Mr. Lamb did without suffering consequences with voters and donors. These candidates and some current House Democrats â tired of years of attack ads invoking Ms. Pelosi as a â San Francisco liberal,â and impatient to see a younger set of leaders take power â are now openly distancing themselves from Ms. Pelosi or declaring outright that it is time for her to go.

Mr. Lamb, by coming out early against Ms. Pelosi and scoring an upset win in a district President Trump carried by nearly 20 percentage points, has clearly emboldened some other Democrats to follow suit and disavow her. Republicans intend to make Ms. Pelosiâs unpopularity a centerpiece of their 2018 strategy, hoping that her polarizing status will mitigate their predicted losses.

Anticipating this strategy from the right, Democratic candidates are increasingly opposing her as speaker or refusing to take a stand an act of political inoculation â a trend that even her allies acknowledge could ultimately imperil her grip on the Democratic caucus.

At least two other senior Democrats, Representatives Steny H. Hoyer of Maryland and Joseph Crowley of New York, are already actively laying the groundwork to seek the leaderâs job if Ms. Pelosiâs position becomes untenable.

As Democratic House candidates descended on Washington last week for a round of training and fund-raising, the topic of how to confront the Pelosi question came up repeatedly, according to multiple officials.

â I was just in D.C. and thatâs the advice everybody gives: Donât say youâre for Pelosi,â recalled former Representative Brad Ashford, a Nebraska Democrat trying to reclaim his seat. (He would not rule out backing Ms. Pelosi.)

Most ominous for Ms. Pelosi, it is not just centrist candidates running in red-tinged districts who are reluctant to embrace her, but also political insurgents on the left who see her as an embodiment of the Washington establishment.

â I would have to see whoâs running,â said Marie Newman, a progressive Democratic House candidate in Illinois, when asked if she would support Ms. Pelosi for speaker. Ms. Newman is vying to unseat Representative Daniel Lipinski, a conservative Chicago Democrat, in a primary there on Tuesday.

And on Capitol Hill, Ms. Pelosi, 77, must contend with colleagues from her own generation who want their turn in charge, as well as younger Democrats whoâd prefer to clear out the partyâs entire septuagenarian leadership team: beyond Ms. Pelosi, the other two ranking House Democrats, Mr. Hoyer and James E. Clyburn, are 78 and 77.

Yet at a time when women are at the forefront of the opposition to Mr. Trump's presidency, the specter of Democrats taking back the House only to unceremoniously dump the most powerful woman in American politics strikes many in the party as outrageous.

And Ms. Pelosi herself is plainly in this camp.

I am a woman at the table, she said in the interview Friday before getting on a plane for Houston, where she was going to raise money for House Democrats at the annual rodeo there.

Demonstrating the swagger that delights her admirers and prompts eye-rolling from detractors, Ms. Pelosi said Democrats needed her in charge.

I am a master legislator, I am a shrewd politician and I have a following in the country that, apart from a presidential candidate, nobody else can claim, she said.

While she would not firmly commit to seeking the speakership again, it is clearly her plan, and she even gave voice to a concern on the minds of many Democrats: the chaotic scramble that would ensue if she steps down.

If I was to walk away now, this caucus would be in such a musical chairs scenario, she said.

Even as energy on the left has soared across the country thanks to Mr. Trump, tensions among House Democrats are brewing inside the Capitol. Should Democrats fail to reclaim the House in a year with so many factors in their favor, Ms. Pelosi and her long-serving lieutenants will almost certainly be pushed to step down.

Yet some in the caucus want to see new leadership no matter what. Representative Bill Pascrell Jr., Democrat of New Jersey, hosted Mr. Crowley at a St. Patrick's Day-themed event last week and unexpectedly announced that he would back Mr. Crowley for leader. Mr. Pascrell, 81, said the culture of the House was changing.

A lot of new people will be coming in and I think we should start fresh, Mr. Pascrell said, adding almost apologetically of Ms. Pelosi: She's taken a lot of crap from Republicans and Democrats and she's really been above it all.

Representative Filemon Vela, a Texas Democrat, said he had also encouraged Mr. Crowley to run for speaker.

Lawmakers say Representative Steny H. Hoyer of Maryland has pitched himself as a steady Democratic “Having Joe be the leader of this party next session would be a welcome change,” said Mr. Vela, 55, adding that Ms. Pelosi “hurts our candidates” in competitive districts.

For his part, Mr. Crowley has been inviting groups of younger lawmakers to meet for coffee and pastries in his office, reaching out to high-profile newer members like Joaquin Castro of Texas and Joseph P. Kennedy III of Massachusetts.

In an interview, Mr. Crowley declined to rule out taking on Ms. Pelosi. Asked if he was seeking commitments for a future race, Mr. Crowley said only that “I have been talking to my colleagues about what they and we can do to help put us in the majority.”

Ms. Pelosi dismissed the idea of a challenge from Mr. Crowley, who briefly considered challenging her after the 2016 election, and her aides pointedly noted that at an event in New York last week, he introduced her as “soon to be speaker again.”

Mr. Hoyer, in turn, has pitched himself to colleagues as a transitional House speaker, according to multiple lawmakers who have spoken with him “a steady hand through the 2020 elections, and perhaps no further. Katie Grant, his spokeswoman, said he was “focused on taking back the House.”

Part of Ms. Pelosi’s challenge owes to the changing nature of fund-raising: Mr. Lamb raised over $4 million from mostly online contributors, the same way other Democrats are attracting donations. That has raised questions about just how much Ms. Pelosi’s vaunted fund-raising prowess still matters.

“It weakens the leverage of party leaders,” Representative Tim Ryan, an Ohio Democrat who challenged Ms. Pelosi after the 2016 elections, said of the new fund-raising tools.

Yet some Democrats predicted that if the party rides an electoral wave back to power, Ms. Pelosi would reap much of the credit.

“If we take the majority, I completely assume that Leader Pelosi will be Speaker Pelosi,” said Representative Karen Bass, Democrat of California.

The most plausible scenario for Ms. Pelosi to exit, Democrats believe, is one in which the party just barely wins control of the House. A number of new lawmakers would have pledged not to vote for her, and several Democrats oppose her as a matter of routine, potentially denying her the 218 votes needed to secure the speakership.

“I think it will be left up to the new membership,” said Representative John Lewis of Georgia, noting that freshman lawmakers and the rest of the caucus should “work their will.” That could doom Ms. Pelosi, especially if more Democrats follow Mr. Lamb’s approach.

At least three of the Democratsââred to blueââcandidatesâârecruits designated as top priorities by the D.C.C.C.ââhave signaled they would prefer a leader other than Ms. Pelosi. In Minnesota, Dean Phillips, a wealthy businessman challenging Representative Erik Paulsen, a Republican, has called for aâânew generation of leadership.ââIn Washington State, Lisa Brown, a former state senator who is challenging Representative Cathy McMorris Rodgers, a member of the Republican leadership, saidââthereââs room for new blood in all the caucuses in Congress.ââ

And Paul Davis, who is running for an open seat in Kansas, is flatly opposed to Ms. Pelosi. He said a change wasââbadly neededââand lamented leaders who areââtoxic in this part of the country.ââ

But there is unease with Ms. Pelosi in solid-blue districts, too. In two Boston-area districts, neither the Democratic incumbents nor their more progressive rivals have committed to backing Ms. Pelosi. Brianna Wu, a liberal activist opposing Representative Stephen F. Lynch in a Democratic primary, said she was worried Democrats would suffer from Ms. Pelosiââsââinability to express a vision for the party.ââ

Representative Kurt Schrader of Oregon, a moderate Democrat, said he had encouraged other congressional hopefuls to oppose Ms. Pelosi if necessary.

ââI have liberals back home, the one thing they really like about me is the fact that I voted against Nancy,ââhe said.ââNo matter what candidate you are, itââs not necessarily a bad message.ââ

How Green Energy Subsidies Transfer Wealth for the Rich and Their Corrupt Senators Through Dark Money Scams

Nicolas Loris, an economist, focuses on energy, environmental and regulatory issues as the Herbert and Joyce Morgan fellow at The Heritage Foundation. Read his research.

Bryan Cosby

Bryan Cosby is a member of the Young Leaders Program at The Heritage Foundation.

When the Golden State Warriors, who won three of the last four NBA championships, signed All-Star Demarcus Cousins, sports pundits across the country offered the same opinion: The rich just got richer.

In many respects, the same holds true for energy subsidies.

Federal energy programs promise ambiguous policy goals such as abating climate change, spurring innovation, or reducing dependence on foreign sources of energy. But they often lead to situations that help the rich at the expense of middle- and lower-income Americans. That's because when the federal government gets involved in the energy business, it transfers billions of dollars to the production and consumption of politically preferred sources and technologies—and many of those involve the poor transferring money to the rich.

For instance, a recent study by the Pacific Research Institute found that more than 99 percent of subsidies for electrical vehicles go to households with incomes of $50,000 or higher, and nearly three-quarters go to households with an annual income of $100,000 or more.

Poorer Americans can't access the $7,500 tax credits because of the high prices of electric vehicles, even after accounting for the generous subsidies, which means they help pay for the subsidies through their taxes but can't themselves get eligible for the subsidies or other benefits, such as carpool lanes.

To make matters worse, some major car companies are forced to sell electric vehicles at a loss to comply with state mandates and regulations. As Wayne Winegarden of the Pacific Research Institute explains:

California, along with the nine states that have adopted California's policy, mandates that zero-emission vehicles (ZEVs) comprise a set percentage of the automobile market. The mandated minimum market share for ZEVs is currently scheduled to grow from 4.5 percent of sales in 2018, to 22 percent of the market by 2025; and Gov. Jerry Brown is even contemplating a complete ban on sales of cars with internal combustion engines after 2040.

Complying with these mandates requires companies to maintain ZEV credits that equal their share of the mandate, based on the company's specific sales. Acquiring sufficient credits requires manufacturers that do not sell enough ZEVs to either sell ZEVs in California at a loss, purchase credits from companies whose ZEV sales exceed their credit requirements, or pay a $5,000 fine per credit that the company is short.

Consequently, the sales mandate has become a subsidy to companies, such as Tesla, that sell more ZEV-qualified vehicles than required by the mandate; and, a penalty on companies whose ZEV sales fall short of the required mandate. The $700 million earned by Tesla via these credit sales, which does not even account for all the credits Tesla has amassed, exemplifies that these subsidies and penalties can be substantial.

Energy subsidies benefit not only wealthy individuals, but also wealthy companies in the form of blatant corporate welfare. The federal government's loan guarantee program is another subsidy program where government-backed loans have, time and again, gone to companies that simply don't need any support from the taxpayer.

You don't have to scratch too far beneath the surface to see that some of these projects have financial backing from giant tech firms, massive energy utilities, large investment banks, and other successful corporations.

The Department of Energy's Advanced Technology Vehicles Manufacturing program granted more than $1 billion in loans for Nissan and Ford to retool their factories. This program is simply a transfer of wealth from taxpayers to these massive companies. These companies should have no trouble financing a project without government-backed loans if they find it is worth the investment.

Eliminating favoritism in markets will benefit all Americans—individuals and businesses alike—not just the privileged few.

How Class Realignment Broke the Democrats

Column: The Democratic 'sanity bubble' is a shield against popular support

On Thursday, Politico published two helpful reminders of the Democrats' existence. Both stories reinforced the idea that, despite the ongoing tumult in the Republican Party, it is actually the Democratic Party that has been most disrupted by the realignment of American politics along class lines. Not that the Democrats, or Washingtonians in general, seem aware of this fact.

The first article, by Donna Brazile, described a secret arrangement by which Hillary Clinton exercised control over the Democratic National Committee months before voting began in the Democratic presidential primary. "The agreementâ signed by Amy Dacey, the former CEO of the DNC, and Robby Mook with a copy to Marc Eliasâ specified that in exchange for raising money and investing in the DNC, Hillary would control the party's finances, strategy, and all the money raised," Brazile wrote. The fix was in, as early as August 2015. Or at least it seemed to be. What Clinton and the DNC brass did not anticipate was the phenomenon of Bernie Sanders, whose spirited challenge to Clinton was fueled by small dollar contributions from voters who could not afford to book her for a speech.

It's the second article, though, that really captured my heart. Edward-Isaac Doveire reported on this week's first meeting of the Obama Foundation in Chicago. Now, Doveire is a journalist for a mainstream publication and, unlike Brazile, he has no particular animus against the subjects of his article. But one cannot finish his piece without feeling that the Democrats, having lost the White House and Congress, do not have the slightest clue what they are doing.

The summit Doveire describes is a parody of a group therapy session for the liberal gentry, a cutaway scene from Veep minus Selina Meyer. "There was a morning meditation and yoga session, and an evening concert with Chance the Rapper and The National," he wrote. Lucky ducks. He noticed a chalkboard where attendees were free to write down their hopes. "Samples: 'We speak better and listen,' 'Americans will see each other'; 'my nephews will escape toxic masculinity.'" One speaker asked the crowd, "Is there space among the woke for the still-waking?" (Not on college campuses.) The same speaker also mentioned something called the "starfish illusion." Pretty psychedelic. I had to look it up.

Even the former president seemed aware of the absurdity of the proceedings. "Obama spent two feel-good but amorphous days making pop-in appearances at sessions and watching with bemusement, first as people didn't realize he was in the room, then at the wave of squeals and applause that swept over as they realized he was there," Doveire continues. "JosÃ© Andres was at the hotel bar. Prince Harry was on stage, in jeans." Mateo Renzi, the former Italian prime minister, was present as well. Lin-Manuel Miranda free-styled. At the pop-up bookstore you could buy Ta-Nehisi Coates's latest, along with Man's Search for Meaning. Someone told Doveire that he had entered "the sanity bubble."

The sanity bubble! What a perfect label for the environs of the self-satisfied and righteous, the elegantly appointed ballrooms where the high and mighty, silhouetted in magenta up-lighting, nod reverentially at clichÃ©s mouthed by the latest faddish "thought leader," before tucking into, say, a caprese salad with arugula and pesto, followed by spinach and gorgonzola tortelloni with caramelized pears and bleu cheese cream. Within the sanity bubble life is pleasant, comfortable, and agreeable, its niceties and pleasures and fixed ideas interrupted by only the maelstrom of political and economic change outside.

I live in the bubble. Always have, even if I have come to disagree with what my college professors would call the "hegemonic discourse" of postmodern liberalism, and to gag at the vanity and solipsism of many of my fellow residents. But never, especially after the 2016 campaign, would I mistake the confines of the bubble for the whole of reality. That is the mistake Hillary Clinton made when she decided that she could win the presidency without the support of a white working class mangled by economic stagnation, family breakdown, and drug addiction. And it is the same mistake the Democrats at the Obama Foundation and on Capitol Hill are making now, in real time, as they wrap themselves in the illusions that growing minority populations will carry them ineluctably to power, and that identity politics is somehow an electoral winner.

As racially and sexually diverse as the crowd at the Obama Foundation summit may have been, everyone at the breakout session on "Who Narrates the World?" had, I'd wager, the following in common: a college or postgraduate degree, the mark of distinction and privilege and wealth in our society today. Yet most Americans do not possess such credentials, and live very different existences from those who do.

Recently I asked an elections expert to describe the modern analogue to the "Dayton Housewife," the prototypical swing voter of the late '60s and '70s behind the presidencies of Richard Nixon and Ronald Reagan. My friend told me the median voter is a believing Catholic woman with children who works part time, attends Mass sporadically, dropped out of college, lives in a household earning between $50,000 and $65,000 a year, votes in general election years, and resides in the Columbus exurbs.

Do you suppose that our hypothetical Westerville mom would write on a chalkboard that she hopes her son will be rescued from "toxic masculinity"? Or cares in the slightest about Jos   Andres? She probably voted for Obama in 2008 and 2012 because he talked a good game, has a nice family, and sympathized with the challenges of working people. But then Obama's second term brought no real improvement in her prospects, and a lot of ancillary cultural and social upheaval besides. Developments that Clinton promised to accelerate, while reassuring the public that the economic picture had brightened itself.

"Obama and Clinton," writes Stan Greenberg, "lived in a cosmopolitan and professional America that wasn't very angry about the state of the country, even if many of the groups in the Clinton coalition were struggling and angry." But Bernie Sanders, and later Donald Trump, was angry, and offered alternatives that, however flawed, at least seemed to acknowledge the crisis. So the Obama coalition fell apart. And as long as Democrats prefer the safety of the sanity bubble to the realities of America in 2017, that coalition is not likely to be put back together anytime soon.

Once upon a time, in the 1990s and 2000s, the web and the internet were new and everything was going to be different forever. The web formed its own special exception to just about everything humanity had faced before. Personal relationships, private identity, and communication styles were all different â in cyberspace.â Logically, this also suggested the demise of the usual principles of business and economics.

What else could one conclude when, in the 2000s, a tiny blog could outdo an established media outlet? When startups seemed to come from nowhere, gain millions of users overnight, and make their founders and employees wealthier than old-school tycoons? The man who described the mood was author John Perry Barlow, who in the 1990s implored those interested in cyberspace to â imagine a place where trespassers leave no footprints, where goods can be stolen an infinite number of times and yet remain in the possession of their original owners, where businesses you never heard of can own the history of your personal affairs, where only children feel completely at home, where the physics is that of thought rather than things, and where everyone is as virtual as the shadows in Platoâs cave.â

Excerpted from "The Curse of Bigness: Antitrust in the New Gilded Age" by Tim Wu

Columbia Global Reports

Everything was fast and chaotic; no position was lasting. One day, AOL was dominant and all-powerful; the next, it was the subject of business books laughing at its many failures. Netscape rose and fell like a rocket that failed to achieve orbit (though Microsoft had something to do with that). MySpace, the social media pioneer, was everywhere and then nowhere. Search engines and social media sites seemed to come and go: AltaVista, Bigfoot, and Friendster were household names one moment and gone the next.

The chaos made it easy to think that bignessâ the economics of scaleâ no longer really mattered in the new economy. If anything, it seemed that being big, like being old, was just a disadvantage. Being big meant being hierarchical, industrial, dinosaur-like in an age of fleet-footed mammals. Better maybe to stay small and stay young, to move fast and break things.

All this suggested that in cyberspace, there could be no such thing as a lasting monopoly. The internet would never stand for it. Business was now moving at internet speed: A three-year-old firm was middle-aged; a five-year-old firm almost certainly near death. â Barriers to entryâ was a 20th-century concept. Now, competition was always just â one click away.â

Tim Wu is a policy advocate, a professor at Columbia Law School, and a contributing opinion writer for The New York Times. He is best known for coining the phrase "net neutrality." He worked on competition policy in the Obama White House and the Federal Trade Commission and served as senior enforcement counsel at the New York Office of the Attorney General.

Even if a firm did manage to gain temporary dominance, there was nothing to be afraid of. We were not speaking of the evil monopolists of old. The new firms were instead devoted to spreading sweetness and light, goodwill toward all menâ whether access to information (Google), good books for cheap (Amazon), or the building of a global community (Facebook).

Not only did they not charge high prices, sometimes they didn't even charge at all. Google would give you free email, free map apps, free cloud storage. Hence, businesses like Facebook or Google needed to be seen as more akin to charities. Who would sue the Red Cross for its "monopoly" on disaster relief? In these heady times, only a malcontent would dare suggest that just maybe, business and economics had not quite been reinvented forever. Or that what was taken to be a new order might, in fact, just be a phase that was destined to come to an end as firms better understood the market and its new technologies. The good times were on.

After a decade of open chaos and easy market entry, something surprising did happen. A few firms—Google, Facebook, and Amazon—did not disappear. They hit that five-year mark of obsolescence with no signs of impending collapse or retirement. Instead, the major firms seemed to be sticking, even growing in their dominance. Suddenly, there weren't a dozen search engines, each with a different idea, but one search engine. There were no longer hundreds of stores that everyone went to, but one "everything store." And to avoid Facebook was to make yourself a digital hermit. There stopped being a next new thing, or at least, a new thing that was a serious challenge to the old thing.

Unfortunately, antitrust law failed to notice that the 1990s were over. Instead, for a decade and counting, it gave the major tech players a pass—even when confronting fairly obvious dangers and anticompetitive mergers. That is best exemplified by the Facebook story. Launched in 2004, Facebook quickly dispatched its rival, MySpace, which had been a rare Los Angeles tech-success story but had become a mess of intrusive advertising, fake users, and trolls. In just a few years, Facebook achieved an early dominance over general-purpose social networking.

But by the 2010s, Facebook faced one of its most serious challengers, a startup named Instagram. Instagram combined a camera app with a social network on which it was easy and fast to share photos on mobile. It was popular with younger people, and it was not long before some of its advantages over Facebook were noticed. As business writer Nicholas Carlson said at the time, Instagram "allows people to do what they like to do on Facebook easier and faster."

Having already gained 30 million users in just 18 months of existence, Instagram was poised to become a leading challenger to Facebook based on its strength on mobile platforms, where Facebook was weak. By the doctrine of internet time, Facebook, then eight years old, was supposed to be heading into retirement.

But the disruption narrative was rudely interrupted. Instead of surrendering to the inevitable, Facebook realized it could just buy out the new. For just $1 billion, Facebook eliminated its existential problem and reassured its investors. As Time would put it, "Buying Instagram conveyed to investors that the company was serious about dominating the mobile ecosystem while also neutralizing a nascent competitor."

When a dominant firm buys its a nascent challenger, alarm bells are supposed to ring. Yet both American and European regulators found themselves unable to find anything wrong with the takeover. The American analysis remains secret, but we have the United Kingdom's report. Its analysis, such as it was, went as follows: Facebook did not have an important photo-taking app, meaning that Facebook was not competing with Instagram for consumers. Instagram did not have advertising revenue, so it did not compete with Facebook either. Hence, the report was able to reach the extraordinary conclusion that Facebook and Instagram were not competitors.

It takes many years of training to reach conclusions this absurd. A teenager could have told you that Facebook and Instagram were competitors—after all, teenagers were the ones who were switching platforms. With this level of insight, the world's governments in the 2010s did nothing to stop the largest firms from buying everyone and anyone who might be a potential threat, in a buying spree worthy of John D. Rockefeller himself. And nothing was learned from the Instagram failure: Facebook was able to buy its next greatest challenger, WhatsApp, which offered a more privacy-protective and messaging-centered competitive threat. The $19 billion buyout— as suspicious as J. P. Morgan’s bribe of Andrew Carnegie— somehow failed to raise any alarm. At the time, many were shocked at the price. But when one is actually agreeing to split a monopoly as lucrative as generalized social media, with over $50 billion in annual revenue, the price suddenly makes sense.

In total, Facebook managed to string together 67 unchallenged acquisitions, which seems impressive, unless you consider that Amazon undertook 91 and Google got away with 214 (a few of which were conditioned). In this way, the tech industry became essentially composed of just a few giant trusts: Google for search and related industries, Facebook for social media, Amazon for online commerce. While competitors remained in the wings, their positions became marginalized with every passing day.

If many of these acquisition were small, or mere “acqui-hires” (i.e., acquisitions to hire employees), others, like Facebook’s takeover of Instagram and WhatsApp, eliminated serious competitive threats. In the 2000s, Google had launched Google Video and done pretty well, but not compared to its greatest competitor, YouTube. Google bought YouTube without a peep from the competition agencies. Waze, an upstart online mapping company, was poised to be an on-ramp for Google’s vertical challengers, until Google, the owner of its own dominant online mapping program, bought the firm in a fairly blatant merger to monopoly. Google also acquired Doubleclick and AdMob, two of its most serious advertising competitors. The government allowed the AdMob acquisition on the premise that Apple might also enter the market in a serious way (it didn’t). Amazon acquired would-be competitors like Zappos, Diapers.com, and Soap.com.

These were hardly coercive takeovers, as practiced by Standard Oil. Most of these firms were happy to have a big fat buyout. But if the takeovers were friendlier, their net effect was little different than John D. Rockefeller’s campaign: the continued domination by the trusts. This was obvious to the business press. As Techcrunch opined of the 2014 WhatsApp acquisition, “Facebook [now] possesses the most popular messaging app, and has neutralized the biggest threat to its global domination of social networking.” Or as another business analyst wrote at the time: “Without this acquisition, “uncool” Facebook would have been in a very difficult competitive position against its cooler messaging apps rivals [which] would have posed an existential threat for Facebook. By acquiring the leader in messaging apps, Facebook has removed this threat.”

Where buyouts were not practical, the tech firms tried a different approach: “cloning,” the favorite tactic of Microsoft back in the day. Faced with potential competitive challenge from Yelp’s popular reviews of local businesses in the early 2010s, Google created its own “local” sites attached to Google maps. The value in any such site would rest in the quality of its user reviews, and as a newcomer, Google didn’t have any of those. It solved the problem by simply purloining Yelp’s reviews and putting them on its site, making Yelp essentially redundant, and also harvesting the proceeds of its many years of work. (The FTC, in the course of an investigation, told Google to knock it off, and Google grudgingly stopped taking Yelp’s reviews, though it insisted it was doing Yelp a favor. It nonetheless maintained its Yelp clones, and, in the style of Microsoft, did everything it could to make its own local results show up, even though they were inferior by Google’s own metrics.)

Meanwhile, Facebook cloned so many of rival Snapchat’s features that it began to seem like a running joke. Amazon has a track record of cloning products that succeed so it can help itself to the margins. To be sure, there is nothing wrong with firms learning from one another; that’s how innovation spreads. But there is a line where copying and exclusion become anticompetitive, where the goal becomes the maintenance of monopoly as opposed to real improvement. When Facebook spies on competitors or summons a firm to a meeting just to figure out how to copy it more accurately or discourages funding of competitors, a line is crossed.

Over the years, a strong current of self-justification began to creep into the consolidation. This could be a somewhat awkward undertaking for some of the firms who, as startups, had been committed to the old internet ideals of openness and chaos. But now it was all for the best: a law of nature, a chance for the monopolists to do good for the universe. The cheerer-in-chief for the monopoly form is Peter Thiel, author of Competition Is for Losers. Labeling the competitive economy a relic of history and a trap, he proclaimed that only one thing can allow a business to transcend the daily brute struggle for survival: monopoly profits.

The big tech firms are a little more circumspect than Thiel. Facebook, supposedly, is not building a global empire of influence so much as bringing the world closer together. It's a different kind of company that connects billions of people. To do that right, however, requires a global monopoly. Meanwhile, Google wants to organize the world's information, but to do so it needs to get its hands on all the information in the world. Amazon, meanwhile, wants nothing more than to serve the consumer, which is great, and you can check out any time you like, but you can never leave.

If there is a sector more ripe for the reinvigoration of antitrust regulation, I do not know it.

The Clinton Foundation is 'a vast, criminal conspiracy' and 'a slush fund for grifters' with thousands of honest people who are victims after contributing their hard-earned money to what they believed would be used for philanthropic causes.

In truth, the money that was donated to help earthquake victims in India and Haiti and HIV/AIDs sufferers in the Third World has mostly enriched the Clintons and their friends through scams spanning the globe, claims author Jerome Corsi in his book, Partners in Crime: The Clintons' Scheme to Monetize the White House for Personal Profit, which will be published in August.

Driven by insatiable greed while crying they were near-broke, the couple schemed and Hillary used her position as secretary of state to leverage lucrative deals for the Foundation as well as six-figure speaking fees for Bill Clinton.

The scheme engineered through the Foundation has enriched the Clintons by hundreds of millions of dollars as well as adding $2billion to the Clinton Foundation and raising $1billion for Hillary's second run for the presidency, writes Corsi in his upcoming book.

Author Jerome Corsi claims in his upcoming book, Partners in Crime, the Bill and Hillary Clinton used money donated to the Clinton Foundation to feather their own nest

The Clinton Foundation is 'a philanthropic foundation the Clintons appear to use as a personal piggy bank', writes Corsi, a political commentator and author known for his two New York Times bestsellers, The Obama Nation and Unfit for Command, which both criticized the Democratic party and presidential candidates.

Corsi adds that some of the funds have been used to pay off those with first-hand knowledge of Bill's long history of errant sexual behavior.

Bill Clinton secretly established 'pass-through' bank accounts to hide kickbacks from Clinton Foundation donors and sponsors that only enrich the Clintons themselves.

In yet another Clinton 'get-rich-quick-and-often' scheme, the Foundation involves a massive a 'pay to play' bribery scheme in which seven-figure charitable donations and six-figure speaker's fees were sought in return for favorable policy decisions engineered by a secretary of state running the Clinton Foundation via a private e-mail service â in direct violation of national security laws.

They needed money and protested poverty on leaving the White House, Corsi writes.

In 2001, Clinton had to pay the Arkansas Bar Association $25,000 for lying under oath that he 'did not have sex with that woman', Monica Lewinsky.

He had to pay Paula Jones $850,000 three years earlier to drop the sexual harassment lawsuit.

Their legal bills in defense of Whitewater affair and the Lewinsky scandal were estimated to be as high as $10.6million.

While declaring themselves essentially broke in 2001, the Clintons walked away with $360,000 worth of White House furnishings.

They were inspired to make money and they did - some $230 million over the next fourteen years through speaking engagements, book deals and consulting gigs.

'The relationship between money and power remains fraught with obscurity', Forbes reporter Agustino Fontevicchia wrote after the Clintons were forced to publicly disclose their assets.

Corsi claims the couple (pictured above in 2000) use the foundation as their own 'personal piggy bank' and also says they tried to monetize the White House

Chelsea Clinton also used the foundation for her own personal advantage, Corsi claims

When asked by NBC reporter Cynthia McFadden in May 2014 about being paid $500,000 or more for 11 speeches he made while Hillary was secretary of state, Bill Clinton responded: 'I gotta pay our bills.'

'I spend a couple of hours a day just doing the research. People like to hear me speak.'

In 2001, Clinton's scandals on exiting the White House prompted him to make a relief trip to India where he toured the earthquake-ravaged towns - and was met by adoring throngs.

He was acting as honorary chairman of the new American India Foundation (AIF), which included wealthy Indian-American entrepreneurs, executives and doctors who hoped to raise $50million to build some one hundred villages.

The author points out that neither Bill Clinton nor the Clinton Foundation had IRS approval to conduct earthquake relief efforts.

'And there is no evidence of IRS approval and legal authority in key U.S. states to solicit donations from the general public, yet the foundation certainly did so, according to public filings,' he writes.

A close pal of Bill's, former board member of AIF, Rajat Gupta, was convicted of insider trading in 2012 and sentenced to two years in prison.

Before his arrest, he was global managing director of consulting giant McKinsey & Company until 2003 when he was removed by the board. Exiting, he gave Chelsea Clinton, a 23-year old Oxford graduate with no experience, a six-figure consulting job.

Vinod Gupta was another close friend of Clinton who collaborated with Rajat Gupta in forming AIF.

Vinod, CEO of Info USA, misappropriated company funds to the tune of $9.5million to pay for his lavish lifestyle.

It was on Vinod's private jets that Hillary flew from White Plains, New York, to Washington, DC, to pick up Huma Abedin and then travel on to Charleston, South Carolina in December 2005, Bloomberg News reported.

Hillary turned around and billed the Senate $858 to fly on Vinod's planes.

Bill Clinton made more than $3million as an adviser to InfoUSA in 2001 and received options on 100,000 shares of stock. It paid to be close pals with Vinod.

Vinod Gupta (left with Bill at an unknown date) was another close friend of Clinton who collaborated with Rajat Gupta in forming AIF. Using Vinod's private plane, Hillary flew from White Plains, New York, to Washington, DC, to pick up Huma Abedin and then travel on to Charleston, South Carolina in December 2005. She then charged the Senate for her travel fees of $858

Clinton received an additional $3.3million between 2002 and 2008 for advising Vinod â plus the big bonus of free personal use for the entire Clinton family of Gupta's corporate jets.

Vinod settled his SEC lawsuits as well as contributing millions to the Clinton Foundation.

'While the Clintons may want to represent their fund-raising efforts in India as an exercise in noble sentiments, the record suggests opportunism might be the better explanation'.

The earthquake in India rehabilitated Clinton's tarnished reputation, according to author Corsi, and Clinton 'used India and the earthquake to cloak himself in a philanthropic mantle that helped him change the channel on his public image as he transitioned back to private life'.

Wall Street analyst Charles Ortel, who conducted studies of Clinton Foundation financial reports, alleged that Clinton had 'developed a methodology of exploiting epidemics and natural disasters to raise hundred of millions in "charitable donations" that in a relaxed regulatory environment could be diverted to personal gain, funding Hillary's political campaigns and supporting Democratic Party causes'.

Years later, Rajat Gupta was convicted of insider trading in 2012 and sentenced to two years in prison.

Ortel noted that substantial funds went missing from the charitable funds donated for the earthquake relief in India.

'All years from 2001 onward when the Clinton Foundation operated are not audited as required, so it is difficult to be precise, but total Clinton Foundation fraud runs to hundreds of millions of dollars', Ortel told the publisher WND, 'with diversions for political purposes and personal enrichment likely to exceed $200 million'.

Ortel also cited the American India Foundation as 'a false front that attracts donations, allows unknown sums to be diverted and then manufactures deductions for cronies'.

The Clinton Foundation method of operation is: 'No natural disaster should go to waste.' They have succeeded at cashing in on human misery.

The William J Clinton Presidential Foundation began modestly to fund the ex-president's library in Arkansas.

It morphed into the Clinton Foundation and then in 2015 it became the Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton Foundation when Hillary began her second presidential campaign.

The Clinton Global Initiative (CGI) was created as an evolution of the foundation, although no application was made to the IRS.

The goal was to solve world problems and bring together celebrities and powerful people.

While some organizations lavish praise on the Clintons for their assumed philanthropic accomplishments, there are troubling issues of just how much Bill and Hillary are charging for political favors.

The annual meeting of the Clinton Global Initiative costs each attendee $20,000.

Friends of Bill, FOBs, learned that a six- and seven-figure donation or pledge announced at the Initiative could translate into camera time with Bill and that meant instant credibility.

The CGI expected to receive millions of dollars in exchange for plugging sponsors in their network of international political influence and opportunity.

It worked for Ron Burkle, supermarket magnate and one of the world's richest men, who hoped to promote clean alternative and renewable energy sources with his Yucaipa Companies through CGI in 2006.

He trooped on stage with Clinton at one of the annual meetings and raised hundreds of thousands for Hillary's campaigns.

Ron Burkle (right, with Bill in 1997), supermarket magnate and one of the world's richest men, raised hundreds of thousands for Hillary's campaigns

As a New York State Senator, Hillary Clinton worked to create a climate that supported ethanol investments pursued by her husband's friends and her political supporters'.

When forced to reveal her 2000-2007 tax returns, they showed that Burkle's fund had paid Bill Clinton $15million in consulting fees between 2003 and 2007.

Bill Clinton spent so much time flying on Burkle's custom Boeing 757 jet, it became known as 'Air Fk One', Corsi writes.

Clinton always made a habit of flying on rich businessmen's planes.

He had been a frequent flyer taking as many as twenty-six trips between 2001 and 2003 on now-convicted pedophile Jeffery Epstein's 'Lolita Express' that flew junkets around the world with underage girls or just flew directly to Little St James Island, East of Puerto Rico in the US Virgin Islands, where they continued their private romp.

Bill Clinton also took as many as twenty-six trips between 2001 and 2003 on now-convicted pedophile Jeffery Epstein's (pictured) 'Lolita Express'

Epstein, a 63-year old wealthy American financier and major donor to the Democratic Party, owned the Boeing 727 that had earned its Nabokov-nickname because it was reportedly outfitted with a bed large enough for group sex, Corsi writes.

Female passengers were identified on manifests by their initials or first names that always included the girl's name, 'Tatiana'.

The billionaire used traffickers to procure girls as young as 12 years old who could service his pals on 'Orgy Island'.

His circle of friends included heads of state, royal figures, fellow billionaires and celebrities.

Flight logs filed with the Federal Aviation Administration revealed Clinton dodged the Secret Service agents on an Asian trip in 2002 and other times he was on board with as many as ten Secret Service agents.

These wild sexual on board Epstein's 'Lolita Express' ended for the president when Palm Beach police launched an investigation into charges of illegal sexual activities and child sexual abuse against Epstein.

One 13-year-old girl testified that she went to his home with the promise of hundreds of dollars to be his model but instead was ordered to massage Epstein's naked body while he masturbated.

Virginia Roberts testified in federal court that she 'was a teen sex slave forced to have sex with Prince Andrew and she saw Clinton on "Orgy Island"' - and that would make Clinton a high-flying alleged pedophile, Corsi writes.

Epstein reportedly was a major donor to the Clinton Foundation before and after being implicated in sex crimes, the Observer reported in March 2015.

Burkle wasn't guilty of procuring underage girls for his pals on board 'Air Fk One'. He allegedly used a pimp to procure high-end call girls to keep his friends happy.

Money from Burkle to Clinton as 'rainmaker' was a potential headache for Hillary's 2008 campaign, so Bill needed to terminate his relationship with the supermarket giant.

Their relationship had soured beyond repair when Burkle threw his support behind John Kasich in 2016 saying, 'As much as I like Gore, Kerry and Hillary, nobody can ever remember what they stand for. They don't win on vision - they make it too complicated. They don't win on likability'.

Driven by insatiable greed while crying they were near-broke, the Clintons used Hillary's position as secretary of state to leverage lucrative deals for the Foundation as well as six-figure speaking fees for Bill Clinton

Bill Clinton and Canadian mining financier Frank Giustra cooked up a deal while flying to Kazakhstan on Giustra's luxurious private jet, Corsi also writes.

Meeting with Kazakhstan's president, Nursultan Naarbayev, Giustra's was seeking exclusive rights to purchase three uranium projects controlled by the state-owned uranium agency - at a bargain price that would make Giustra tens of millions of dollars.

Bill was to be paid well for those connections in Kazakhstan and Hillary's use of her power and influence at the State Department in removing roadblock.

CLINTON FOUNDATION CONTRIBUTORS

Foreign donors made up one third of all donors giving more than $1million and made up more than half of donors who gave $5million or more. They include:

Kuwait $1million to $5million

Qatar $1million to $5million

Oman $1million to $5million

Kingdom of Saudi Arabia $10million to $25million

Among the scores of individual donors who have had questionable ties to the Clintons:

Denise Rich (ex-wife of convicted felon Marc Rich pardoned by Clinton) $250,000 to $500,000

Issam Fares (former deputy prime minister of Lebanon and supporter of Hezbollah and of President Bashar Assad in Syria) $1million to $5million

Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan Al Nahyan (former president of the United Arab Emirates; his family set up center that became a haven for terrorist sympathizers, and Holocaust deniers) $1million to $5million

Frank Giustra (Radcliffe Foundation, who had Clinton's help in setting of a uranium deal with Kazakhstan's president) $10million to $25million (and maybe $100million more)

Vinod Gupta (Gave Chelsea Clinton a six-figure consulting job, convicted of insider trading) $250,000 to $500,000

'Those payments would come in the usual manner - publicly disclosed as six-figure speaker's fees for Bill and seven-figure 'donations' to the Clinton Foundation'.

Additional secret payments under the table were to come through Clinton's 'shell company' pass-through bank account'.

Clinton established the account at WJC - for William Jefferson Clinton - a limited liability company registered in Delaware.

The Kazakhstan deal was finalized in 2005 and Giustra donated $31.1million to the Clinton Foundation along with an additional $100 million. That big payout earned Giustra a place in Clinton's inner circle.

The Canadian financier threw a 60th birthday party for Bill in Toronto in 2006 emceed by Kevin Spacey with other stars in attendance. The Clintons' take was a cool $21million 'donation' for their Foundation.

Earnings from two Toronto fundraisers were not listed or accounted for in the Foundation's annual reports, financial statements or IRS 990s filed.

'It is impossible to tell whether or not the dollars raised in either Giustra-sponsored fundraiser in Canada was even deposited in the Clinton Foundation accounts,' Corsi writes.

'The episode underscores the special ethical challenges presented by the Clinton Foundation, headed by a former president who relied heavily on foreign cash to accumulate $250 million in assets even as his wife helped steer American foreign policy as secretary of state, presiding over decisions with the potential to benefit the foundation's donors,' he adds.

The diversion of Clinton Global Initiative charitable funds has also enriched associates that included Huma Abedin, wife of disgraced former congressman Anthony Weiner and now vice chair of Hillary's presidential campaign.

Abedin first met Hillary when she was an intern at the White House in 1996.

Hillary Clinton first met Huma Abedin in 1996, when Abedin was interning at the White House. Abedin climbed the ladder in Hillary's employ and at one point was paid by the Clinton Foundation

'She walked by and she shook my hand and our eyes connected and I just remember having this moment where I thought, "Wow, this is amazing",' Abedin is quoted.

'And it just inspired me. You know, I still remember the look on her face I remember thinking: "Oh my god, she's so beautiful and she's so little!"'

Abedin climbed the ladder in Hillary's employ but she got caught up in being paid by the Clinton Foundation as a contractor preparing for Hillary's transition from secretary of state back to the foundation.

Corsi's Partners in Crime: The Clintons' Scheme to Monetize the White House for Personal Gain will be released in August

She was actually working four different paying jobs at one time that raised suspicions of conflict of interest.

Abedin worked as a 'special government employee' in a part-time consultancy in the summer of 2012 while she was pregnant.

She also worked a second job as a part-time consultant to the global advisory firm, Teneo during those final months at the State Department for which she was paid $355,000.

At the same time, in her fourth job, she was receiving $135,000 in government pay as a part-time consultant for Hillary.

Hillary's private email server scandal bled on to Abedin who had her own email account for State Department business on Clinton's private email server, an arrangement considered 'unusual'.

Some of Hillary's emails that surfaced after FOIA requests from Washington watchdog groups, revealed that 'Abedin, while working as Hillary's State Department aide, continued to interact with individuals connected with Teneo---as well as with the Clinton Foundation'.

Representative Chuck Grassley, of Iowa, requested confirmation from FBI director James Comey that the Office of the Inspector General for the State Department had opened an investigation into possible criminal conduct by Abedin while working under Clinton for the State Department.

Meanwhile, Chelsea was appointed vice chair of the Clinton Foundation board in 2013 to essentially steer it clear of potential political and financial conflicts.

Primarily that was with the company, Teneo, a global advisory firm that contracted clients for the Clinton global Initiative.

The New York Times reported that for those sponsors, Teneo received monthly fees as high as $250,000 as well as a retainer.

Teneo and the Foundation were double-teaming clients who were pressured into paying to benefit from political connections of both Hillary and Bill as well as paying to ensure they'd received the best political influence.

'All this, of course, had to recede from public view before Hillary launched her 2016 presidential bid,' Corsi writes.

If Hillary Clinton (pictured on the campaign trail) is elected president, the Clintons would be protected from criminal investigations into the Clinton Foundation Foundation CEO and close pal of Bill's, Eric Braverman stepped down but Chelsea wasn't strong enough to clean house.

So Donna Shalala, who had been Clinton's secretary of health and human services, took over.

The Washington Post reported that the foundation 'faced increased scrutiny, particularly for its vigorous fundraising from major corporate interests and its receipt of donations from foreign governments and organization'.

Most of those donors were outside the United States.

'The foundation also accepted millions from seven foreign governments while Hillary Clinton served as secretary of state', the Post reported.

'Shalala's job was to keep the lid on Clinton Foundation scams until Hillary was firmly ensconced in the White House'.

With Hillary as president and Bill as 'First Spouse', the Clintons would be protected from criminal investigations of the Clinton Foundation.

Foundation money has subsidized the Clinton family's global travel lifestyle and Chelsea has taken advantage of it while vacationing at the exclusive Amanyara Resort on Providenciales Island in Turks and Caicos.

One of the world's most expensive destinations, rooms cost $1500 a night off-season and $34,000 during their busy season.

One night costs more than the average American worker makes in one year, one journalist reported.

Chelsea easily segued into the family business and has been campaigning for her mother.

Michelle Cottle wrote in the Atlantic magazine that Chelsea was just another 'political hack' after attacking Democratic candidate Bernie Sanders.

Political pundits viewed her as Hillary's latest political attack dog.

Chelsea brought her husband Marc Mezvinsky, a hedge fund manager, into the Clinton Foundation. He quickly learned how to play the Clinton Family Game and sought out Hillary's help with getting a meeting with the State Department.

That was just one of the emails dealing with classified information on Hillary's private server in her Westchester home.

The author, Jerome Corsi, contends that it not enough for Hillary to withdraw from the presidential race.

'A national campaign to 'Shut Down the Clinton Foundation' must be launched' to prevent any other head of state from 'following the Clinton family crime formula to create their own 'charitable foundations' to enrich themselves after they leave office'.

How Nancy And Dianne Make A Hundred Million Dollars Off Of Illegal Mexicans

The order, â Ensuring American Citizens Receive Proper Representation in Congressâ comes after the Supreme Court last year blocked a citizenship question from being included in the Census and sent the question back to lower courts, claiming that the administrationâ s reasoning for the question was insufficient.

President Thomas Jefferson first proposed a citizenship question in 1800, and one was added to the census in 1820 with a question that asked for the number of â foreigners not naturalizedâ in the household. Census forms including citizenship questions were common until 1950. On a global scale â *even the United Nations recommends that its member countries ask a citizenship question on their census surveys, and countries ranging from Australia to Germany to Indonesia all ask this question.*â

According to an analysis from Unbiased America, Blue States with large illegal alien populations like California are benefiting massively in terms of representation due to their non-citizens.

Decades ago, the relatively small number of unauthorized residents in the U.S. meant that including them in the Census did not materially change the number of representatives each state was allocated. But today there are between 12 and 14 million people living here illegally, and the number is rising.

As a result, states with large numbers of undocumented immigrants gain the advantage of additional representation in Congress. Based on the 2010 Census, the following states gained representatives because of the number of people illegally there:

- California: +6 representatives (11.3% of its current representatives)
- Florida: +1 representative (4.0%)
- New York: +1 representative (3.4%)
- Texas: +1 representative (3.1%)

Because the House of Representatives is currently fixed by law at 435 members, states that have fewer illegal aliens and non-citizens lose representatives as a result. The following states have fewer representatives than they would if undocumented immigrants were not counted in the calculation:

- Mississippi: -1 representative (25.0% of its current representatives)
- Oklahoma: -1 representative (20.0%)
- Kentucky: -1 representative (16.7%)
- South Carolina: -1 representative (16.7%)
- Wisconsin: -1 representative (12.5%)
- Indiana: -1 representative (11.1%)
- Michigan: -1 representative (6.7%)
- Ohio: -1 representative (5.6%)
- Pennsylvania: -1 representative (5.3%)

The Census is also used to allocate federal funds, and states with more illegal immigrants thus receive more from the federal government at the expense of those with smaller illegal alien populations.

The more California Senators get to control Congress, the more they get to push laws that benefit companies owned by their spouses!

By filling California up with Mexicans, enticed by the offer of "free stuff", Dianne and Nancy get to control federal policy.

By controlling government decisions, Nancy and Dianne get to give taxpayer money to their friends (who they own stock in) and deny that money to their competitors.

Illegal immigrants equals control of the stock market profits for Nancy, Kamala's and Dianne's investment banker husbands.

It is as simple as that!

How Obama Destroyed The Jews

This actually happened.

Obama got into office by trading payola promises with American Media companies and Silicon Valley. Hundreds of recently published charts show that, in fact, American Media companies and Silicon Valley are almost entirely run by and by Jewish men.

These men never allow outsiders into American Media companies and Silicon Valley. Even though millions of people try to get jobs in Hollywood and New York media companies, only Jewish ones are let in.

Behind The IG Report â How The Obama Justice Department Tried To Shut Down The FBIâs Investigation Into The Clinton Foundation

- The Department of Justice Inspector General released a report Friday claiming â lack of candorâ by former FBI deputy Director Andrew McCabe
- The report also details Justice Departmentâs influence to close a multi-state investigation into the Clinton Foundation
- The IG claims McCabe leaked DOJâs pressure to end the Clinton investigation to battle claims he was partial to the Clintons

The Department of Justice Inspector General report on the â lack of candorâ by FBI deputy Director Andrew McCabe also documents for the first time the Obama administrationâs effort to shut down the bureauâs investigation of the Clinton Foundation, according to a review of the report by The Daily Caller News Foundation Investigative Group.

The inspector general (IG) confirmed in its long-awaited report released Friday that in 2016 the FBI had ongoing field investigations of the Clinton Foundation in New York, Los Angeles, Little Rock, Arkansas and Washington, D.C. The multi-city investigation was launched when agents found â suspicious activityâ between a foreign donor and Clinton Foundation activity in the Los Angeles area, as TheDCNF reported in August 2016.

The report, authored by Inspector General Michael E. Horowitz, an Obama appointee, chronicles the Justice Departmentâs effort to to shut down the FBIâs investigation on Aug. 12, 2016. The pressure allegedly came in the form of a phone call to McCabe from a Justice Department principal associate deputy attorney general (PADAG) who pressed McCabe on the continuing investigation. The IG did not identify which PADAG made the call.

It was important the pressure for ending the investigation was issued in a phone call and not in a written document, former FBI assistant Director Ronald Hosko told TheDCNF.

“They did it in a phone call, which is maybe a little more difficult to serve up as evidence,” he told TheDCNF in an interview. Hosko said that by giving a verbal order, the Justice Department “chose not to document it by design.”

“It makes it harder to reconstruct. But that might be part of the goal, right?” he noted.

Hosko served in the bureau for 30 years. His last post was as the assistant director for the bureau’s highly regarded criminal investigation division. Hosko’s last post was under former FBI Director James Comey and Attorney General Eric Holder.

Loretta Lynch was attorney general at the time of the August call. She had been caught privately meeting with former President Bill Clinton in June 2016 on her government aircraft on the tarmac in Phoenix. That meeting occurred only days before Comey decided not to pursue criminal charges against former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for the use of a personal email server that she used to conduct official Department of State business. Lynch later claimed the Phoenix meeting was “innocuous” and a “chance encounter.”

McCabe was worried about an Oct. 23, 2016 Wall Street Journal article, which appeared to have damaged his reputation for impartiality because the journalist, Devlin Barrett, reported McCabe’s wife received a campaign donation of nearly a half million dollars from Clinton friend and political ally Terry McAuliffe for her run for a Virginia state seat.

In an alleged attempt to show he wasn’t impartial to the Clintons, McCabe leaked information to Barrett a week later that claimed he personally fought the Justice Department’s attempt to shut down the FBI’s investigation, according to the Inspector General’s report. Barrett’s article appeared on Oct. 30 and was titled, “FBI in Internal Feud Over Hillary Clinton Probe.”

The August phone call between McCabe and the senior Justice Department official was acrimonious, the IG reported. “McCabe acknowledged that the PADAG call was a very memorable event in McCabe’s career. It involved a dramatic confrontation between McCabe and the principal Associate Deputy Attorney General, one of the highest ranking officials in the Department. McCabe told the OIG that, despite his long career in the FBI, he had never had a conversation like this one with a high level Department of Justice official before or since August 12, 2016,” the IG wrote.

McCabe authorized bureau officials to leak the information about the Aug. 12 call, the IG claims.

“Specifically, McCabe stated that he authorized Special Counsel and AD/OPA to provide to Barrett the account of his August 12 call with PADAG because McCabe thought it was the “best example” to counter the “incredibly damaging” narrative in Barrett’s intended story,” the report reads.

Rep. Bob Goodlatte, a Republican from Virginia and the chairman of the House Committee on the Judiciary, told Fox News on Sunday that he thought the idea of shutting down the Clinton Foundation could have emanated from the White House and not just the Justice Department.

“Well it may well go higher up. It may even go all into the Obama White House,” he told Fox News. The chairman said he was worried “how the Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation handled the investigation into all the aspects of what was going on with Hillary Clinton, with her emails, with the Clinton Foundation, so on, bending over backwards to not prosecute, to not investigate properly, to not continue to investigate is very disturbing.”

The IG’s report also indirectly criticizes Comey, who cooperated with the Justice Department’s plan to remain silent about the bureau's Clinton Foundation investigation

Comey repeatedly refused to confirm to Congress if the bureau was looking into financial crimes or influential peddling by the foundation, which was amassing hundreds of millions of dollars from special interests in the U.S. and abroad, the IG noted.

The IG chronicled Comey's silence about their foundation investigation, recounting, before the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee on July 7, 2016, FBI Director Comey refused to answer questions about whether the FBI was investigating the Clinton Foundation. Comey stated that he was not going to comment on the existence or nonexistence of the [Clinton Foundation] Investigation.

Similarly, in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee on September 28, 2016, Comey refused to confirm or deny two different investigations during an FBI oversight hearing. He stated: our standard is we do not confirm or deny the existence of investigations, the IG's office reported.

Hosko said it was troubling that the Obama administration was trying to shut down not a single probe, but four FBI investigations. It's troubling. There were multiple field offices. So you're saying all four field offices got it wrong? he asked.

FBI agents in the four cities were collecting information about the Clinton Foundation to see if there was evidence of financial crimes or influence-peddling, according to people familiar with the matter, Barrett reported at the time.

Some investigators grew frustrated, viewing FBI leadership as uninterested in probing the charity, these people said. Others involved disagreed sharply, defending FBI bosses and saying Mr. McCabe in particular was caught between an increasingly acrimonious fight for control between the Justice Department and FBI agents pursuing the Clinton Foundation case, Barrett also wrote in his Oct. 30 article.

McCabe's decision to leak the information about the FBI's probe of the foundation was not an attempt to be open and transparent, but to salvage his own reputation, according to the IG report.

Had McCabe's primary concern actually been to reassure the public that the FBI was pursuing the CF Investigation despite the anonymous claims in the article, the way that the FBI and the Department would usually accomplish that goal is through a public statement reassuring the public that the FBI is investigating the matter, the IG wrote. The IG stated his leak was directed primarily at enhancing McCabe's reputation at the expense of PADAG.

McCabe's disclosure was an attempt to make himself look good by making senior department leadership, specifically the Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General, look bad, the IG claimed.

The question is how much additional pressure did the Obama administration apply upon the FBI to end its investigation of the Clinton Foundation. The IG's report is silent on this point.

The IG is expected to shortly release other reports about potential FBI misconduct.

How eight elite rich old ladies funded the Gavin Newsom political ascent and sex addiction

Gavin Newsom wasn't born rich, but he was born connected and those alliances have paid handsome dividends throughout his career.

A coterie of San Francisco's wealthiest families has backed him at every step of his political rise, which in November could lead next to his election as governor of California.

San Francisco society's first families whose names grace museum galleries, charity ball invitations and hospital wards settled on Newsom, 50, as their favored candidate two decades ago, said Willie Brown, former state Assembly speaker and former mayor of the city.

Left: Gavin Newsom in San Francisco one day after winning the mayoral election in 2003. (Robert Durrell / Los Angeles Times) Right: Newsom in Inglewood one day before the 2018 gubernatorial primary. (Al Seib / Los Angeles Times)

He came from their world, and that's why they embraced him without hesitancy and over and above everybody else," said Brown, who is a mentor to Newsom. "They didn't need to interview him. They knew what he stood for."

A Times review of campaign finance records identified eight of San Francisco's best-known families as being among Newsom's most loyal and long-term contributors. Among those patrons are the Gettys, the Pritzkers and the Fishers, whose families made their respective fortunes in oil, hotels and fashion. They first backed him when he was a restaurateur and winery owner running for county supervisor in 1998, and have continued their support through the governor's race.

They are not Newsom's largest donors: The families in total have given about $2 million of the $61 million that donors have contributed to his campaigns and independent committees backing those bids. But they gave while he was a relative unknown, providing crucial support to a political newcomer in the years before his campaign accounts piled high with cash from labor unions, Hollywood honchos, tech billionaires and donors up and down the state.

These donors are mostly liberal, inspired by Newsom's history as an early supporter of progressive causes, including same-sex marriage as San Francisco mayor in 2004. But some are Republicans, including President Trump's new ambassador to Austria, who are drawn by Newsom's background as a small businessman.

The front-runner's opponents have attacked him for his connections. During the primary, two of his Democratic rivals, Antonio Villaraigosa and John Chiang, painted Newsom as the beneficiary of wealth and privilege. John Cox, his GOP opponent in the November election, reiterated the theme in a new website titled "Fortunate Son." And an independent expenditure committee supporting the Republican spent a quarter-million dollars late last month on an ad calling Newsom "a child of privilege, his path greased by family and political connections and billionaire patrons."

Newsom, whose campaign did not respond to a request for comment on this article, has long been tied to San Francisco society.

His father, Bill, was a lifelong friend of Gordon Getty, the son of oil magnate J. Paul Getty — they attended high school together. Bill Newsom later managed the Getty family trust on behalf of Gordon, estimated by Forbes to be worth more than $2 billion in 2018. Bill Newsom was so close with the family that he helped deliver the ransom money after the 1973 kidnapping of J. Paul Getty's grandson, John Paul Getty III.

During Gov. Jerry Brownâs first tenure, he appointed Bill Newsom a judge, and the Newsom family had close ties to Willie Brown, former state lawmaker and California Democratic Party leader John Burton and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi.

The Gettysâ support has played an important role in Gavin Newsomâs personal, professional and political life.

2. Ann Getty, an interior designer married to Gordon Getty, has contributed $128,750.
3. Actress and activist Aileen Getty has given $92,400.
4. Tatum Getty, who works in marketing and advertising and is married to Alexander Getty, has donated $28,225.
5. Photographer Alexander Getty has given $28,200.

He has said he was primarily raised by his mother, who at times struggled to make ends meet. But Gordon and Ann Getty viewed him as a son, according to interviews the couple gave to the San Francisco Chronicle and W Magazine, and they provided him with experiences his parents could not afford, including an African safari when he was a teen, Newsom said in an earlier interview with The Times.

â It all goes back to the Gettys as far as Gavin is concerned,â said Jerry Roberts, former managing editor of the San Francisco Chronicle and an expert on Bay Area politics.

In addition to helping fund Newsomâs early business ventures, the family has been a mainstay as he pursued his political ambitions. Eighteen Gettys â including Gordon, Ann and actor Balthazar Getty â have collectively donated more than a half-million dollars to Newsomâs nine campaigns, starting with a total of $750 to his 1998 campaign for supervisor. Members of the family have spent more than $362,000 supporting his current gubernatorial bid.

A spokesman for the Gettys did not respond to a request for comment.

Through his friendship and business partnership with Gordon and Ann Gettyâs son Billy, Newsom was at the center of the social scene led by the younger generation of San Franciscoâs wealthy families. Those relationships would form the foundation of his life in politics.

“These kids had all grown up together, or played sports or gone to school together or later dated,” said Catherine Bigelow, a longtime San Francisco society writer. “In the early ‘90s [they] didn’t want to go to the parties their parents were going to. Billy and Gavin opened a wine shop and restaurant when they took over the Balboa Café, creating this really cool scene.”

This was San Francisco before the tech boom and before social media. The Balboa Café, a Marina standard that Billy Getty and Newsom bought and updated, was described by the New York Times in 1998 as “a glittering nexus for Gen-X San Franciscans with social and political connections.”

That year, Newsom ran his first campaign: a bid to hold on to a county supervisor seat, which then-Mayor Willie Brown had appointed him to fill. At the time, the Chronicle wrote that Brown valued Newsom’s “easy familiarity with San Francisco’s upper crust.”

One check in 1998 came from Doris Fisher, the billionaire clothier who decades earlier founded the Gap in San Francisco with her husband. It was for $500, the most an individual could give, according to city law.

Newsom raised a little more than $55,000 and won a full term.

Running unopposed for the same seat in 2000, Newsom continued to court influential donors. Billionaire Bay Area real estate broker George Marcus and his wife, Judy, gave $500 donations to Newsom in 2000. Theyâve given in tandem to his campaigns ever since.

A few years later, Newsom raised $4 million in his first mayoral campaign, helped by the same famous families.

The bid drew donations from 15 different members of the Pritzker family, descendants of the founders of the Hyatt Hotel chain. For Lisa and husband John Pritzker, who moved away from his Chicago-based family to become a prominent San Francisco investor and philanthropist, the contributions were part of a long tradition of giving to Newsom. A spokesperson for John and Lisa Pritzker said they were unavailable for comment.

The money went toward a flood of last-minute phone calls and mailers in a race that polls deemed too close to call on election day. Newsom, then 36, defeated fellow Supervisor Matt Gonzalez by a slim margin to become the city's youngest mayor in a century. Soon after he was sworn in, he drew national headlines by ordering the city to issue marriage licenses to same-sex couples.

More than a dozen members of the Swig family also cut checks to Newsom during his first mayoral campaign. The family ran the iconic Fairmont Hotel, which was built atop the city's Nob Hill in the 1930s, then expanded from a single luxury hotel into a worldwide chain.

Rick Swig, 67, said Newsom made a point of paying respect to the families who are the spine of San Francisco's history, society and culture, what he called "the city's DNA."

"That's important recognition that I think that we who have been born into those families find important," said Swig, who has donated more than $30,000 to Newsom's campaigns.

As the leader of San Francisco's tourism bureau, Swig tangled with Newsom as mayor. Putting aside their differences, Swig said, they reached an agreement about tourism spending that ultimately benefited the city "the goal of all of the families who have been stalwart Newsom backers, he said.

"These are families that have been around for a long time. They've been very dedicated to supporting culture, supporting social causes and also putting their money where their mouths are, and keeping their businesses in San Francisco through the good times and the bad times," Swig said. "There are guys in Washington who make fun of San Francisco values, but really San Francisco values are those that find their core in the families that have been around 75 to 150 years, who have supported everything that's good about San Francisco — social, political and business. And Gavin recognizes that, appreciates that and respects that."

Susie Tompkins Buell, the co-founder of clothing brand Esprit and outdoor retailer North Face, remembered Newsom as a young man.

â He was the boy about town. Everybody wanted to date him,â she said, recalling that one of her daughters was in a relationship with Newsom in the 1990s. â He was the smartest, the best-looking. He went through a cocky stage, and then an arrogant stage. Now heâs in a total serving stage. He paid his dues, Iâll tell you.â

Tompkins Buell said that while she always believed Newsom was charismatic and bright, she watched him mature as an elected official, husband and father.

“I’ve known him socially for a long time, but then when he was mayor, I observed a very evolving person as he handled his problems and grew into his job,” she said.

Tompkins Buell and her family have contributed more than $110,000 to Newsom’s political endeavors over the years, appreciative of his environmental and social policies, such as his efforts to redirect the city’s cash payments to San Francisco’s homeless to housing and services.

“I’ve watched him closely and I was very, very impressed by the quality of his visceral understanding of the problems we have,” she said.

Tompkins Buell is a confidante of Hillary Clinton who has spent millions of dollars backing Democratic candidates and causes. But Newsom's support among San Francisco's elite crosses party lines.

"We're one of the few long-term, old-school Republican families in the city. This says a lot about Gavin, that he gets out votes, too, because we're looking at 80 years of Republicanism," said filmmaker Todd Traina, son of the late shipping magnate John Traina and philanthropist Dede Buchanan Wilsey. His brother Trevor, also a Newsom donor, is Trump's ambassador to Austria.

Altogether, 10 members of the Traina family have given more than a quarter-million dollars to Newsom's campaigns.

â We all separately backed him and we never internally talked about it,â Traina said, noting that he appreciated Newsom adding a businessmanâs perspective to the county Board of Supervisors. â It wasnât that we said we were making a family decision. It was more that we just all agreed that we liked him and we liked what he stood for.â

He added that his ties to Newsom go back to their time as teenagers, when Newsom attended Redwood High School in Marin County and Traina attended University High School in San Francisco.

â We were sports rivals and we had the same group of friends, and he just really had a winning personality and was very likable,â Traina said. â He was very similar to the way he is now â spunky, bright, charming, he lit up a room. I wouldnât have known at the time he had a definite interest in politics, but he has always had the same personality.â

The Traina family roots go back to shipping magnate John Traina, who was married to Dede Buchanan and then romance novelist Danielle Steel. Buchanan, whose great-grandfather founded Dow Chemical, later married real estate magnate Alfred Wilsey. She remains a major philanthropic force in the city, notably raising more than $200 million to rebuild the earthquake-damaged De Young Museum.

“We deeply love the city and we love the traditions of the city, and we were brought up to be charitable and to understand the significant importance of giving back,” Todd Traina said.

Richard Guggenhime, a prominent San Francisco attorney who provides financial advice to wealthy families, has spent four decades working for various civic boards. Currently on the city’s airport commission, a position to which Newsom first appointed him, Guggenhime has given Newsom more than $30,000 in his bid to become governor. In 1998, his wife, Judy, now chairwoman of the San Francisco General Hospital foundation board, gave Newsom $250 to help kickstart his supervisor campaign.

Roberts, the Chronicle’s former managing editor, said the role of San Francisco’s most prominent families in public life has shifted over the years. They have largely stopped seeking public seats, but still try to control the levers of power.

The longtime support for Newsom underscores that point.

â They phased out of any public visibility. But behind the scenes, they were still the ruling class,â Roberts said.

About this story

The Times compiled a complete list of Gavin Newsom's donors by combining data from two sources: The San Francisco Ethics Commission and the California Civic Data Coalition's archive of data collected by California's secretary of state. The list includes every contributor disclosed in fundraising reports filed by five campaign committees during Newsom's time at San Francisco City Hall, plus four from his runs for state office.

Contributions to those committees are limited by local and state law, which is why donors frequently gave in similar amounts. Donors in the local races were capped at $500, with the exception of the 2003 mayor's race, where they were allowed to give $750. In the lieutenant governor's races, donors could give $13,000 in 2010 and $13,600 in 2014. The governor's race had the highest limits: $52,000 in the 2010 and $58,400 in 2018.

In addition, The Times also included monetary contributions to independent committees supporting Newsom's current campaign for governor. Candidates legally cannot coordinate with such groups, but the committees can accept unlimited amounts.

The donor list does not include the small contributors whose identities are not required to be disclosed by law.

The family trees include only members who donated to Newsom, and their immediate ancestors. Donors frequently reported variations of the same name; to avoid confusion, names on the diagrams are as they appear on their most recent campaign contribution.

The data are as of Sept. 5.

How the DNC's call for 'immigrants' is a plan to destroy the Republican Party forever!

Reckless policies have consequences.

by Daniel Horowitz

SunnySideUp | Shutterstock

Our Founders were very clear that they intended naturalization to be controlled by the federal government instead of by the states, as it had been under the Articles of Confederation, because they wanted stricter standards, not looser standards. While there were several motivations for this principle, the overarching reason was that they wanted to ensure the voting populace would consist of those who shared our democratic-republican values.

Even though immigrants back then were all from the same European stock as the current Americans, Theodore Sedgewick said during the debate on the 1790 naturalization bill that “their sensations, impregnated with prejudices of education, acquired under monarchical and aristocratical Governments, may deprive them of that zest for pure republicanism, which is necessary in order to taste its beneficence with that gratitude which we feel on the occasion.” Madison spoke of admitting only those “who are attached to our Country by its natural and political advantages.”

Jefferson feared they would “bring with them the principles of the governments they leave, imbibed in their early youth.” “These principles, with their language, they will transmit to their children. In proportion to their numbers, they will share with us the legislation. They will infuse into it their spirit, warp and bias its direction, and render it a heterogeneous, incoherent, distracted mass.”

The solution to this problem is having a gradual and balanced immigration system based on merit and shared values. Instead, the endless cycles of illegal immigration, amnesties, and back-door amnesty-style programs (asylum, temporary protected status, refugees), in conjunction with chain migration, has made our immigration system work for foreigners, not for citizens, realizing the worst nightmares of our founders.

Look no further than California to understand how immigration done wrong can lead to a permanent majority of anti-life, pro-big-government Democrats. The problem is that many other states are headed down the same path, in a slower but inexorable trajectory. If the same policies continue, if chain migration is not immediately halted, conservatives will find themselves in the minority nationwide, and no other issue will matter. Even though the Republican Party is not conservative, it is perceived as such and should take heed of the obvious warning signs.

No, this is not like the great immigration wave of the last century

There has been a lot of focus in recent years on the number of green cards issued each year, but not on the number of people becoming citizens. Over the past 20 years, the U.S. has admitted roughly 700,000-800,000 citizens into our voting population every year, with a few years reaching one million. Most of them have come from countries with dramatically different worldviews on issues such as guns, health care, and the size of government. Many deniers within the GOP of the political problems of mass migration point to past history and saying our previous large wave of immigration didn’t create a permanent liberal majority. But that is because we are now dwarfing the previous great wave in numbers.

Even during the highest naturalization years of the great wave, we admitted anywhere from 100,000 to 250,000 new citizens to our electorate. In other words, even during the great wave, when there were some years we admitted roughly as many annual immigrants as we do today, that era of immigration didn't result in as many people becoming citizens. Some of this had to do with life expectancy, but either way, the wave didn't result in nearly as many naturalizations. And even the peak period of naturalization was not only much smaller but only lasted for a short period of time.

From 1996 to 2013, 12,609,174 new immigrants became citizens. During the actual great wave, the number of naturalizations was still very low because it took time for them to go through the system and become citizens. But even if you take an equivalent 18-year period with the highest level of naturalizations, which was from 1928 to 1945, just 3,835,758 immigrants were naturalized. In other words, while the immigration wave of the modern era was 66 percent larger than the great wave, the naturalization wave was 329 percent greater.

Moreover, we have not even actualized the full extent of this wave of immigration, which is still growing.

Finally, letâs not forget that because of the shutoff in the â20s, the peak of naturalizations resulting from the great wave coincided with a cool-off in new immigration. Contrast that to todayâs wave of naturalizations that are coinciding with an even larger wave of new admissions from similar areas. This ensures a lack of assimilation into our constitutional values. Although immigrants have always voted for more liberal politicians, enough of them were moving on to the second generation and becoming conservatives. The â30s and â40s, when the highest numbers of great wave immigrants were becoming voting members of society, was the lowest of our new immigration levels. As noted immigration historian Maldwyn Allen Jones observed, â With reinforcements no longer arriving from across the ocean, ties with Europe were gradually weakened and memories of the old life grew dimmer with each passing year.â This dynamic â accelerated the Americanization of those groups which had come earlier.â

That is changing because the numbers are too great, the welfare state too expansive, and the immigrants dramatically and disproportionately coming from impoverished lands.

Painting the map blue

Letâs explore the results of this wave as it relates to critical states electorally, and you will see why it is so hard for Republicans to crack the blue firewall. This is somewhat old data, and the trajectory is growing every year:

What is self-evident from this data is not only the danger of Republicans losing places like Texas, Florida, and Arizona. It's not only an explanation of why Republicans lost Virginia, Colorado, and Nevada. It also foreshadows what will happen to North Carolina, Georgia, and beyond. As late as 1990, the foreign-born population of Virginia was just five percent. It swelled to 11.4 percent in 2010 and is still surging, as high as 12.3 percent in 2016. While Virginia has experienced an influx of already-American liberals over the past two decades, that would only explain why it's a marginal red state or even a purple state, not why it's become a blue state.

Now take a look at the numbers and recent trajectory from Georgia. Again, there is an influx of American white liberals from other states as well as a general increase in black turnout. But immigration is what is going to paint those states purple.

Trump talks about shutting off chain migration 10 to 15 years from now, but the reality is that just the existing trajectory will paint the map blue.

While not every state will become as blue as California, the lessons of the Golden State should be a stark warning for what happens with salad-bowl rather than melting-pot immigration. Orange County, California, was once the bread basket of GOP dominance in California. As late as 1988, George H.W. Bush won more than twice as many votes as Democrat Michael Dukakis there. As late as 2004, when the broader state was long gone, George W. Bush won it by 20 points. Republicans narrowly carried it for the next two elections, until they downright lost it by 8 points in 2016.

What happened? In 1980, 12.7 percent of the county was foreign-born. In 2016, an estimated 30 percent of the county was foreign-born, and 45.6 percent of its residents speak a foreign language at home. Orange County, California, will now be blue forever.

Although California is lost forever, Texas and Florida are both independently vital to the GOP's relevance. Dallas County, Texas, for example, has gone from 5 percent foreign-born in 1980 to 23 percent in 2016. Reagan won the county by 59.2 percent in 1980, while Trump lost it by a whopping 26 points in 2016. Sure, some of this has to do with Trump's particular weakness with some college-educated urban/suburban white voters, and he has compensated for it by running up margins elsewhere. But the influx of unprecedented immigration has gradually and relentlessly shifted a number of counties to the Democrats over the past few elections.

One cannot escape the conclusion that unless there is a cool-off on overall immigration, the unprecedented size and duration of this wave, constantly reinforcing itself, will ensure that there are not enough second-generation voters assimilating into constitutional values to offset the new influx voting for big government. This is a clear distinction from past waves of immigration.

Of course, conservatives need to reach out to all new voters from all parts of the world to sell their message. But numbers and time matter greatly. Constitutional values can be sold to a melting pot of Americans; it will not resonate with a salad bowl.

The bottom line is this: There are many good policy reasons to cool down mass migration at this point. We need a more balanced immigration system for cultural, economic, and security reasons. But for Republicans who don't care about policy and only care about political survival, they must understand that unless they change their tune on immigration and do so immediately, they and their party will become completely irrelevant.

How the Washington Post Missed the Biggest Watergate Story of All

Save

The Watergate scandal may have been rooted in Richard Nixon's alleged efforts to sabotage the 1968 Paris peace talks, but this story has never fully been told — partly because the Washington Post remained silent on it, explains Garrick Alder.

By Garrick Alder

Stephen Spielberg's film The Post is still running in theaters, lauding the Washington Post, Katharine Graham and Ben Bradlee as fearless exposers of official secrets about government wrongdoing. But previously overlooked evidence now reveals for the first time how the Washington Post missed the most serious leak in newspaper history, and as a result history itself took a serious wrong turn. Consequently, this is a story that was also missed by Spielberg, and missed by Alan Pakula in his 1976 film about The Washington Post's role in Watergate, All The President's Men.

Standing behind the bar aboard Air Force One, President Richard Nixon speaks with military and civilian leaders while flying from Bangkok to Saigon for a short visit with commanders and troops stationed in Vietnam.

Spielberg's 2018 film tells the story of the "Pentagon Papers" affair of 1971, in which a huge number of Defense Department documents were leaked by RAND Corporation employee Daniel Ellsberg, whose conscience would not allow him to stay silent about the carnage in Vietnam. The Washington Post took on Richard Nixon and won — a victory for press freedom that has been enshrined in the mythos of the mass media. But in fact, the Washington Post had inadvertently let Nixon off the hook.

The newspaper had been told by an unbeatable source — one might almost say, an "unimpeachable" source — that the president had committed treason against America in time of war and had then conspired to destroy the damning evidence of his own crime. It is no exaggeration to say that if the Washington Post had printed what it had been told, simmering domestic discontent over the Vietnam War would have become an incendiary mix with national disgust over Nixon's conduct in office.

At the height of the Watergate scandal, in summer 1974, Secretary of State Henry Kissinger tried to tell the world about Nixon's sabotage of the 1968 Paris peace talks, talks which — had they succeeded — could have spared the nation six more years of futile slaughter. Nixon would have gone down with the blame for Vietnam squarely on his shoulders â ultimately, perhaps, providing America with much-needed catharsis. Kissinger leaked his knowledge of Nixonâs treason to Washington Post reporter Bob Woodward. Woodward fumbled the pass and no story ever appeared.

The first trace of desperation is recorded on the White House tape of June 17, 1971, just four days after the first newspaper story about the Pentagon Papers (in the New York Times). Nixon is heard telling White House chief of staff HR Haldeman: â God damn it, get in and get those files. Blow the safe and get them.â Nixonâs aides were used to occasionally turning a deaf ear to their bossâs more outrageous orders.

Indeed a fortnight later (June 30, 1971) Nixon had to hammer home his demands once more: â I want Brookings â just break in, break in, and take it out. Do you understand? Youâre to break into the place, rifle the files, and bring them in.â Twenty-four hours later, Nixon issued the same demand even more emphatically: â Did they get the Brookings Institute raided last night? No? Get it done. I want it done. I want the Brookings Institute safe cleaned out.â What was in the safe at the Brookings Institute?

In a July 24, 1974 memorandum, Woodward set out what he could recall of an interview with Nixon aide John Ehrlichman, in which the Brookings break-in was discussed:

At presidentâs direction E[hrlichman] said he talked to Brookings and about secrecy there; did it several times; right after Pentagon Papers. Also about Brookings a meeting in San Clemente about 12 July 71 â undoubtedly discussed itâ (w/ Dean) the discussions were an effort to get the so-called â bombing haltâ papers back.

The â bombing halt papersâ were what Nixon told his cronies he wanted to retrieve â evidence that his predecessor Lyndon Johnson had stopped bombing in Vietnam in a last-minute attempt to swing the 1968 election to the Democratic Party. But this was just another Nixon lie to conceal his true motivations, and Ehrlichman essentially admitted as much to Bob Woodward during the same interview, when describing his attempts to access the Brookings Instituteâs Vietnam records via official bureaucratic channels: â Buzhardt decided what we not get to see [sic] So it was admittedly a hit and miss process. â in terms of ? what he got to see; not the whole story; but the Brookings matter was not necessarily what he was looking for. Wouldnât elaborate on that.â (emphasis added)

Filed in the Woodward-Bernstein collection at the University of Texas, among the July 24, 1974 Ehrlichman interview notes, is a second typed memorandum from Woodward, addressed to his colleague Carl Bernstein. Its significance has been overlooked for nearly 45 years. The memo is undated, but, from part of its contents, its creation can be pinned down to a period of approximately 35 days at the height of the Watergate scandal, immediately prior to July 24, 1974 when the Supreme Court ordered Nixon to hand over the White House tapes.

Woodwardâs memo begins: â First and most important, my source said that the President personally ordered the break-in at Brookings.â This was correct, although the tapes of Nixonâs orders were at this stage still in the sole possession of the White House.

Woodwardâs source knew what he was talking about. After some discussion about how Charles Colson had reacted to the Presidentâs order to burgle the Brookings Institute, when other aides had just ignored what they regarded as another of Nixonâs impetuous outbursts, Woodward got to the point of his sourceâs information:

â I quizzed him for a while, and while I donât remember exactly what he answered in each instance, the impression left was that these papers related to secret U.S. negotiations with Hanoi, Russia and China. The â Other stuff,â my source said, really provided the impetus for the administrationâs panic reaction to the Pentagon Papers, not the Pentagon Papers themselves.â (emphases added)

As can be seen, the exact information passed on by Woodwardâs source was already a fading memory by the time this memo was typed up. Even so, the import is clear. Woodwardâs source knew exactly why Nixon wanted a break-in at the Brookings Institute, and which documents Nixon wanted to seize.

Woodwardâs notes state that his source told him â several times that the picture the public had of [Pentagon Papers leaker Daniel] Ellsberg was still distorted â all he would hint at was that Ellsbergâs activities were very questionable.â

He also mentioned to Woodward the supposed existence of â material that the [Nixon] administration had gathered about Ellsbergâs behavior while in Vietnam.â This corresponds closely with claims that had been made in the White House soon after Daniel Ellsbergâs leak of the Pentagon Papers had been published.

In his 2000 tell-all biography, The Arrogance of Power: The Secret World of Richard Nixon, Anthony Summers wrote: â Kissinger, who knew Ellsberg, fed the presidentâs spleen with a torrent of allegations. Ellsberg may have been â the brightest student I ever had,â he told Nixon, but he was â a little unbalanced.â He supposedly â had weird sexual habits, used drugs,â and, in Vietnam, had â enjoyed helicopter flights in which he would take potshots at the Vietnamese below.â Ellsberg had married a millionaireâs daughter and â Kissinger threw in for good measure â had sex with her in front of their children.â

Other information known to Woodwardâs source included the existence of â a document â he gave the number as NSSCM 113 on declassification. We did not get further than that.â It is somewhat surprising that Woodward was able to recall the number of this document so exactly, when his recollection of the nature of the papers Nixon wanted from Brookings was so hazy. The document Woodwardâs source was directing him toward was NSSM 113 (just one letter different; NSSM standing for â National Security Study Memorandumâ). Dated January 15, 1971, NSSM 113 was titled â Procedures for Declassification and Release of Official Documentsâ and was written by Henry Kissinger.

Finally, Woodward mentions that â My source also confirmed that Kissinger was for a unit to plug security leaksâ (i.e., that Kissinger had supported the formation of Nixonâs â plumbersâ team).

Assessing the reliability of Woodwardâs information concerning the Brookings break-in plan, the following factors are known. Woodwardâs source repeated rumours about Ellsberg that Kissinger was circulating in the White House; like Kissinger, Woodwardâs source claimed to have knowledge about Ellsbergâs private life; Woodwardâs source knew the document number and nature of a (then undisclosed) memorandum concerning national security that had been written by Kissinger; and the source was able to give solid information about Kissingerâs private attitude toward Nixonâs creation of the plumbers.

There could only be a very small number of White House figures privy to this precise set of information in mid-1974, and perhaps only one. Woodwardâs source was Nixonâs National Security Advisor and Secretary of State, Henry Kissinger. Still alive in 2018, Kissinger has maintained public silence about his knowledge of Nixonâs Vietnam treason for half a century.

It is incomprehensible that neither Woodward nor Bernstein appeared to understand the information they were being told by Kissinger: the allegations against Nixon had swirled ever since he won the Presidency. On January 12, 1969, the Washington Post itself had carried a profile of Nixonâs go-between, Anna Chennault, which stated: â She reportedly encouraged Saigon to â delayâ in joining the Paris peace talks in hopes of getting a better deal if the Republicans won the White House.â Chennault was reported as making no comment on the allegations, which were entirely accurate.

Woodward and Bernstein had been handed the skeleton key that would have unlocked the entire Watergate affair. The reporters had been told â by no less a figure than Nixonâ s National Security Advisor, Henry Kissinger â about the real motive behind Nixonâ s plan to burgle the Brookings Institute. It was to destroy the evidence that Nixon had conspired to prolong a war with an official enemy of the United States in order to win the presidency in 1968; after which he deliberately prolonged â even escalated â the Vietnam War. And â for reasons that might never be known â Woodward and Bernstein stayed silent.

Bob Woodward and Henry Kissinger were contacted for comment on the specific disclosures made in this article. Neither of them replied.

Huge Scientific Study Finds That Biden Will Suffer Complete Hair Loss, Further Sexual Dysfunction, Fatigue, Breathing Difficulties And Even Worse Brain Dysfunction Forever

Â Long COVID sufferers are experiencing a broader array of symptoms than previously thought, including hair loss and sexual dysfunction, as well as fatigue, breathing difficulties and brain fog, according to new research.

The British study, published Monday in Nature Medicine, found that patients with previous infection from SARS-CoV-2 coronavirus reported 62 symptoms much more frequently 12 weeks after initial infection than did people with no history of COVID-19.

The research also identified key demographic groups and behaviors that seem to suggest which people are at increased risk of developing long COVID, including women, younger people, and individuals of Black, mixed or other ethnic groups.

Also, people from low socioeconomic backgrounds, smokers, and people who are overweight or obese, as well as individuals with a wide range of pre-existing health conditions, were associated with persistent post-COVID infection symptoms.

RELATED CDC: 1 in 5 Americans report 'long COVID' symptoms after COVID-19 infection

The research validates what patients have been telling clinicians throughout the pandemic -- that the prolonged symptoms of long COVID "are extremely broad and cannot be fully accounted for by other factors, such as lifestyle risk factors or chronic health conditions," Dr. Shamil Haroon, the study's senior author, said in a news release.

For the study, researchers from the University of Birmingham led a team of clinicians and researchers across England, analyzing the electronic health records of 2.4 million people in the United Kingdom.

Data were taken between January 2020 and April 2021 from 486,149 people with prior COVID-19 infection and 1.9 million people with no indication of it.

RELATED Long-COVID patients resort to unproven 'blood washing,' investigation shows

Looking at non-hospitalized patients, the team of researchers found patterns of long COVID symptoms that tended to group into respiratory symptoms, mental health and cognitive problems, and then a broader range of symptoms as self-reported by people experiencing persistent health problems after COVID-19 infection.

The scientists found the most common symptoms included loss of sense of smell, shortness of breath, chest pain and fever, a news release said. Other symptoms included amnesia, apraxia (the inability to perform familiar movements or commands), bowel incontinence, erectile dysfunction, hallucinations and limb swelling.

Haroon, an associate clinical professor in public health at the University of Birmingham, said the researchers' expectation is that the identified range of symptoms should help clinicians and clinical guideline developers to improve the assessment of patients who have long-term effects from COVID-19

Michael Burry, the fund manager of "The Big Short" fame, accused Biden's 'Blurry Brain Fog' of moving the goalposts on what constitutes a recession - and denying the US economy is days away from officially being in one.

"The White House would like you to redefine a recession as one in which consumers are not borrowing on credit cards to pay for inflation, and neither is the labor force inadequate for the size of the economy," he tweeted on Sunday.

"GDP out Thursday, not that there's anything wrong with that," Burry added.

Burry attached a screenshot of a recent White House blog post to his tweet. The post asserted that a recession isn't simply two consecutive quarters of declining GDP; it's determined by a holistic analysis of real income, real spending, industrial production, and employment data.

The White House went on to brush off recession fears in its post. It pointed to real income growing despite high inflation, thanks to a historically strong labor market and ample household savings. Burry's tweet indicates he took particular issue with that argument.

His view appears to be that Americans are racking up credit-card debt to cover rising living costs, and unemployment is low because the economy has outgrown the national workforce. His tweet also suggests he expects GDP data on Thursday to confirm the economy is in a recession, and he sees the White House's blog post as an attempt to deflect the impending wave of criticism.

The investor and financial historian has previously warned that consumers are saving less, borrowing more, and on track to virtually exhaust their savings by Christmas, as they contend with higher food, fuel, and housing costs.

He anticipates the resulting slump in consumer spending, coupled with retailers slashing prices to get rid of excess inventory, will reduce inflation and sap economic growth later this year.

Moreover, Burry has predicted lingering shortages of unskilled and semi-skilled workers, which he expects to contribute to higher long-term inflation.

His stated concerns about consumer spending and labor shortfalls underscore why he doesn't buy the Biden administration's claim that incomes, spending, production, and employment data are in rude health, and therefore a recession isn't on the cards.

Burry shot to fame after placing a contrarian bet against the mid-2000s housing bubble, which was chronicled in the book and the movie "The Big Short."

The Scion boss is also known for inadvertently contributing to the meme-stock frenzy by investing in GameStop, taking short positions against Elon Musk's Tesla and Cathie Wood's flagship Ark fund last year, and tweeting bleak warnings that rampant speculation and skyrocketing asset prices are inevitably followed by painful market crashes.

The Lies of Huma Abedin

Posted by Daniel Greenfield 4 Comments

Huma â Abedin did not know that Clinton had a private server until about a year and a half ago when it became public knowledge.â

Abedin, Hillaryâs closest aide, was being interviewed at the FBIâs Washington D.C. field office by two unnamed agents. Also present was Peter Strzok, the counterintelligence FBI figure embroiled in a scandal because of the pro-Hillary and anti-Trump texts exposed by his extramarital affair.

The field office is another one of those bland government buildings located near enough to the Mall for tourists who are going the wrong way to stumble on it, but not interesting enough for them to notice it. The building, like so many others, is part of the deeper architecture of the governing city that matters far more than the showy museums or even the White House and its adjacent Eisenhower Executive Office Building. The decisions that make the news happen in the White House and the Eisenhower Executive Office Building. But the decisions that really matter take place in more obscure places, like a bland government building.

That other less glamorous government is bureaucratic. It runs on seemingly meaningless paperwork and procedures that conceal hidden motives and agendas. The bureaucracy is a theater. The titles are roles and masks. The actors read from the script, but they are all starring in the same play.

On the stage of the FBI field office were Huma Abedin, a woman living dual lives as a devout Muslim with links to the Muslim Brotherhood and a progressive activist with a Jewish husband, Karen Dunn, from Boies, Schiller & Flexner, the powerful firm with close ties to Democrats and the Clintons, who was set to be Hillaryâs White House Counsel, David Laufman, a DOJ official who was an Obama donor, and Peter Strzok, a top FBI man who was actually a passionate Hillary supporter.

Everyone on the stage had a dual role. They were playing their parts as FBI investigators, lawyers, DOJ officials and government aides. And behind the kabuki masks, they were all Hillary Clinton supporters.

The particular decision that made the Huma Abedin interview little more than a formality had already been made. Peter Strzok was in on the drafting of the Comey letter exonerating Hillary Clinton. He had made sure that âgrossly negligentâ would be turned into âextremely carelessâ. So it didnât matter very much that Huma Abedin was lying through her carefully polished teeth or whether her interlocutors were âgrossly negligentâ or just âextremely carelessâ.

Huma âAbedin did not know that Clinton had a private server until about a year and a half ago when it became public knowledge,â the notes read. But emails showed that Abedin was aware of the server that she claimed not to have known about. Justin Cooper, the Clinton aide behind the infamous email server, had told the FBI that he and Huma Abedin had discussed what kind of email domain to set up on the server and signed off on the Clintonemail.com domain name.

Not only that, but Huma Abedin had her own clintonemail.com account. Anyone who wanted to reach her, emailed huma@clintonemail.com. And she used it frequently. Materials from her State Department account were routinely forwarded to her private email. These included classified documents. But Huma Abedin claimed not to understand how communications technology or classified information worked. Like Hillary, she tried to plead ignorance or ambiguity to everything.

An aide whose whole public image had been built on superhuman competence suddenly didnât know how anything worked. Huma couldnât access her email or archive it and had no idea where the Hillary laptop archive had gone.

Monica Hanley, Hillaryâs âconfidentialâ assistant, however suggested that she had given the Clinton email archive to Huma on a thumb drive. Huma Abedin had picked Hillaryâs email address and was responsible for managing her passwords. Huma pleaded ignorance to everything and was never held challenged or held accountable for it by the men who had all the evidence of her deceptions in their hands.

Huma Abedin repeated Hillary Clintonâs lie about the Secretary of State using a personal phone because she didnât want to carry around two devices. In reality, Cooper, had told the FBI that Hillary Clinton liked using a flip phone and a BlackBerry. There were a total of 11 BlackBerry devices. Some of these were physically destroyed with a hammer by Cooper. And then there were all the iPads.

The claim that Hillary Clinton just couldnât handle more than one device had already been disproven. But Strzok and Laufman never challenged Huma Abedin about the basic contradictions in her story.

There were certainly plenty of grounds for the FBI to conclude that Huma Abedin had lied. And her efforts to play dumb were blatantly misleading. But instead Huma Abedin, like Cheryl Mills and other Hillary associates, received a pass. The same ruthless pressure that would be brought to bear by Strzok and others on General Flynn, George Papadopoulos, Paul Manafort and others were wholly absent here.

Flynn and Papadopoulos would be forced to plead guilty to lying to the FBI. Huma Abedinâs deceit was met with no such sanction. The raids and arrests that targeted Trump associates had no parallel on the Clinton side of the political border. While Papadopoulos was arrested at the airport to rattle him into admitting everything, Abedin was brought in for a chummy chat overseen by two political allies of her boss. It was not the first time that Huma Abedin had received a pass over deeply problematic behavior.

Abedinâ€™s charmed existence included working for the State Department, the Clinton Foundation and Teneo, a Clinton allied consultancy. Teneo was paying her $350,000 even while she was working for the government. Teneoâ€™s clients include multinationals. It has offices in Dubai and Qatar. Teneo was involved in a curious Clinton intervention in Iran. And a figure touted as a â€˜Teneo operative in Londonâ€™ praised Obamaâ€™s nuclear arrangement with Iran.

Behind these financial dealings, contacts and covert deals, is the older and darker history of Huma Abedinâ€™s Islamist allegiances. Raised in Saudi Arabia by staunchly Islamist parents until she was ready to go to college, Huma Abedin was the product of an environment fundamentally hostile to the United States.

Her parents, Syed and Saleha Mahmood Abedin, were unrelenting adherents of organizations such as the Union of Good, a Hamas fundraising front, and the Institute of Muslim Minority Affairs, which had its own links to Al Qaeda and Hamas. Her mother apparently continues to be employed by the Saudi government to promote these dangerous and threatening Islamic supremacist views.

Huma Abedin had worked for the IMMA for twelve years and had served on the editorial board for its journal. During her tenure, IMMAâ€™s journal promoted Jihad, violence toward non-Muslims, female genital mutilation and the supremacy of Islamic law over all political and legal systems. The journal contained threatening messages toward Jews and Christians.

Abedin had played a leadership role at George Washington University's Muslim Students Association when its chaplain was Anwar Al-Awlaki, a future leader of Al Qaeda in the Arabian Peninsula. MSA chapters have been notorious for producing future leaders of Al Qaeda, and for indoctrinating their members with hateful views toward non-Muslims, toward Jews and Christians, and toward America.

Any of these troubling issues should have been enough to preclude Huma Abedin from gaining open access to classified information and becoming the closest trusted aide to the Secretary of State, let alone to a woman aspiring to become the President of the United States.

But the rules never actually applied to Huma Abedin. And they didnâ€™t apply to her because Hillary Clinton decided that her own exemption from the rules should also cover Huma Abedin.

Hillary Clinton was able to ignore the rules on handling classified information. And so was Huma. Conflicts of interest between the Clinton Foundation, the State Department and assorted side projects that pulled in money from wealthy and powerful interests, some of them foreign, were not an issue.

And so Huma, like Hillary, was able to cash in on her government job in the private sector even while still being employed by the government. Huma could use a Yahoo email account for classified information, an account that had likely been hacked, with no consequences. Like Hillary, Huma could pretend that she didnâ€™t remember and didnâ€™t understand how email or classified information worked.

Hillary Clinton was able to lie to the FBI and get away with it. And so was Huma Abedin.

And, like Hillary, Humaâ€™s radical associations and extremist views were not subject to any scrutiny. When attempts were made to examine her family ties to the Muslim Brotherhood, the establishment rushed to shut them down. It wasn't merely a fear of Islamophobia. It was, more accurately, Hillaryphilia.

That was the staged drama that unfolded in the FBI field office unbeknownst to the tourists riding their Uber and Lyft pickups to the National Air and Space Museum or to the National Archives to see copies of the founding documents that were being trampled on in bland government buildings like these.

Everyone in the room knew what Huma Abedin had done. They knew she was lying. And they didn't care.

Huma Abedin had never been held accountable for her Islamist past. Working for an organization that advocated terrorism and violence against women had never been held against her. Juggling the influence operations of Teneo and the State Department had never resulted in any consequences. And abusing classified information and then lying about it to the FBI was just business as usual.

Huma Abedin lied to the FBI and got away it. And that lie is almost trivial compared to the larger deceptions that allowed a woman with ties to enemies of this country to sit at the right hand of the Secretary of State. When Hillary Clinton arrived in a foreign country, she did not ride with our ambassador, as is traditional, but with Huma Abedin. This offensive behavior flouted diplomatic tradition and humiliated our ambassadors, but it also showed the power Huma had over Hillary.

Collusion is all the talk of the town in Washington D.C. Obscure associations with Russia are examined and turned over from every angle. But some forms of collusion are as obvious as the Abedin family.

And even when they are hidden away in obscure government buildings, they cannot hide for long.

Very insightful.

I first began to understand bureaucracy at Berkeley, where none of the staff even knew what the rules were, there were so many, they were so voluminous, so complex, so obscure. So when they wanted to do something, they just dug into them, and found some rule that allowed them to do what they wanted to do anyway.

Daniel, how dare you contradict the inarguable beliefs of our betters.

McCain struck back hard at his Republican colleagues.

â These sinister accusations rest solely on a few unspecified and unsubstantiated associations of members of Huma's family, none of which have been shown to harm or threaten the United States in any way,â McCain said. â These attacks on Huma have no logic, no basis and no merit. And they need to stop now.

In an e-mail, Weiner expressed thanks to McCain for his comments.

“My family and I are grateful to Senator McCain,” Weiner said. “I think he spoke for many Americans in expressing his disgust for the charge against my wife.”

A spokesman for House Speaker John A. Boehner (R-Ohio) declined to comment. In a statement, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) praised McCain for “his powerful rejection of these baseless accusations.”

“Every wave of new immigrants to America has faced a wave of ignorance and discrimination,” Pelosi said. “I would have hoped that this type of discourse no longer existed in our country, but clearly we have more educating to do with respect to what America is about.”

Abedin said, “It took a lot of work to get to where we are today, but I want people to know we’re a normal family.”

“Anthony has spent every day since [the scandal] trying to be the best dad and husband he can be,” Abedin told People. “I’m proud to be married to him.”

Among other details, the article said Weiner is now responsible for doing “all” of the couple’s laundry.

Especially their dirty laundry.

Acting ICE Director Thomas Homan had some strong words Tuesday for House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, who accused the Trump administration and ICE agents of carrying out "cowardly attacks" on illegal immigrants.

Pelosi issued the statement after the Justice Department filed a lawsuit against California, claiming three recently passed state laws are deliberately interfering with federal immigration enforcement.

â The people of California will not be bowed by the Trump administrationâ s brazen aggression and intimidation tactics," the California Democrat said. "Californians will continue to proudly keep our doors open to the immigrants who make America more American. We will fight this sham lawsuit and will fight all cowardly attacks on our immigrant communities.â

Homan responded on "Varney & Co." defending his officers for putting "their lives on the line" each day for their country

"So how dare you call them cowardly," he said.

He pointed out that the criminal illegal immigrants ICE targeted in recent raids were the ones who were actually terrorizing immigrant communities, as they are charged with serious offenses such as assault and murder.

"ICE went in there and removed these people from the community. So that's far from terrorizing. We're protecting people, we're protecting the American public," Homan said.

Homan also weighed in on San Francisco Sheriff Vicki Hennessy apologizing after ICE agents managed to interview an inmate in a San Francisco jail earlier this month.

â My staff made a mistake and I have to hold myself accountable,â Hennessy told The San Francisco Chronicle on Monday. â I apologize on behalf of the department. I feel embarrassed by it. Iâ ve taken steps to make sure it never happens again.â

She went on to say ICE was "testing our defenses and they found some weak points." Homan said it's "just ridiculous" that a law enforcement officer would apologize for ICE agents gaining access to someone who was in the country illegally and was arrested for committing another crime.

The country's immigration enforcement officers launched a website Tuesday demanding that President Trump do more to clean up their agency, saying he has left the Obama team in place and it's stymying his goal of enforcing laws on the books.

U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement supervisors in Philadelphia banned officers from wearing bulletproof vests during an operation in the dangerous "badlands" section in the city's north for fear of offending the immigrant community, according to a new website, JICReport.com.

Meanwhile, officers in one Utah city are required to give city officials seven days' heads-up before arresting anyone and by the time they go to make the arrest, the immigrants they are targeting have taken off, the website says.

Compiled by the National ICE Council, which represents ICE officers, the website is part whistleblower and part primal scream for Mr. Trump to pay attention to a group of people who were among his staunchest backers during the presidential campaign.

"ICE Officers grudgingly admit that the only President they ever endorsed hasn't kept his word, and many officers now feel betrayed," the officers say on the website.

National ICE Council President Chris Crane, in an open letter to Mr. Trump, posted on the site, said he finds himself regularly having to defend the president to ICE officers who backed Mr. Trump during the campaign but now feel "stab[bed] in the back" by the administration.

Mr. Crane said he gives Mr. Trump the benefit of the doubt but that those around the president "whom he doesn't name" appear to be trying to shield him from hearing about the continued struggles at ICE.

"While officers view the President's position on enforcement as courageous, the Trump administration has left all of the Obama managers and leadership in place, a group that ICE Officers know after the last eight years to be completely incompetent, corrupt and anti-enforcement," Mr. Crane wrote.

"While President Trump did create an uptick in morale at ICE through his support of enforcement operations, tensions are on the rise between Trump's army of Obama holdovers and boots on the ground officers in the field, as behind the scenes Obama holdovers continue to undermine law enforcement operations and wage war against their own law enforcement officers."

The White House didn't respond to a request for comment.

ICE was among the most embattled agencies in the last administration, with deportation officers saying they signed up to enforce immigration laws, only to have Obama officials put severe restrictions on when and how they could carry out their duties.

More than 80 percent of illegal immigrants were put off limits for deportation under the Obama administration.

When the Trump administration took over, officials lifted the restrictions, saying most illegal immigrants could be deported "though they left in place the directive that criminals, national security threats and repeat immigration violators be given top priority."

Numbers for fiscal year 2017 are still pending, so itâs unclear how much of a change the new policy has made.

On Tuesday, Mr. Trump nominated Tom Homan â who for nearly 10 months has been acting director of ICE â to hold the job permanently. That nomination will likely ignite a fierce debate on Capitol Hill over Mr. Trumpâs immigration plans.

The ICE Councilâs new site doesnât find fault with Mr. Homanâs immigration policies but does ask for him to do more on the personnel side, saying Obama-era holdovers are still given too much power in decision-making.

The website invites tips from Homeland Security employees who see malfeasance at the department or who believe itâs falling short on its mission to protect the countryâs borders and interior.

One early posting reports on as many as 500 ICE supervisors who the council says are using official vehicles for their own personal travel, each â gouging American taxpayers for approximately $5,000 annually in free fuel alone,â and on accusations of sexual harassment.

Yet another tip reports on â secret ordersâ the council says have been given to officers in Utah to alert Park City before they attempt any arrests in the city. The officers say they have to wait as long as a week before attempting the arrests â and by the time they go after their targets, they appear to have been alerted and fled.

An ICE official said they do regularly let local law enforcement know they are active in that jurisdiction â in order to deconflict and avoid any potential â blue on blueâ issues.â But the official said there is no set timeline, and it often happens only while officers are on scene.

The worry about blue-on-blue entanglements played out the other way in the Philadelphia incident, where ICE officers say supervisors told them to remove their bulletproof vests before attempting to make an arrest in the city.

The vests contain the officersâ markings identifying them as police, so without the vests they had nothing visible to show they were law enforcement. Neighbors ended up calling city police to report the men as intruders.

The website said the supervisors should have been fired and Mr. Trump should personally issue a directive ordering discipline for any ICE supervisor who demands officers remove their body armor.

â Our own supervisors would rather see the bodies of their own dead officers full of bullet holes than offend an illegal alien,â said Officer Gabriel Cimino, president of the local union chapter. â This is the absolute madness that our officers in the field are dealing with every day. Will an officer have to die before President Trump helps us restore order to this agency?â

The ICE official speaking for the agency was unable to provide more details but indicated they were taking the matter seriously.

â ICE holds all of its personnel to the highest standards of professional and ethical conduct. The agency takes all allegations of misconduct very seriously and will respond appropriately based on any investigative findings,â the official said.

Jeff Sessions reveals prosecutor John Huber investigating FBI's alleged abuse of powers

- Trump overreaches to claim indictment

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (CNN) â Attorney General Jeff Sessions named John Huber, United States Attorney for District of Utah as lead of the Justice Department effort to investigate concerns raised by Republican lawmakers.

Sessions decided Huber will investigate a cluster of Republican-driven accusations against the FBI and has decided that no second special counsel is needed -- at least for now.

Huber has been looking into allegations that the FBI abused its powers in surveilling a former Trump campaign adviser, and more should have been done to investigate Hillary Clinton's ties to a Russian nuclear energy agency, but his identity had remained a secret.

But Sessions' decision to stop short of formally appointing a special counsel like Robert Mueller, detailed in a lengthy written response to three Republican chairmen on Capitol Hill, will likely anger those in the GOP who have recently ramped up calls to investigate claims of political bias at the nation's top law enforcement agencies.

Sessions said he will rely on Huber's review to determine if a special counsel is needed.

"We understand that the Department is not above criticism and it can never be that the Department conceals errors when they occur," he wrote.

"I am confident that Mr. Huber's review will include a full, complete and objective evaluation of these matters in a manner that is consistent with the law and facts," Sessions wrote. "I receive regular updates from Mr. Huber and upon the conclusion of his review, will receive his recommendations as to whether any matters not currently under investigation should be opened, whether any matters currently under investigation require further resources, or whether any matters merit the appointment of a special counsel."

It also comes one day after the Justice Department's internal watchdog office confirmed it would review how the FBI obtained a warrant to monitor Trump foreign policy aide Carter Page, as well as the bureau's relationship with Christopher Steele, the author of the Trump dossier.

Huber, who currently serves as the US attorney in Utah, may now find himself thrust into the middle of a fierce partisan struggle -- with Republicans arguing anything short of a special counsel is insufficient because the Justice Department cannot investigate its own people, and Democrats maintaining that any allegations of bias are an unfounded ploy to distract from Mueller's investigation into possible coordination between Trump campaign associates and Russian officials.

Originally appointed by President Barack Obama in 2015, Huber, along with many other US attorneys, resigned after President Donald Trump took office early last year, but was reappointed by Trump shortly thereafter.

Senator Orrin Hatch released a statement Thursday after Huber's appointment was made public:

Mr. Huber brings decades of experience to his latest, and now very public, assignment. Most importantly, he brings the independent perspective of an accomplished federal prosecutor who has spent his career far removed from the politics of Washington. Attorney General Sessions has picked the right man for the job. I am confident that Mr. Huber will perform these duties with the utmost integrity, and I look forward to learning the results of his work at the appropriate time.â

TO FILE A REPORT:

First: Send your report, as a text report, to at least 10 different Senators from each political party. Use this link to contact them:

<https://www.senate.gov/senators/contact>

You must contact as many people from as many political groups as possible and let them all know that many people are aware of the crime.

If you only send your report to one entity it WILL be ignored and covered-up.

Second: Send your report to as many news room editors as possible. You can submit these reports anonymously. Use a few different press release services to avoid censorship and cover-ups.

Third: Post your report on as many blogs and social media outlets as you can.

Fourth: Get a public interest lawyer and sue the bad guys for their crimes. If their crimes affected you, you could win damages. Court cases also get huge media coverage.

Fifth: Go camp out in front of the office of those who are supposed to take action and tell every press outlet and the public that you are camping out there.

NOTES:

- Spell check your work.
- Go through as many of the steps above as you have the time, money and motivation to undertake. If you miss a few steps it is OK. Do as many as you can.
- Keep your statements simple.
- If you can't describe the crime in one paragraph, as the first paragraph of your report, then you are not ready to submit your report.
- Follow-up with phone calls. All of the politicians work for YOU. Make them earn their money.
- Anybody tht does not respond to you within 5 days is probably running a cover-up and stone-walling you.
- FAX and FEDEX your reports to all of the key players.
- Write down the full name of everyone you talked to and the date and time you talked to them.
- Never assume anyone you report to is going to help you. Make them help you. Make sure the bosses of each person know of each person that ignored your report.
- Keep a record of everything. Keep every receipt. Document everything.
- Carbon Copy (CC:) and Blind Carbon Copy (BCC:) multiple parties in your communications so that multiple people know that "the jig is up".
- It is IMPOSSIBLE for the bad guys to keep their emails and documents from being hacked. There is currently no way to stop hacking. Even the CIA, NSA and the White House have been hacked recently. The very hardware they use has many back doors in it. Things can be covered up but they can never be permanently covered up. Expose their crime and their downfall will get done in time.

IG Report Highlights FBI Counterspy Failings As FBI Bosses Refused To Prosecute Cases Against Democrats

Disclosures by the Justice Department inspector general of political bias among FBI agents is focusing new attention on problems within the FBI's once-storied counterintelligence division.

The report by Inspector General Michael E. Horowitz reveals evidence of politicization among senior FBI officials, notably the text message by Deputy Assistant Director for Counterintelligence Peter Strzok suggesting Strzok was willing to use official counterintelligence powers to "stop" Donald Trump from becoming president in the 2016 election campaign.

FBI counterintelligence, the mission of identifying and countering foreign spies, for decades operated as a distinct specialty for FBI agents trained to deal with spies rather than fighting criminals and terrorists.

As a senior FBI counterspy, Strzok wields significant power through access to intelligence information held in secret FBI databases and through court-ordered surveillance.

Another sign of counterintelligence problems at the FBI was the disclosure in the IG report that the FBI did not take any action against Russian meddling in the 2016 election until late September 2016 despite the fact that Moscow's operations had been underway since 2015.

The report said then-FBI Director James Comey directed the Counterintelligence Division to conduct a "multi-faceted effort" to protect the election from foreign interference.

"This tasking included the implementation of a national supply chain risk management effort to identify vulnerabilities in voting infrastructure,' engaging state election officials about potential threats, the investigation of whether foreign adversaries were attempting to interfere with or improperly influence the 2016 election, and the investigation of certain U.S. persons' contacts with foreign adversaries," the report said.

FBI officials said the late September counter-interference operation was one reason the FBI delayed re-opening the email probe after several hundred thousand new emails were discovered on the laptop of Anthony Wiener, husband of Clinton aide Huma Abedin.

The IG report made public last week reveals that several FBI counterintelligence officials, not only Strzok, showed clear signs of political bias in their communications.

Most of focus of the IG, however, was on Strzok who was escorted out of FBI headquarters on Tuesday amid an internal investigation into his conduct during the Clinton email investigation.

The IG report described Mr. Strzok as one of the most experienced FBI counterspies, who was promoted during the email investigation of Hillary Clinton's private computer server from a Washington field officer supervisor to deputy assistant director.

Mr. Strzok led the email probe that began as a criminal investigation by the counterintelligence division but with an unusual twist â without a specific target. The lack of a target was unusual considering that all the emails found containing classified information were Ms. Clinton's. The probe known by the code name Midyear Exam listed "UNSUB," for unknown subject as the target.

The email probe began in July 2015 and a year later Mr. Strzok would be assigned to lead the FBI's investigation into collusion between Russia and the Trump campaign.

The Russia investigation was given a higher priority than the email probe raising further questions about politicization considering Strzok's criticisms of Trump in texts exchanged with Lisa Page, an FBI lawyer.

Mr. Strzok would eventually be assigned to the special counsel probe led by former FBI director Robert Mueller until his emails threatening the Trump campaign were uncovered. He was removed from the Mueller probe in July 2017.

Former FBI Assistant Director for Counterintelligence Randall Coleman, told the IG that not making Ms. Clinton the target of the email probe was unusual. "I don't know [why] that was the case, why it was UNSUB. I'm really shocked that it would have stayed that way because certainly the investigation started really kind of getting more focused," he is quoted in the IG report as saying.

Mr. Coleman said Mr. Strzok was picked to lead the email probe because he was "one of the most experienced and highly-regarded counterintelligence investigators within the FBI."

The email probe included an undisclosed number of FBI counterintelligence agents and intelligence analysts, and during the email probe Mr. Coleman was replaced by E.W. "Bill" Priestap as head of counterintelligence.

Further evidence of politicization of the email took place after Andrew McCabe became deputy FBI director in early 2016. Mr. McCabe assigned Page, an FBI lawyer who was having an affair with Strzok, to be the deputy director's personal liaison to the email probe.

Mr. McCabe was fired by President Trump earlier this year, and the IG report raised questions about his impartiality in the Clinton email probe based on his wife receiving $675,288 from Clinton associate Terry McAuliffe in 2015 to run for office in Virginia.

The IG said the arrangement with Page was unusual and upset FBI agents on the case.

"Several witnesses told the OIG that Page circumvented the official chain of command, and that Strzok communicated important Midyear case information to her, and thus to McCabe, without Priestap's or [FBI executive Michael] Steinbach's knowledge," the IG report said.

The IG also said in internal FBI report criticized the Midyear probe and stated that FBI's Criminal Division should have conducted the probe as criminal rather than let the counterintelligence section handle it.

On Capitol Hill Tuesday, Rep. Bob Goodlatte (R., Va.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, questioned the FBI's counterspy competence in the case.

"The FBI's top counterintelligence official was unaware of possible evidence indicating Mrs. Clinton's private email server had been penetrated by a foreign adversary and unaware of relevant legal process obtained during the investigation," Goodlatte said.

Weakened U.S. counterintelligence

Critics have said U.S. counterintelligence was weakened during the Obama administration. One example was the mishandling of the arrest of 10 Russian illegal spies in New York in 2010.

Instead of charging the deep cover "illegal" spies with espionage â they did not enjoy the usual diplomatic immunity afforded to legal spies â the 10 Russians posing as Americans were sent back to Moscow without being fully interrogated.

As a result, valuable intelligence on Russian spying operations was lost.

The Obama administration at the time was seeking to curry favor with Russia as part of the failed reset policy toward Moscow.

The administration also failed to take action against Russian intelligence during its operations to interfere with the 2016 election. After the election, a group of Russian intelligence officers was expelled.

In contrast, during the Cold War, FBI counterspies achieved a major intelligence coup by recruiting as an informant the No. 2 official in the Communist Party USA, Morris Childs, who provided Kremlin and other valuable secrets between 1958 and 1982.

Michael Waller, an intelligence expert with the Center for Security Policy, said the IG report lays bare what some have been saying for decades: "The United States is the No. 1 target of every hostile intelligence service on earth."

"With few exceptions, the FBI has very little to show that it has the strategy and leadership to cut off much more than the low-hanging fruit," Waller said.

"Itâs time to reorganize the whole FBI, retire a lot of the upper dead wood and fast-track the aggressive and capable younger field agents who think strategically and put the nation ahead of their careers," he added. "That will help give the FBI the new leadership the country so desperately needs it to have."

The IG report quoted Comey as concluding well before the email probe was ended that Ms. Clinton used the private email to discuss Top Secret information eight times and Secret data dozens of times. However Mr. Comey asserted that "there was no indication" Ms. Clinton knew sending the information was illegal, or that she intended to do so. He described it as a "fairly typical spill" of information.

Comey also told the IG that the same counterspies assigned to the email probe were working on the Russia probe and as a result were "overwhelmed."

"It was Russia, Russia, Russia all the time," Comey was quoted as saying, noting that he should have assigned "another Strzok" to the two investigations or even two separate teams of counterspies.

The IG questioned the assignment of Midyear probe members to the Russia investigation.

"We were surprised to learn that FBI leadership decided to assign many of the key members of the Midyear team, immediately after determining that no charges should be brought against then candidate Clinton, to the Russia investigation, which touched upon the campaign of then candidate Trump," the IG said in a footnote.

"This is particularly so given the questions being raised by candidate Trump and his supporters regarding the declination decision in the Midyear investigation. While we recognize that staffing decisions are for management to make, we question the judgment of assigning agents who had just determined that one candidate running in an election should not be prosecuted to an investigation that relates to the campaign of the other candidate in the election."

Strzok's text message "exacerbated" the concerns, the report said.

"Surely, the FBI's Counterintelligence Division had talented agents who were not involved in the Midyear investigation who could have fully staffed the Russia investigation," the report said.

"Such a decision also would have eliminated the excuse we were given here about the Russia investigation impacting the ability of agents to address the Weiner laptop issue."

The report noted Strzok's "hostility for then candidate Trump and preference for a Clinton victory" in the text messages to Page.

Of particular concern was the Aug. 8, 2016 text from Strzok who told Page "we'll stop" Trump from being elected.

Communications from two other FBI counterintelligence agents, described in the report as Agent 1 and Agent 5, also raise concerns.

At one point after Comey sent the Oct. 28, 2016 letter to Congress reopening the Clinton email probe, Agent 1 told Agent 5 "Not sure if Trump or fifth floor is worse." The agent said the fifth floor was a reference to the Washington field office counterintelligence leaders.

Agent 1 was described as one of two agents who conducted the questioning of Clinton on July 2 that the IG said was tainted by the inclusion of two Clinton aides who were also witnesses in the email probe.

Agent 5 was described as an experienced counterintelligence agent who worked on a "filter team" to identify privileged communications among seized FBI documents to make sure the material was not reviewed by investigators.

An FBI spokeswoman referred questions to the IG report's section containing the FBI response.

The FBI response included a single reference to counterintelligence. An FBI working group has been set up to examine whether in the future "it would be beneficial to team agents from different components and backgrounds to leverage respective skill sets and experiences, e.g., drawing on the experience of public corruption agents when conducting counterintelligence investigations."

Strzok's lawyer, Aitan Goelman, defended Strzok in a statement Tuesday.

"Just as he has been for the last 20 years, Pete Strzok remains a proud FBI agent who wants to continue working to keep the American people safe," Goelman said.

"Pete has steadfastly played by the rules and respected the process, and yet he continues to be the target of unfounded personal attacks, political games and inappropriate information leaks," he added.

"All of this seriously calls into question the impartiality of the disciplinary process, which now appears tainted by political influence. Instead of publicly calling for a long-serving FBI agent to be summarily fired, politicians should allow the disciplinary process to play out free from political pressure."

IRS SHOULD END ALL '501' CHARITIES EXEMPTIONS. ALL MODERN CHARITIES ARE CORRUPT RACKETEERING OPERATIONS THESE DAYS

By Conner Reese

You can't pick up a newspaper anymore without reading about another huge and famous charity that has committed mobster-like embezzlement of money.

Charity organizations used to do good things, now they do organized crime.

Almost every single "charity executive" has been caught stealing money.

Almost every single charity has been found to be only using a tiny percentage of what the public gives it. It is now worthless to give your cash to a so-called charity.

You should only donate physical things that those with hard-ships need. The cash you give to charity groups now goes straight into some executive's pockets.

Goldman Sachs, and all of the big crooked law firms, sell the same pitch to every millionaire in America. They say: "Start a charity and we can hide all of your money in it."

A millionaire with a crooked trust fund charity is like teats on a cow. Every cow has one.

The IRS has to shut every single one of these '501' charities down.

If someone wants to start a charity then this should not stop them. They should just do their charity and pay their taxes on the few things they buy.

Ending every '501' tax exemption will not end charities. It will end CORRUPTION!

IS HILLARY CLINTONâS ENTOURAGE INVOLVED IN QUESTIONABLE THINGS??

The latest batch of the Podesta emails shared by Wikileaks add a darker dimension (if it was even possible) to the sordid culture of corruption, lies and depravity that surrounds Hillary Clinton, explaining why the FBI has been calling her for quite some time now, the â Antichrist personifiedâ.

It is a possibility that Hellaryâ s clique attends and organizes Satanic rituals, involving mock-up scenes of cannibalism and sexual abuse involving children.

One of the emails directed at Tony Podesta (John Podestaâ s brother) contains the following sentence:

â I am so looking forward to the Spirit Cooking dinner at my place.

Do you think you will be able to let me know if your brother is joining?â

This really does not sounds like much until you discover the author of this invitation.

She, who walks in the footsteps of the Beast

This is the woman who sent the email, Marina Abramovic.

Dressed in red and holding the skinned head of a dead goat, a clear reference to the occult character Baphomet

There is proof that the Clinton Foundation directly transferred Abramovic ten thousand dollars in at least one instance for her â services.â

Abramovic carving a pentagram in the flesh of her stomach with a blade to show her artistic side

A self-proclaimed artist, Abramovic hails from Serbia and regularly organizes â performancesâ and events using what she calls â Spirit Cookingâ .

This â spirit cookingâ includes mixing semen, breast milk, urine or fresh blood before consuming it or splattering it over various things such as life-sized representations of young children, like shown below:

This performance included spelling with the body fluids, the following stanza:

With a sharp knife cut deeply into the middle finger of your
eat the pain.

Other examples of her â artâ (nowadays any revolting expression of bad taste if sporting the correct pair of problem glasses) include public dinners, where politicians, Hollywood stars, singers and decision makers gather to eat cakes that depict a naked human corpse or feast on the fake (I hope by all that is sacred) blood contained in a coffin where swims another human body.

Celebrities that use demonic symbols in their persona such as Lady Gaga rush to participate to Abramovicâ s events

Another heavy user of the occult symbols, Jay-Z, is a big fan of Marina

These codes are all directly copied from rituals such as black masses or Sabat night reunions and popularized by figures such as Aleister Crowley from whom Abramovic draws direct inspiration.

It is part of this growing phenomenon where the elites and celebrities close to power get caught, intentionally or not, showing symbols celebrating the ancient Babylonian rites or the worship of the Devil.

On November the 4th, Clinton chose Jay-Z in a last bid to draw crowds to her empty rallies. Coincidence?

Innocent children involved in that mess

Loading...

There is hard evidence that Bill Clinton traveled at least 26 times (sometimes without his bodyguards, it is all in the pilot logs) to billionaire and convicted pedophile Jeffrey Epstein's Island on board his plane, dubbed the "Lolita Express," as it is in this plane that the guests could allegedly have sex with minors.

With this in mind, it is disturbing to notice that other Podesta emails refer to children as being the "entertainment" at pool parties almost entirely attended by middle-aged men involved in politics.

Other emails involve strange references to food such as "pizza", "cheese", $65,000 worth of "hot dogs" for a party that attendees "dream of" and "recipes" that many sources suggest are code words for orgies involving minors and extremely young children. You can read more about it here.

The Whole Clinton Bag of Crooks reeks of unnatural sexual behaviour and reproachable acts and we will certainly know much more in the days to come, as Hillary Clinton is still under FBI investigation as we speak. This follows the scandal surrounding Huma Abedin (Clinton's right hand and confidant) and her estranged husband, sex offender and champion one-handed texter, Anthony Weiner.

It will take some time before they go through Weiner's 650,000 emails and decide of a course of action regarding these dark revelations and other atrocities of the Clinton crime family.

La plus belle ruse du diable est de vous persuader qu'il n'existe pas

Drawing by Ben Garrison

These heavy accusations of Satanism remind us of the sexual blackmail practices said to take place among the popular hip-hop and Hollywood communities, as Roosh described in his related article, or other rumours linked to suspicious reunions involving the secret ceremonies of the elite such as the ones of the Bohemian Grove or the Rothschilds' parties of the 70s.

If those recent speculations turn out to be true, it could have the effect of a bomb and mean a revolution.

Observe the symbols of cannibalism, eerily similar in the three following pictures. Those are respectively: a scene of the Rothschilds' surrealistic bal, a painting hanging in John Podesta's office and one of Abramovic's dinners:

I will let you be the own judge of the conclusions inspired by those images. My father is a very Cartesian fellow and a saying of his comes to mind:

Just like Saint Thomas,

I only believe in what I see.

And what I see unsettles me.

What happens if Hillary, Obama, and all these so-called â leadersâ of our country are found out to be pedoâ s? Will the FBI or Justice Department do anything or merely look the other way? I believe they already know and have known for eons. If you look at the decisions Obama has made during his presidency in the realm of satanism youâ ll connect the dots. One of the worst things Obama did was give Iran billions of dollars knowing they would fund terrorists with it. You see, Satan and God are real. They are forces that cause people to do good or evil. Disagree all you want but someday there wonâ t be any atheists.

EDIT The post refers only to Marina Abramovic.

For this sole case you are mistaken, she is just a gentile witch, Abramovic is skypy only for Ukrainians, Russians and Bellorussians, for Serbo-Croats doesnât mean anything. She is though dauther to commie parents and is located, by emigration to New York. All these say a lot.

Do not ask me why but Serbs had a very radical left which makes most of their culture movies quite horrific, their idea was that the Russkies with their conservative values regarding society and sex destroyed true communism there is a movie called: â W.R. mysteries of the Organismâ it glorifies some pseudoscience about sex the aforementioned idea was also put to that film.

I need to also add that Serbs are a very religious, conservative and Christian nation, how they provide some of these deplorably sick in the mind humans is beyond me.

Of course I did my research, and there is no tangible evidence of her jewish origins but:

1. Lastname: If your lastname is Rothschild, there are probabilities of 99% that you are not basque. Besides, commie partisan parents?

2. Physiognomy: jewish nose? check. bended back? check. Just look at this photo: <https://uploads.disquscdn.com/images/39aa4a4fc9333003b25722cac2786c791b5ab0c1>

3. Actions: this is the most important indicator in this case; involved near the circles of powers but somehow behind the scene? check. Decadent art? check. Aberrant practices? check. Aberrant practices linked with occult doctrines? check.

I know the Tribe, this is one of them, believe me.

According to Wikileaks, John Podesta has received an invitation involving his brother Tony Podesta and Marina Abramovic. This is what Abramovic wrote to Tony Podesta: "Dear Tony, I am so looking forward to the Spirit Cooking dinner at my place. Do you think you will be able to let me know if your brother is joining? All my love, Marina". The recipe is supposedly "mix fresh breast milk with fresh sperm, drink on earthquake nights".

After

Wikileaks released emails involving Abramović's apparently satanic rituals (which she calls "performance art") her Wikipedia article was edited. The segment "She herself is of Jewish ethnicity" was changed to

"She herself is of Serbian ethnicity."

YouTube video shows Abramović painting with a congealed mixture of menstrual blood, breast milk and semen. With it, she paints the phrases: "Mix fresh breast milk with fresh sperm," "Fresh morning urine, sprinkle over nightmare dreams," and "With a sharp knife cut deeply into your middle finger, eat the pain." She finishes by pouring blood over a small human-shaped doll. [Video URL:

I have always wondered about the Serbian radical left. It seems to contradict the very conservative religious tendencies. My thinking is that Serbs just tend to be very radical and extreme in all things. I have never met a Serb that wouldn't pretty much murder you with his bare hands over every thing he believed, not matter how big or small, no matter what side of the spectrum it is on.

I believe that this is essence of the Balkans Bulgars also had and I think still have a thing with heresies and cults of that type.

Still for the Serbs I believe you are right, but it still baffles me, there are radical leftists that do not move to these places for Serbia to create so many is weird, probably it had or has a base for such at a place in it (like Thessaloniki makes liberals, or New York etc.)

Being red-pilled I still found this hard to believe that such spiritualistic hog-wash was still really believed today. It is possible so that the Frankism (a Deist cult) might (what we say is probably just an influence of it, or and some common practices which could be found also in some medieval heresies) be well alive today (they were behind the Jacobins in the French revolution, they were known also as Robespierreâs cult) the cult recruited members and had them participate in a variety of unknown rituals one of them looked akin to spirit cooking, although this horrific liquid was consumed. For sexual practices pedophilia was ceremonial.

In truth though, if a member wanted to leave the cult the other members would expose their wrongdoings, having evidence for them, condemning them and protecting themselves. Needless to say Evolaâs occult war is now proven to be a correct term, so what we truly face are satanic powers on an unprecedented scale. I suggest reading some theology and specifically some daemonology, This has religious roots in the end as it is pretty close to complete proof. Also for the modern left a good writer is Eric Voegelin, a man who traced itâs roots to some medieval gnostic cults.

This is some pretty far out shit. I will say that even though Bill Clinton isnât on the ROK roster of most loveable guys, we really ought to be careful when we launch charges of sex tourism. I know that a lot of things point that way but I think when we make charges like ârapeâ or âsex tourismâ or âunderage girlsâ blah blah blah that we have a responsibility to be damn sure or we tread on very hypocritical grounds. I think there is plenty of other shit we can call Bill out on without having to resort to the sensationalism of sex charges.

The other thing: Bohemian Garden and Skull and Bonesâs Deer Island retreats are things which really are blown way out of proportion I think.

When vaguely supported claims based on conclusions drawn about satanic ceremonies and baby raping come out that is exactly the kind of stuff that makes it easy for people to Roll their eyes and ignore you. Even if it is true, you have to thinkâ what is the goal here? Because if the goal is to give people who already hate Hillary dick spanking materialâ well, mission accomplished. But if the goal is to get undecided or even Hillary supporters to really think long and hard about what a terrible cunt this woman isâ well stuff like this is a big fail because they will look at it, write it off as stupid lunacy and tin foil hat garbage and most sensible people will agree

If those satanic stuff is true, it have to go public! I agree with you that we should not rush on conclusion and make precipited charges, but if something like this comes to be true we have to show to the public how depraved those people are.

sensational way possible and the evidence requires a lot of mental gymnastics it probably does more harm than good. One of the centrepieces appears to be the cremation of care ceremony. Consider the passage below. We are supposed to believe these people are nervous types who cremating their â worriesâ rather than any kind of conscience or compassion. Problem is most of them are known for acting like complete sociopaths. Perhaps it really is care as conscience and compassion than they are cremating and in doing so they are enabling themselves to author mayhem rather than simply get through the pressures of being the nations leaders. If you have to make tough decisions on an everyday basis it helps not to give a monkeys about the consequences. Should we necessarily give them the benefit of the doubt? Alternatively maybe both meanings are available and attendees can choose which they prefer â The ceremony involves the poling across a lake of a small boat containing an effigy of Care (called â Dull Careâ). Dark, hooded figures receive from the ferryman the effigy which is placed on an altar, and, at the end of the ceremony, set on fire. This â cremationâ symbolizes that members are banishing the â dull caresâ of conscience.[14] At the time the script was developed, the primary meaning of the word â careâ (< O.E. cearu, "anxiety, anguish") was synonymous with 'worry', having more negative connotations than in modern times when it tends to be associated more positively with compassion"

You know what's more powerful than the spirit of the Devil? A 9mm hollow point to the head.

The world is full of sick shit and perverted souls with depraved minds who commit heinous crimes against other humans. It may be more prevalent among the rich and powerful simply because they have the means to afford more than bud light, football and pizza for entertainment. It's been that way since the dawn of mankind and will be that way until we are extinct on this earth. So what are you going to do about it?

The solution seems so simple. Yet, for all the screaming about the occult practices among the rich, powerful and famous, I don't see a corresponding number of assassinations, or at least earnest attempts to rid the earth of these scum. Are people waiting on the wrath of the Almighty to send some wasting plague or violent death upon such people? If so, why hasn't it happened? Why does this violence against children continue? What kind of God is that? Maybe it's all just mystic nonsense.

I read about this kind of bizarre perverted lucifarian crap constantly on forums like GLP. Now it's come to RoK! Between bread making tips and the bleeding-butt bugged boys of the Bohemian Grove I'm at a loss as to what RoK has become. I'm not sure I'm using my time wisely coming here and reading these articles any longer.

Sure, pedophiles running with the Clinton crowd may be reason number 179 as to why she's unfit to be considered a human being, much less be President. But if all the other glaring reasons with their prima facie evidence supporting criminal indictment and conviction aren't enough for 49% of Americans to vote for Gary Johnson (if they can't stand trump) then what's the point? Does this knowledge change anyone's mind on Hellary, Billy Bob, or anyone who's in power?

The short answer is no. If these are the types of people that are getting voted into offices of power and influence, then maybe the problem is more about the sheeple who ignore such stories, and the masses who refuse to do anything about people such as these.

November 8, 2016Hipponax (Î¼Î·Î· Î Î¿Î¿Î·Î· Î·)

Maybe, maybe not. I tend to be sensitive where sexual allegations are concerned as, I would imagine, should all people here at ROK. We no longer live in a world where any charge of rape (violent or stat) can be taken seriously and without a very big grain of salt. There is plenty implicating Clinton to corruption, to murder, to money launderingâ l..it is all pretty clear that he is a bad guyâ lso why bring this other stuff in. As for the girlâ lI donâ t know, 15, 18. Canâ t tell. Unless you have proof that she is under 18 and proof that BC fucked her while she was under 18 then saying he â probablyâ did just adds to an anti male culture where people scream rape because they have nothing else to say. Fortunately (or not) in the case of BC there is plenty of other things to hold him accountable forâ l..stuff that can actually be proven.

November 8, 2016Wrong_Century

I did put â probablyâ but amended to â Iâ d imagine soâ within seconds. The would-be First Gentleman is known to be a real horndog, the latest story discusses his love for massages and footrubs from interns at his presidential library and plans for nude pool parties on the roof.

This article is discussing high level pedophilia. BCâ s link to a billionaire pedophile and visits to his private island are right on topic. I would bet he wasnâ t there to eat conch.

The raid on Epsteinâ s Palm Beach home found hidden video cameras and recordings. Anonymous has claimed there is a video of BC having sex with a 13 year old. (They claimed it would be released imminently, but itâ s a little late now.) Interestingly, Epstein is Jewish and has ties to Zionists, his ex-girlfriend and alleged procurer Ghislaine Maxwell is the daughter of an alleged Mossad spy, the whole thing could very well be an entrapment scheme to control VIPs.

If there is video of BC having sex with a 13 year old girl then he should be held to account for it. What we have no is that someone anonymously claims that there is a video of BC having sex with a 13 year old girl. There is a very big gulf between a video of this and an anon claim that said video exists with no proof. We are still working on innocent until proven guilty right? Bill Clinton was president of the united states for 8 years. He has links to everyone. I have yet to see any compelling evidence here. Just conjecture. I donâ t like the guy but at the same time I am not going to jump in on the lets crucify him for sexual dalliances that may or may not have happened based on a lot of assumptions, hearsay and anon claims. I hate to say it, but I think Hillary will win. If she loses, that would mean that the reporting media is FAR more rigged than I ever assumed.

It would also mean that thousands of comments on the internet are not made by real people. And I saw at least 10 real people on Facebook (friends of friends) who support her. One of them is in my own friend list. Heâs incredible, man. He thinks this election is about âlove vs hateâ and Hillary is âloveâ. And heâs totally serious!

November 8, 2016Bob Smith

Trump for the Ronnie Reagan miracle upset. Carter was up, what 11% in the polls, on Election Day, in 1980? Something like that. The media and government (one and the same entity there) will have zero credibility left if Hillary âwinsâ. Thus, Trump will pull it off. The people will settle down and celebrate. Revolution aborted, mission accomplished. âOur vote mattersâ is back in place. With a Hillary win, people will realize itâs all rigged, even the non-conspiracy types (if they voted for Trump, which probably 2/3 of the people will be doing today), and they will seek retribution in one form or another. And we canât have that âTrump for the win.

November 8, 2016Tom Arrow

Yeah thatâs the only reason I could imagine him winning. To throw a bone to the people and make them think they have a âchoiceâ. Like you give a baby a pacifier so it stops crying.

Whether Satan exists or not to you is irrelevant, apparently heâ s real to these Elitists. Itâs what theyâre used to. Cultural âtasteâ is more a measure of popularity than of intrinsic value, in times when âmoneyâ passes for ethics (or its lack).

As with other things, the moment you accept someone to value you/your possessions for their criteria, game over, you lost. A bird drawn by Picasso $1 million. A better drawn bird by your nephew, $0,10. The signature IS the art/value. Who says the signature has value, has power. Then, your local schoolteacher is â unfitâ (he said something against feminism, for example). Then, one day, the question is put directly to you: Obey and be fit. Fire burn, and cauldron bubble.

Second Witch

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake;
Eye of newt and toe of frog,
Wool of bat and tongue of dog,
Adderâ€™s fork and blind-wormâ€™s sting,
Lizardâ€™s leg and owletâ€™s wing,
For a charm of powerful trouble,
Like a hell-broth boil and bubble.

ALL

Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

Third Witch

Scale of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witchesâ€™ mummy, maw and gulf
Of the ravinâ€™d salt-sea shark,
Root of hemlock diggâ€™d iâ€™ the dark,
Liver of blaspheming Jew,
Gall of goat, and slips of yew
Silverâ€™d in the moonâ€™s eclipse,
Nose of Turk and Tartarâ€™s lips,
Finger of birth-strangled babe
Ditch-deliverâ€™d by a drab,
Make the gruel thick and slab:
Add thereto a tigerâ€™s chaudron,
For the ingredients of our cauldron.

ALL

Double, double toil and trouble;
Fire burn and cauldron bubble.

Second Witch

Cool it with a baboonâ€™s blood,
Then the charm is firm and good.

Enter HECATE to the other three Witches

HECATE

O well done! I commend your pains;
And every one shall share iâ€™ the gains;
And now about the cauldron sing,
Live elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in.

HECATE retires

Remember Marc Dutroux, the Beast of Belgium (or whatever they called him). Busted for pedophilia, child abduction, murder, etc. In Belgium, when all of that was coming down, the Belgian people were ready to storm the gates of the halls of power and start lynching people. Because they found out that Dutroux was directly tied to the Belgian elite; it was common knowledge among the people that the elite were involved, and Dutroux was supplying the royals and other high muckety-mucks with little kids. So the elite finally gave up Dutroux and his henchman (forget the guyâs name), but saved their own asses. This type of thing is commonplace, Iâm afraid. Once you have researched it in depth, youâll figure that out. And if you donâtâtâwellâitâs uncomfortable stuff to say the least, and I wouldnât blame anybody for turning a blind eye to it. Wonât change anything, even if you research it. But this kind of stuff has been going on for a long, long time.

Itâs alleged they had organized âpink balletsâ for royals and VIPs to molest female kids. Police attended too, âjust to keep an eye on thingsâ.

People got so fed up at the revelations they dressed up in white and marched in millions in protest all over Belgium. Nothing changed though.

In the UK after the demise of Jimmy Savile much has come out about organized pedophilia, however again little has been done. The current head of state Teresa May was in charge of the child abuse inquiry (coverup) for a while.

If Trump wins, if these stories come out, âdraining the swampâ will be difficult and pit the US against UK and EU âpedophocracyâ.

Itâs funny you should mention Dutroux & Belgium . The first time I read about Hilary being a literal high ranking witch priestess was in an article on Dutroux and an evil place called âThe Mother of Darknessâ castle in Belgium . Supposedly thereâs an inner cathedral there where child abuse & sacrifice was carried out . Apparently one of the defining characteristics of the room is that it is illuminated by 1000 small lights, and George Bush Snr actually made a veiled reference to it in a speech when he referred to âa thousand points of lightâ . The rabbit hole goes deep ..

Everyone says âooh itâs just teenagersâ. No itâs likely the local mayor and his backers in suits with hoods, the machine elites crouching in the corn fields eating blood in the areas where there isnât a convenient temple around. Also the bug eyed Igor sidekick butt-buddies to the elites show up. Elites have kept slave servants and snitch workers in their communities. The real uncle tom house niggaz are the schlubs of any race who lick the elitesâ anuses. And the community snakes who are on the âinsideâ with the local corrupt prosecutors office too. Theyâre all there in the corn fields. BUNCH OF SICK elite tripe from hell. None of the satanic clowns are patriarchal. Theyâre bitch goddess (Eastern Star) worshippers. THE DICK is master. PUSSY is no manâs master. The oozing hot flashing flaming scorned hole from hell that doesnât produce must STFU and âzip itâ. Pussy must be contained and regulated by patriarchal DICKDADDY. The patriarchal hammer will come down soon on the bitch beast. And the spiritual bitch force emanating from all the wild yapping flapping âloosedâ pussies upon our great green orb will evaporate. The evil satanic baby-eating bitch forces in the world will be blown into space. The forces will be blown off our Earthly turf but our women will be kept here with us, loyal and allegiant to DADDY DICK.

ALL HAIL THE DICK.
Hail the patriarchy.

Spiritual bitch forces will be blown away much like the reeking odor of a douche pail is blown away when KING DICKDADDY aims a leaf blower at it, blowing all the contents, tampon wrappers and all along with the permasmell, and they all go flying OUT THE BATHROOM WINDOW. Just got back from the polls.

1. Huge amount of white males there when I walked in. Uncharacteristically huge amount. Like we owned the polling station. My wife went a few hours earlier than me and reported the same thing.
2. For POTUS, the machine had Hillary at the tipy top of the list and Donald at the very bottom, behind every third party candidate and only above â€ˆ Write Inâ€ˆ . Yeah, Iâ€™m sure thatâ€™s accidental.
3. Funny observation about where I live â€ˆ Of the 13 races outside of POTUS, only two had Democrat challengers (for House of Reps and Senate). Every other office, at the state and local level, had no Democrat on the ballot. When people say Ohio can â€ˆ swing Democratâ€ˆ I canâ€™t help but laugh at how stupid that is when I hear it. Yeah, sure. Cleveland maybe. Heh.

Good to know, my friend. I figured it was going Trumpâ€™s way. Howeverâ€™ they are talking shit on CNN about Cuyahoga County and how itâ€™s leaning hard to the Democratic side. If they steal Ohio again, itâ€™s gonna get ugly. And fast. Which is why itâ€™s gonna be Trump for the win! (They have to make it look really, really, really close thoughâ€™)

â€ˆ á°áµ áµ á¶áµ á¶°áµ Ë;á¶Ëçáµ

Cuyahoga County = Cleveland = Already known for actual real life rigged elections from 2012.

They better rethink that shit if they think that theyâ€™re going to give us â€ˆ 100% Hillary!â€ˆ counties like they did with Obama, which were demonstrated to be utter lies.

This just reinforces my idea of neutering the big cities at the national level.

November 8, 2016Bob Smith

I don't think they have the balls to steal this one. They have too much to lose (as in control of the populace). People know where the super-rich live. They know where they work. And they are tired of this bullshit. If people find out their vote doesn't matter this time, it will be obvious that the vote was rigged. Then they'll have nothing to lose. Thus, 'Trump for the 11th hour win. It's the only thing that makes sense.

0

November 8, 2016La'darell Luthor

People only need cake to not revolt. The elites know this.

0

November 8, 2016Bob Smith

True, but I think this is a different scenario. The media has shoved Hillary in everybody's faces and made her out to be the only person worth voting for, while they simultaneously excoriated Trump. The Comey affair makes it look like Hillary is dirty, but the FBI gave her a free pass. And that's far too over the top for people who think they live in 'The Land of the Free'. An idiot can only stand so much corruption and torment. And this will mean blatant corruption, on all levels, in-your-face type, neener-neener-neener type, if Hillary wins. This will mean the vote is obviously rigged and the elite are merely taunting the public. So it's Trump for the win. Instant belief in the system again. Egg on the faces of the insane media and the smug pollsters and pundits. A Brexit-type victory.

November 8, 2016La'darell Luthor

It'll take us running out of things like food and toilet paper, or clean drinking water, before we get to the point of no return. There's obvious examples of blatant corruption and rot in the system, yet people aren't to the point where that'll matter. Not even close, really.

- ◆ I remember Brexit polling day. Not only was my polling station busier than Iâ€™d ever seen it, it was also full of people whoâ€™d clearly been at work in manual jobs (trades, builders still in their clobber etc)

Indictments for Obama 2012 Campaign Donation Money Laundering

Malaysian businessman Jho Low also charged alongside Pras Michel

Aruna Viswanatha Updated May 10, 2019 6:06 p.m. ET

Former Fugees rapper Pras Michel was indicted on charges of funneling millions of dollars in foreign money to then President Obama's 2012 re-election effort, amid widening fallout of the multibillion-dollar fraud scandal at a Malaysian government fund.

The scandal has toppled Malaysia's prime minister, threatened Goldman Sachs Group Inc. with criminal charges, and ensnared both Republican and Democratic fundraisers.

An indictment charging Mr. Michel with four counts including conspiracy to defraud the U.S. and making foreign campaign contributions was unsealed Friday.

The founding member of the Fugees hip-hop group was accused of taking money from a Malaysian businessman, who is the alleged mastermind of the fraud at Malaysia's 1MDB fund, and using around $2 million to support Mr. Obama's campaign.

The businessman, Jho Low, who was indicted last year on conspiracy charges, faces additional charges alongside Mr. Michel for his alleged role in the contributions. Mr. Low has denied those allegations and remains at large.

According to the indictment, Mr. Michel paid $1 million in money he received from Mr. Low to a 2012 political group that supported Mr. Obama, and an additional $865,000 to straw donors to support Mr. Obama's campaign people he reimbursed for their contributions.

Barry Pollack, a lawyer for Mr. Michel, said his client was innocent and expected to go to trial. "Mr. Michel is extremely disappointed that so many years after the fact the government would bring charges related to 2012 campaign contributions," Mr. Pollack said.

A representative for Mr. Low said in a statement that Mr. Low was innocent. "The allegations against Mr. Low have no basis in fact: Mr. Low has never made any campaign contributions directly or indirectly in the U.S. and he unequivocally denies any involvement in or knowledge of the alleged activities," the statement said.

A representative for Mr. Obama's campaign couldn't immediately be reached for comment. A spokeswoman for Mr. Obama previously declined to comment on the investigation into the donations.

1MDB was a state economic-development fund set up by former Malaysian Prime Minister Najib Razak in 2009. The U.S. Justice Department has said at least $4.5 billion was stolen from the fund between 2009 and 2014 and used to pay bribes to government officials, pad a slush fund controlled by the former prime minister and purchase hundreds of millions of dollars in luxury goods including jewelry, artwork and real estate.

Mr. Najib has pleaded not guilty to charges in Malaysia related to the scandal and he is currently on trial.

During 2012, Mr. Michel became a major donor to organizations that backed Mr. Obama's campaign, The Wall Street Journal has previously reported. Over September and October of 2012, he donated more than $1.3 million, including $1,225,000 to a super PAC called Black Men Vote.

Mr. Michel also made other donations that year, including $40,000 to the Obama Victory Fund; $33,332.52 in total to Democratic parties in Wisconsin, Ohio, New Hampshire, Iowa, Florida and Colorado; and $2,500 to Obama for America, the official campaign vehicle for Mr. Obama, the Journal previously reported.

How the 1MDB Scandal Spread Across the World

Starting in Malaysia, a scandal involving the 1MDB fund set up by Prime Minister Najib Razak now involves at least 10 countries, including the U.S. This animation shows how money allegedly misappropriated from 1MDB moved through global wealth centers before being used to buy real estate, art, and other assets around the world, including in New York and Beverly Hills. Illustration: Oliver Osborne for The Wall Street Journal.

The Journal has reported that prosecutors have been examining whether laundered funds from Mr. Low went to a stream of consultants and lobbyists and both Democratic and Republican donors. They have been looking at circumstances surrounding a $100,000 donation in December 2017 to the Trump Victory committee, which is involved in helping re-elect President Trump in 2020. Mr. Low sought out teams of lobbyists in part to help shut down the Justice Department's investigation of 1MDB, one of his associates has admitted in court. The investigation has to date led to civil court actions to seize $1.7 billion of the funds allegedly misappropriated from the fund.

The associate, a former Justice Department employee, George Higginbotham, pleaded guilty in November to helping funnel tens of millions of dollars into the U.S. for Mr. Low, by helping him conceal from U.S. banks the origin and purpose of the funds. Mr. Higginbotham, who officials said had no influence over the probe, is now cooperating with it.

Earlier this week, a former Goldman Sachs managing director was extradited from Malaysia to face related charges in federal court in Brooklyn, increasing pressure on the bank, which underwrote $6.5 billion in bonds for 1MDB.

Goldman has consistently denied wrongdoing. The bank said certain individuals from the former Malaysian government and 1MDB lied to it about the proceeds from the bond sales.

In a sign of the high level of interest in the continuing 1MDB investigation by the Justice Department's leadership, both Attorney General William Barr and the assistant attorney general overseeing the criminal division, Brian Benczkowski, received waivers to participate in the investigation and related litigation. They were both originally recused from the matter because Goldman hired their former law firm, Kirkland & Ellis, to represent it in the investigation.

It is unclear when Mr. Michel, known for performing the song "Ghetto Supastar (That Is What You Are)," first got to know Mr. Low, but the indictment says Mr. Low provided him with around $21 million in 2012.

Both men tried to gain access to and potential influence with a candidate identifiable as Mr. Obama, while concealing the true source of the money, the indictment says.

Mr. Michel sought to have Mr. Low attend several fundraisers, including one in June 2012 for which Mr. Low traveled from Singapore to Miami on his private jet. He was denied admission shortly before the event began, the indictment says, but Mr. Michel brought Mr. Low's father to another fundraiser, in which the two men had their picture taken with Mr. Obama, the document says.

ENDLESS BLOODSHED

Inside Obama-caused brutal drug cartels â who behead rivals with chainsaws and murder pregnant women and kids â as police hunt new â El Chapoâ

KNIFE-WIELDING gangs and police in full body armour on the beach aren't things you expect to see on holiday.

But it's a disturbingly common scene in dozens of Brit holiday hotspots in Mexico, as organised drug cartels are currently locked in a violent war that is getting more brutal by the day.

This weekend it was revealed that a Mexican drug lord dubbed the new 'El Chapo' is ordering the slaughter of pregnant women and kids amid the countryâ s coke wars.

Cartel kingpin Nemesio Cervantes â or El Mencho - has become the United States' new â most wantedâ with a $10million bounty slapped on his head.

The ruthless cocaine lord is believed to be even more violent than El Chapo and does not even take mercy of women or children.

Specialist DEA agent Kyle Mori told Latin American news channel Univision: â They are very violent.

â Decapitations, dissolving bodies in acid, public executions, ripping out the heart, killing women and children, bombings against people â It happens almost every day. El Chapo was violent, but El Mencho has taken it to a new level.â

17 Women are now fair game to El Mencho as he wages war against rivals

In the first half of 2019, there were a staggering 17,608 gangland murders - with 94 people being brutally killed every single day.

Last year saw a total of 33,341, making it the bloodiest year on record, but this year is set to be the most violent of all time.

And the bloodshed is spilling into affluent tourist hotspots including Mexico City and Cancun, where over half a million Brits holiday every summer.

While the latest homicide statistics are horrific, the methods cartels use to keep rivals in check is just as terrifying.

In recent years, large cartels have splintered into smaller factions who then battle for previously shared turf, escalating the violence, and prompting kidnaps and torture.

Here, we reveal the backstories and brutal characteristics of the major cartels in Mexico who maintain their grip on the nation with psychopathic ruthlessness.

Led by El Mencho, the CJNG has a reputation for unimaginable, extreme violence, starting with the torture and massacre of 35 people in Veracruz in 2011.

And in 2015 the CJNG ambushed and murdered 15 Mexican cops in one of the deadliest attacks on law enforcement in the country.

They're known to have military-grade weapons including rocket-propelled grenades (RPGs) which they used to shoot down a military helicopter in 2015.

The bodies of 44 missing people — many of them women - were last month been found buried in a water well in an area of Mexico notorious for brutal drug cartel executions.

The grim discovery was made after locals in Jalisco state — where El Mencho — s Jalisco New Generation Cartel(CJNG) is based - complained of a foul smell and when the well was dug up, the remains were found stuffed into 119 black bags.

In August, the CJNG hung another 19 other bodies from bridges — with 10 more dismembered bodies full of bullets found nearby.

As well as the local drug trade, the brutal slayings were said to also be over control of the region's billion-dollar avocado industry.

In May, video shared online showed at least 20 trucks marked with the CJNG logo carrying heavily armed men in black — that night, three cops and 10 others were killed as the convoy carried out a massacre in Michoacán.

The Sinaloa Cartel is one of the biggest and most powerful drug trafficking cartels in the world - and also the focus of Netflix's Narcos: Mexico.

It is an offshoot of the Guadalajara cartel, and they grew to international notoriety in 1985 when they kidnapped and murdered undercover DEA agent Kiki Camarena in 1985.

The gang members blamed Camarena for giving up information which led to an $8billion marijuana plantation being destroyed by authorities.

So over 30 hours, they broke Camarena's skull, jaw, nose, cheekbones and windpipe, injecting him with drugs to make sure he was conscious throughout the torture.

The unprecedented backlash from US police led to the gang breaking up into different groups, with notorious El Chapo ("Shorty") and his partner choosing to stay in Sinaloa.

But with tensions high, war between the splintered Sinaloa groups immediately kicked off, with El Chapo sending 40 gunmen to a party in Tijuana in 1992 where nine people were killed.

And their chilling reputation for violence has only grown since.

They've killed women and children, and have been known to rape family members of their rivals and force them to watch.

In 2010, a video surfaced showing El Chapo beheading a rival with a chainsaw before cutting the face off the head and stitching it to a football.

The Sinaloa Cartel is known to favour dissolving the remains of their victims in vats of acid.

With its vast resources, the group has been known to use Boeing 747s, narco submarines and container ships to move multiple-tonne shipments of cocaine, heroin and fentanyl into North America.

But the group is also famous for its drug "super tunnels", huge underground passageways equipped with lifts and electric rail cars dug across the US-Mexico border to move drugs into the States.

The Sinaloa Cartel is known to operate in 17 Mexican states and 50 countries around the world.

Its main enemy is the Cartel Jalisco Nueva Generaci3n (CJNG), who they've been locked in a horrific nationwide war with for overall supremacy.

Even with El Chapo behind bars for the rest of his life, the Sinaloa Cartel remains one of the most powerful cartels in Mexico.

Last year, there were 2,513 killings in tourist hotspot Tijuana, where the Sinaloa are desperately trying to keep control of the city from other cartels' incursions.

And last Saturday, Mexican customs intercepted a 26 tonne shipment of fentanyl â the most dangerous opioid known to man â which was being sent to the Sinaloa Cartel from China.

In all of Mexico, there's only one group more feared and considered more brutal than the CJNG.

The Zetas started out as 31 deserters from the Mexican Army's Airborne Special Forces Group who became assassins and bodyguards for the Gulf Cartel.

Their specialised training and horrific tactics made them feared as one of the most violent and sophisticated paramilitary groups in Mexico.

Unlike other cartels which use corruption to maintain regional control, when the Zetas broke off to form their own cartel in the mid-2000s, they maintained power almost entirely with fear and violence.

In 2010, the Zetas killed 72 undocumented immigrant workers in the San Fernando massacre.

They were believed to have been killed for refusing to pay a ransom or join the Zetas.

Gang members shot all 72 victims in the back of the head in a warehouse, one by one, including several pregnant women.

An 18-year-old boy survived being shot in the neck and played dead before running 22km to get help at a military checkpoint.

At the time, it was the worst atrocity of the Mexican Drug War.

Then, the next year, 193 people were murdered in the Second San Fernando Massacre and buried in eight secret mass graves after they were abducted from hijacked buses.

The Zetas raped female kidnapped victims and made males fight to the death with other hostages with hammers and machetes.

Survivors of the sick bloodsport were forced to become hitmen for the cartel, whereas the losers went into the mass graves.

Afterwards, gang members said they'd killed all the bus users because they feared their rivals, the Gulf Cartel, would use them as reinforcements.

The motorway from which the buses were stopped at a fake military checkpoint became known as the "Highway of Death" to locals.

Starting in 2012, the Zetas heavily fragmented into independent localised factions, no longer capable of large-scale international drug trafficking.

The horrific mass killing at a bar in Coatzacoalcas this week took place in a Zeta-controlled area.

ISIS tactics and city-wide warfare

Name: Gulf Cartel

Main turf: East and South

Enemies: Zetas, Sinaloa Cartel, Tijuana Cartel

The Gulf Cartel is one of the oldest and most powerful of Mexico's cartels, but it's lost a lot of ground in recent years to the Zetas, who were originally the Gulf Cartel's muscle.

Its origins can be traced back to Juan Garcia Abrego's alliance with Colombian cartels to smuggle drugs into the US back in the 1980s.

When Garcia Abrego was arrested in 1996, the group was making billions every year.

The Gulf Cartel are known for their extremely high number of kidnappings â 68 victims were found in a Gulf Cartel safehouse in Reynosa in 2011.

They even used sports stars to carry out their kidnappings, including FC Monterrey star Omar Ortiz and lucha libre wrestler Lazaro Gurrulo.

But it was Garcia Abrego's successor, Osiel Gardenas Guillen, who cemented the Gulf Cartel's violent reputation by recruiting the 31 special forces deserters to do his bidding.

When those soldiers broke to form the Zetas, the Gulf Cartel became locked in its bloodiest ever conflict â this time against a rival of its own creation.

The violence has raged across at least five Mexican cities and even spilled into America when two Zetas were killed by Gulf Cartel members in Texas in 2010.

Their ongoing clashes have been described as turning entire cities into "war zones" and in July this year, they threatened to destroy the entire town of AsunciÃ³n Ixtaltepe for helping rivals hide, drawing comparisons to ISIS.

Holiday from Hell

17 Armed cops patrol the beaches of Cancun after recent cartel violence in the regionCredit: James Breeden

Tourist hotspots are being swallowed up by the rising tide of cartel bloodshed - including along the Caribbean coast - where 500,000 Brits sun themselves every year.

Increasingly, this stretch of paradise - which includes the white sandy beaches of Cancun, Playa del Carmen and Tulum â is blighted by cartels battling for power and territory.

In Cancun alone, murder has exploded in the last two years from 205 in 2017 to 540 in 2018.

Francisco Rivas, 45, who monitors cartel activity for Mexico's National Citizen Observatory, told The Sun: "Years ago, they agreed there were areas they would not fight in because it is bad for business.

"These were mainly tourist cities.

"The cartels also did not want to draw attention to particular areas that were important highways for transporting drugs from Mexico to the US.

"But now the new cartel members, like those from Jalisco New Generation, don't respect the old rules. Something has changed.

Is Mexico safe for tourists?

Drug-related violence in Mexico has increased massively in recent years with murders now commonplace.

Morgues even closed down in the Mexican state of Guerrero after they were inundated with gangland victims.

Many fatalities are those killed in turf wars between the different gangs competing for trafficking routes into the US.

Cops are trying to protect tourist destinations like Cancun, Playa del Carmen, Cozumel, Los Cabos, Puerto Vallarta, Acapulco and Nuevo Vallarta.

The Foreign Office warns that while the government has made efforts to protect popular tourist destinations, including Playa del Carmen, there has been a number of shooting incidents in the areas.

They advise: "Crime and violence are serious problems in Mexico and the security situation can pose a risk for foreigners.

"Since 2017 there have been a number of reported shooting incidents and other incidents of violence in the main tourist destinations, including in locations popular with tourists.

"In certain parts of Mexico you should take particular care to avoid being caught up in drug related violence between criminal groups."

However, the FCO also says most tourist visits are "trouble-free".

"They attack rivals in urban areas and murders happen in tourist areas."

In January this year, seven were left dead in Cancun when CJNG and a rival gang had a shootout in the streets.

Intel Officer Reveals Obama Could Be â First President In Historyâ To Be Hit With a FELONY INDICTMENT

By Samuel Chamberlain

After months of the liberal media ridiculing Trump over his claim that Obama spied on him during the election, Trump finally got vindication this week. America learned the truth on Tuesday that Obama did in fact unconstitutionally spy on Trump throughout the presidential election, leaving Barack Obama with his pants down yet again.

Now former intelligence officer Lt. Col Tony Shaffer just revealed that Obama's wiretapping was not only a federal crime, but says that the results of this investigation will likely result in Obama being brought up on FELONY CHARGES. The colonel's dire prediction about Obama's future is sending shock-waves through the black hearts of liberals all across America today, as it's now thrown a monkey wrench into Obama's plans to stage his political comeback this fall.

In a recent interview with Trending Today USA, Lt. Col Tony Shaffer called an Obama order of magnitude even bigger than the Watergate scandal because the incident included using nation-state resources for purposes of political gain.

When asked if Obama could be arrested for violating the law, he said that it would be the first time a former president could be indicted for a felony.

"I think it is very possible that he acted outside of the scope of his duties, responsibilities and authorities to turn the resources of a nation-state on a candidate. This is, as I've said before, soviet-dictator level wrongdoing," he added.

Shaffer said that Obama using government resources to spy on Trump was for the sole purpose of getting Hillary into office, as Obama hoped the wiretapping would produce enough dirt on Trump to sabotage his presidential run.

Given Shaffer's lengthy military career, his rise to the top of the American intelligence community, and his current senior position at the prestigious London Center for Policy Research, his prediction about Obama shouldn't be scoffed at. Being brought up on felony charges would completely destroy Obama's plan of making his political comeback this year, as he'd be trying to figure out a way to keep himself out of prison instead of spending his hours obsessing with ways to bring Trump down.

The Hill reported on just how extensive Obama's spying truly was, as this unconstitutional move wasn't just limited to listening in on Trump's calls. They reported:

If these reports are accurate, it means U.S. intelligence agencies secretly surveilled at least a half dozen Trump associates. And those are just the ones we know about.

Besides Manafort, the officials include former Trump advisers Carter Page and Michael Flynn. Last week, we discovered multiple Trump transition officials were incidentally captured during government surveillance of a foreign official. We know this because former Obama adviser Susan Rice reportedly admitted unmasking, or asking to know the identities of, the officials. Spying on U.S. citizens is considered so sensitive, their names are supposed to be hidden or masked, even inside the government, to protect their privacy.

In May, former Director of National Intelligence James Clapper and former Acting Attorney General Sally

Yates acknowledged they, too, reviewed communications of political figures, secretly collected under President Obama.

After getting away with whatever the hell he wanted over the past 8 years and wiping his butt with the Constitution, it looks like Obama's cockiness might just be his undoing. He might have gotten away with his antics in the past, but things are vastly different now that Obama doesn't have all his minions blocking all investigations into his crimes, as was the case when he was president.

If this colonel's predication is in fact true, Obama's little plan to keep trolling Trump with his little shadow government from the headquarters of his D.C. home could soon be coming to an abrupt end. How poetic would it be that after spending 8 years pandering to terrorists and trying to destroy America that Obama could live out the rest of his life behind bars in an orange jumpsuit? Sounds like perfect justice for America!

Investigators Zero In On John Brennan's Role In Steele Dossier As Ex-Secret Service Agent Warns Obama CIA Chief Is In a World of Trouble

A new report by the Daily Caller says House investigators have begun to zero in on former CIA chief John Brennan's role in the anti-Trump dossier authored by ex-British spy agent Christopher Steele.

Daily Caller reports:

A book published in March offered a startling but little-noticed revelation about former CIA Director John Brennan. According to Russian Roulette, Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid believed Brennan was using him as a conduit to publicize possible links between Trump campaign associates and the Russian government.

Brennan's contacts with Reid and other activities during the 2016 presidential campaign are of significant interest to congressional investigators trying to figure out the ex-spy's early role in the Russia investigation, The Daily Caller News Foundation is told.

By his own account, Brennan played a prominent role in starting the investigation of Trump's team, a congressional source with direct knowledge of the House of Representatives' Russia investigations tells TheDCNF.

Investigators in Congress suspect there are important details about his role that he hasn't revealed, and we're trying to get to the bottom of it.

Former Secret Service agent Dan Bongino has warned Brennan is in a world of trouble right now, over his testimony on the dubious Steele dossier.

Newsmax reports:

My sources on this are telling me John Brennan is in a world of trouble right now, Bongino told Fox News Fox & Friends program.

Back in August of 2016 he gives a private briefing to Sen. Harry Reid, Democrat, of course. He gives that briefing to Reid. Reid fires off a letter to the FBI. In that letter is information that clearly came from the dossier.

That means that at that point, Brennan was aware of the dossier, but in May of 2017, under oath, he denied knowing who commissioned it, said Bongino, a frequent Fox News commentator and owner of The Dan Bongino Show podcast.

The CIA has a central role in the verification of foreign assets and information we get from foreign assets, Bongino said. It is not plausibly deniable that John Brennan did not know who commissioned that dossier he is in a world of trouble because he raised his right hand and he said the exact opposite.

As The Gateway Pundit's Joe Hoft reported, the former Obama CIA Director previously stated on Meet the Press that he believes that House Intelligence Committee Chairman Nunes abused his office by releasing the FISA memo on Friday. Brennan also said that the dossier did not play any role whatsoever in early intelligence assessments.

Is Obama A Racist Who Actually Fears Black People?

By Sasheena Mbuna

Barack Obama surrounds himself with â Black Peopleâ who have white facial features. Susan Rice, Valarie Jarrett, et al; have no black facial features. They dress and talk like suburban white yuppies. They look like white people with too much tanning spray on.

The Obama girls prefer white boys, use white boy gestures and attend white-culture bands. Do the children reflect the parents?

Obamaâ s â black friendsâ are the whitest black friends you could have.

Obama seems to fear or hate core blacks.

During his entire administration he did nothing that actually helped the blacks. His legacy is one of photo opps in ghettos and ghettos of legislative inaction for blacks, otherwise.

He is now thought of as the â President who made black lives worseâ .

Why was Obama such a dilettante and anti-black OREO?

It could be his upbringing and his lack of a central force of balance in his life. It could be his backing by the all-white Chicago mob that brought us the Dalyâ s and the Rahms. It could be he is just simply a Prick.

Obama was clearly a tool who allowed Debbie Wasserman and Donna Brazille to use him to rig an elaborate set of crony government payola schemes for their friends. He bought into his role, as a puppet-king, because the DNC allowed him to have all of the toys and they allowed his family to go on mind-numbing shopping sprees around the world.

Obamaâ s connection to the black community was nothing more than a tip of the hat. He seems to see black people as an embarrassment to his narcissism. He will give them a nod but he will never actually embed in their â nastyâ culture with sincerity. All of his acts with black people were acts of the theatrical kind.

Obama loved the cash. Once he knew he had his hand on it, he could never let go of the green. It is too bad that he gave up his blackness for his green-ness.

Is the Nancy Pelosi era coming to a close? Most Democrats running for the House oppose her and her corruption

A trend may have caught fire following Conor Lamb's razor-thin win in a special election in Pennsylvania this March

CLARRIE FEINSTEIN

The number of Democratic candidates on the campaign trail hoping to be elected to the House of Representatives in this November's midterm elections who openly oppose Nancy Pelosi's desire to wield the speaker's gavel once again has multiplied to at least 20.

It turns out that a trend may have caught fire following Conor Lamb's razor-thin win in a special election in Pennsylvania this March, and the nerves of the minority leader's allies are rattled, according to a new report from Politico.

This begs the question: Could the California Democrat now face the toughest test of her grip on power since becoming a household name some 15 years ago?

If Democrats do win back control of the People's House on Election Day, the potentially narrow margin would give Pelosi almost no room for mistake as she lobbies for the 218 votes needed to win a floor vote, Politico reports. And Pelosi could face resistance from a fresh crop of Democrats, who have said on record they would oppose her as they call for new leadership.

Max Rose, who is running for a House seat in New York state, is one of the party hopefuls who has spoken out against Pelosi.

"If the Democratic Party is going to earn back the trust of the American people, then we need to show them that we are serious about changing our politics — and that means we need a change in leadership," he said in a statement to Politico.

In contrast, Arkansas' Clarke Tucker is blasting his opposition across the airwaves: "I've said from Day One that I won't vote for Nancy Pelosi."

Pelosi told the Boston Globe in May that she has her sights set on a return to the speakership.

"We will win. I will run for speaker," she said. "I feel confident about it."

And Pelosi's allies acknowledge that the two-vote system employed by the Democratic caucus works in the minority leader's favor. Politico elaborates:

If Democrats win the House, she would first need to win a secret ballot vote within the Democratic Caucus, but only by a simple majority — a much easier hurdle than securing 218 votes on the House floor.

Pelosi's supporters predict she would easily win the caucus vote, especially if no one credible steps forward to challenge her, paving the way for most Democrats to publicly support her in a floor vote. (All Republicans undoubtedly would oppose her, so Pelosi would need the overwhelming majority of Democrats to put her over the top.)

However, some may not be quick to forget the events of November 2016, when nearly one-third of Pelosi's Democratic colleagues in the House opposed her campaign to remain leader.

It is also no secret that Pelosi has long been vilified by Republicans — you can look all the way back to her first appointment to her party's leadership ranks. And it seems things have not changed much since 2003, according to Politico:

Pelosi is one of the biggest — if not the biggest — drag on Democrats running for the House, according to some Democratic pollsters. Republicans have happily exploited that weakness, raining down Pelosi-themed TV ads on special election candidates in Georgia, Montana and Pennsylvania.

— With very few exceptions, the biggest hurdle, the biggest vulnerability for Democratic candidates is Nancy Pelosi, and the strongest card the Republicans can play is attaching a candidate to Pelosi, — said a Democratic pollster, who works with some House candidates who have disavowed Pelosi. The pollster, who was granted anonymity to discuss internal strategy, added: — Most of this is about mitigating and diluting the effectiveness of that attack. —

In fact, in the race for control of the House, more than one-third of Republican commercials have taken aim at Pelosi. This 2018 figure is a sharp increase from 13 percent in the 2014 midterm cycle, according to USA Today.

The amount of vitriol is eerily similar to another well-known politician, former Democratic presidential candidate Hilary Clinton. And the root of the origins may be one in the same.

In April, an article from The New Republic took a closer look at the Republican Party's "desperate obsession" with Pelosi:

The relentless demonization of Pelosi, who has reached the highest office of any female politician in American history, is partly fueled by — and an appeal to — sexism. — I think they need to get a new game book, — Representative Joseph Crowley, chairman of the House Democratic Caucus, said last month of Republicans. — The attempts to use Nancy Pelosi, it — s failing them at this point. And I think, quite frankly, it — s sexist. —

But Republicans — animosity toward Pelosi is also certainly driven by fear: As both the minority leader (from 2003-2007 and 2011-present) and House speaker (from 2007-2011), she has been an accomplished and indomitable captain of House Democrats.

That same month, The Atlantic also tried to solve the — Pelosi problem." Peter Beinart wrote:

In addition to being a masterful legislative tactician, the 77-year-old Pelosi is, in Politico's words, — the most successful non-presidential political fundraiser in U.S. history — . . . Another coup attempt erupted last summer. Why so much discontent with a woman who has proved so good at her job? Maybe because many Democrats think Pelosi — s unpopularity undermines their chances of winning back the House. Why is she so unpopular? Because powerful women politicians usually are. Therein lies the tragedy. Nancy Pelosi does her job about as well as anyone could. But because sheâs a woman, she may not be doing it well enough.

But, for now, all eyes will be on Pelosi's first hurdle to victory â helping Democrats squeak out that narrow victory in November. FiveThirtyEight's most-recent estimate of the race for Congress shows that Democrats have a slight national average over Republicans â 46.9 to 40.7 percent.

It looks like Nancy Pelosi wants to run the House the same way Jack Dorsey runs Twitter. Simply block or ban anyone you don't agree with.

It appears as though the tactics of popular social media companies have started to rub off on Nancy Pelosi.

After originally agreeing to allow the State of the Union Address, Pelosi recently said she would not invite or allow the President into the House chambers to deliver the speech. Her reason was the government shutdown, but the real reason is obviously to deny Trump a chance to deliver his message on border security directly to the American people.

This is just one more example in the Progressive's far-left playbook and it shows they aren't interested in any sort of debate or true negotiations. Their whole playbook is to simply shut down any opposing viewpoints. No discussion, no debate, just shut down, ban, or censor.

Click here to shop for this t-shirt design and help support our content.

We've all seen social media sites like Twitter shadow-banning conservative users for no reason while allowing prominent blue-checkmark Progressives to make death threats towards the Covington High teenagers. But now Pelosi and the Democrats have gone so far as to block the President from delivering the State of the Union Address.

The irony is that our current national situation is exactly the reason to have a State of the Union Address. The point of the address is to focus on the state of government and the country. It's pretty clear we have big issues facing the country and the government right now, and a State of the Union Address is meant to inform the public of how the current administration is going to handle those issues.

There is virtually no better time to have a State of the Union than during a time like this. People want to hear what is going on and what the solutions are.

But Pelosi, in her knee-jerk reaction has decided that Americans don't have a right to hear their leadership explain how they plan to solve the issues facing the nation. Instead, she wants to silence all opposition in the hopes that she can hide the fact that she is refusing to deal with Trump and has lost control of her own party to the far-left minority now making the most noise.

Just yesterday I wrote about how Democrats were making a huge blunder by not even putting forward a counter-offer to Trump's recent deal to end the government shutdown. And while reports are saying Pelosi and the Democrats are going to make an offer of $5 Billion in border funding, but with no wall, this recent move to block the State of the Union Address is just as wrongheaded as her refusal to make a timely counter-offer.

Although she may deny Trump his chance to deliver his message during the State of the Union Address, she sets up her party and herself as the side that is being unreasonable and unwilling to make a compromise.

The truth is, the wall already exists in certain parts of the border. So as Trump has said, if Pelosi thinks it is so immoral to have a wall, why isn't she calling for it to be torn down? The reason is because the talk of morality has nothing to do with a wall, the Democrats simply want to block one of Trump's campaign promises.

And this is really what Pelosi's tactics are all about. She knows that what happens in the next few weeks sets the table for the 2020 election. And from her extreme actions such as canceling the State of the Union Address, it appears as though she believes that if Trump gets his wall, he also wins in 2020 so she's willing to try anything to block it.

Beck Dorey-Stein was 25 years old and working five part-time jobs when she serendipitously answered an ad on Craigslist for a stenographer.

Two interviews later, she was offered a job in Barack Obama's White House in 2012.

She went from feeling alone in the world to joining a pool of 13 reporters from the White House press corps, traveling with the president and tracking his every move.

Her assignment - with mic in hand - was to record everything the president said, type it up, and release the transcript to the press office and presidential archive.

She also made copious notes on the details of her personal life while traveling to more than 60 countries over five years on Air Force One, and witnessing Obama's life in midair.

'Traveling with the president is like summer camp on steroids â a week on the road is like a year at home', Dorey-Stein writes in her new memoir, From the Corner of the Oval, published by Spiegel & Grau on July 10, 2018.

Her new job would give her insight into the obscure party culture within the press pool, a glimpse of the president's personal life, and would even land her in a love affair with a White House staffer.

She worked out on a treadmill next to the president, who often 'trash-talked' her, goaded her to run faster, and taught her to be optimistic.

Beck saw how Obama coped with stress and grief over 60 foreign trips, cracked his Nicorette gum to keep from smoking, and on one occasion told stories about how he met Michelle and how she tried to pass him off to one of her friends.

Around the world, she watched a crew of smokers douse themselves in Purell sanitizer up past their wrists after grabbing a smoke so there was no lingering smell of cigarettes for Obama who had quit the habit.

'No one deserves to be this lucky', the author writes about this core group of staffers who flew around the world on Air Force One together.

Beck knew she wasn't a good fit for a job at a Washington think tank, PR firm, or nonprofit after her semester-long tutoring job at Sidwell Friends School - 'the Harvard of Washington's private schools' - ended in 2011.

Beck Dorey-Stein discusses her professional and private affairs while working as Obama's stenographer in From the Corner of the Oval

The selective Quaker school in Washington has educated a lengthy roster of notable alumni from Teddy Roosevelt's son, Richard Nixon's daughter, Al Gore's son, Chelsea Clinton, and the Obama girls, Malia and Sasha, as well as the children of members of Congress.

Beck intended to only live in D.C. for the duration of the job â three months...'because who wants to live in DC? â A one trick political pony town,' she writes.

'My job in the spring of 2011 was to help those hormonally-charged stressballs chill the fk out', Beck writes while casting an eye to what looked like 'human Ken dolls in a short-sleeved button-down'.

Sitting across from one of them at the school one day flirting and thinking he was a teacher, the man told her he was working although he did not seem to be doing anything.

He was a Secret Service agent watching Malia.

In her new job assignment, Beck was advised by the hiring agency to stay away from the Secret Service agents as well as 'stay with your boyfriend'.

She knew this was going to be her big break and felt confident leaving her boyfriend, Sam, back in Washington working for a PR firm writing speeches for gubernatorial candidates.

He was always encouraged her and supported her taking the job that would separate them.

But Beck broke protocol of the job when she got involved in a hot and heavy secret sexual relationship with one of Obama's senior staffers in hotel rooms - and fell in love.

Left with a broken heart and feeling duplicitous with too many nights at a bar getting drunk, she says the stolen thrill was worth the heartache although it cost her the relationship with her boyfriend in D.C.

Boarding Air Force One for the first time with an overstuffed duffel because she didn't know what not to pack, she thought she saw actor Jim Carrey sitting near the front of the plane.

He turned out to be the man she fell hopelessly in love with, Jason Wolf - the man she left her hotel room door ajar for in foreign cities.

Air Force One has everything one could ask for in comfort â endless entrees, snacks, cocktails â except while on the luxury airliner, everyone paid for food and drinks.

Rushing to unpack the first time in search of her steno gear and dumping out her computer bags on the seat next to her, out fell what looked like a vibrator â while one of Obama's traveling aides was standing there.

Red-faced, he hurried away.

It was only a little travel-sized hot pink silk bag that resembled a vibrator â she wanted to tell him but didn't.

Obama's traveling staff was almost all women and dubbed 'the Vagiants'.

This wasn't the case when he first took office in 2009 when there were few female senior staffers. Now it was the choice of the women to give themselves that name.

'Prudish? I would especially love it if the men in the West Wing nicknamed themselves the 10-Inch Senior Staffs', she writes.

Beck was one of three stenographers rotating on the travel schedule.

On international trips, media chipped in and chartered a private plane dubbed the 'party plane.'
